MONDAY morning, April 10, four thousand men left their work on the World's Fair grounds. Consultation between them and their employers settled the difficulty and the strikers returned to their work the next morning. It is well to note such hopeful signs in the midst of much that is discouraging in the labor problem. This much we can feel is assured. Our republican faith in the ultimate benefits of free discussion has been confirmed by the results thus far. In the beginnings of any such agitation, it often seems that the only outcome is distress and ruin. Violent things are said and done, still more violent things are threatened; but as the agitation goes on, the cooler, better judgment of the best element gains the ascendency and in the end "the sword" of progress brings peace. Thus it will surely be in the troubles between capital and labor. While laborers have very serious grievances, the wrong has not all been upon one side. Uncalled-for strikes have undoubtedly been precipitated and inexcusable violence resorted to in more than one instance; but the laborers have learned by experience that such methods will only injure their cause. Laborers are not anxious to be out of employment for weeks and months while their families suffer for the necessaries of life, and the events of the past few years have done much to teach them not to inaugurate a strike without first being very sure that they have real grievances and that no other method will redress them. In conflicts of all kinds in which personal animosity is excited, the trouble is often wholly or in part due to a misunderstanding, as was the case in this strike at the Fair grounds. The laborers have learned a valuable lesson if they have learned to believe nothing that they hear concerning their opponents, except what they learn directly from those opponents themselves. We believe the day of strikes and lockouts is near its close and that they will be superseded by arbitration.

THE CHAMBER OF PEACE.

BY DWIGHT WILLIAMS.

I find it by a narrow stair,
And oft I enter there,
A cleft of that dear Rock of song
Which followed Israel long—
Through desert bare.

A little sanctuary found,
And walled with strength around;
And there I find a sweet divide
From all the world outside
Of sight or sound.

A little table spread, my King
Himself the door doth swing,
And condescends to be my guest.
With purple clusters pressed
Which He doth bring.

The chamber of my peace is He;
And where my path may be,
If I but lift to Him my prayer
He canopies the air
With rest for me.

SOME NEW IRONCLADS NEEDED.

BY JONATHAN HAYSEEDS, C. E.

I was readin' the Hardpan County Spread Eagle the other evenin' promiscuous when I happened tew light on a piece that the editor, Napoleon P. Bunkum, had edited into his paper by snippin' an' pastin' from what Jerushy calls the Associated Wine-press dispatches of some other paper, 'bout testin' armor plates for the new ironclads Uncle Sam is buildin' for tew pertect the sea-coasts of this nation from furrin foes.

I was powerful pleased the way that there armor plate was reported by the reportin' an' dispatchin' of the Associated Wine-press; two of them flattened out them there steel cannon balls like a soft paper wad throwed against the skewl-house wall; an' pursooantly, I got tew chucklin' over it in mirthful axents, thinkin' how fooled them furrin foes would be if they was tew git tew belchin' their shot an' shells at one of Uncle Sam's bran new ironclads, dressed up in that there armor plate, so tough that nothin' could faze it, an' see that they mought as well hev belched wind—and I had tew chuckle right out loud over it. I did, forsooth.

Jerushy, my better half, was a-sittin' by a-knittin' a pair of double-heeled and toed all sheep's wool sox for my wearin' next winter. She looks up from her knittin' needles, which were a-jumpin' acrost one another an' a-flashin' lettle flashes of glimmer like as if they was full of lightnin', she was a-makin' them fly that fast. And sez she tew me:

"What be you a-readin' now, I'd like tew know? Some more of them there silly joax that the editor edits into his paper from the almanac by snippin' and pastin', I'll be bound."

Sez I, "Jerushy, don't go tew bein' rash an' oncharitable in your jedgin'. An' if you can't help jedgin', which is against the Scripter, don't jedge any more unjuster than you have tew."

Jerushy she looks up at me, calm as a cowcumber, an' sez she tew me: "Jonathan, if you have tew be a dunce, don't be no more of a dunce than you can help. Tell me what you are a-readin'."

Then I explained tew her. An' I jist had tew rub my hands when I got through, an' chuckle another one of them there mirthful chuckles of mine, an sez I fluent: "I vow it won't be any use for any furrin foe tew come a-galavantin' 'round Uncle Sam's shores, for if they do there'll be Uncle Sam's ironclads ready tew tell 'em tew halt. An' he'll shoot 'em with thunderin' big guns an' pointed steel shot that'll go right through their ironclads like hailstones through a cornfield. But when they git tew shootin' back at Uncle Sam's ironclads, the thunderin'est guns they have an' the sharpest pointed steel balls won't never faze Uncle Sam's ironclads, no more'n a flea a-bumpin' his head against a winder glass. I vum they won't."

Jist as I had finished speakin' fluent, pursooantly Jerushy give her head a tost an' turned up her nose, which she needn't tew have done bein's she was a Hoskins before I married her, an' sez she tew me, scornful:

"Shucks! Mebbe it's all right tew build them there kind of ironclads, though, so's tew be good an' ready; but there's another kind of ironclads that's a-needin' a heap worse jist now."

"What kind be you a-meanin?" sez I to my better half.

"Why," sez she, "if you wouldn't read your paper so promiscuous, you'd a-found out before this. There's Si Persimmon, over on the aige of Pertater Bottom, that was shot day before yesterday by a couple of drunk fellers he was a-tryin' to keep apart from fightin'."

"The land sakes!" sez I. "You don't say so."

"Yes," says she, "that is, the paper says so; the editor, Napoleon P. Bunkum, the same man that edited a piece 'bout the ironclads by snippin' and pastin' from the Associated Wine-press dispatches in the other papers. I 'lowed you'd say 'for the water sakes,' though."

"Why, forsooth?" sez I.

"Cause you're goin' on so 'bout them ironclads defendin' us agin furrin foes on the water. Has Great Britain, or Chilly, or Italy, or Mexico, or Germany killed ary man of Uncle Sam's yet?"

"Why, no," sez I, "not as I'm beknownst of, 'cept it was Chilly, an' they had tew pay for 'em right away."

"Eggsacktly," sez Jerushy a-givin' her head another tost an' turnin' up her nose which she needn't a-minded doin'. "But here's a foe right into our midst that has killed one man that belongs to Uncle Sam tew pertect jist as much as them sailors of his'n that was killed in Chilly. Whose a-goin' tew be made tew pay for Si Persimmons, or when'll any of Uncle Sam's ironclads be down this way tew bullyrag this here enemy, so's't he won't dasst tew kill any more of Uncle Sam's citizens?"

"What enemy be you alludin' tew?" sez I.

"Why," sez my better half, sez she, "whisky, of course. Wa'n't that what killed Si Persimmons?"

"I 'low it was," sez I, "an' I'm as much ag'in whisky as anybody. But how in the nation could an ironclad hev kep whisky from bein' the cause of Si Persimmons gittin' shot?"

"Not the kind of ironclads you've been a-readin' 'bout," sez Jerushy. "We want a new kind of ironclads," sez Jerushy. "Ironclads tew defend us ag'in the deadliest foe the nation has, that ain't a-threatenin' war only, but is a-carryin' it on day an' night; an' this, too, in almost every town an' village in the hull country."

"Why," sez I, "ain't we got somethin' tew defend us against that there? We've got laws, I guess, an' constables an' courts an' state prisons. An' if men don't keep the law the civil authorities can attend to 'em without any armies or navies."

"Then, I wish you'd jist tell me," sez my better half, "why the law don't close up that there whisky shop down tew Pertater Bottom, that's a-doin' so much mischief an' was the cause of Si Persimmons gittin' killed?"

"Why," sez I, "the grand jury did bring an indictment ag'in Bob Ginn for keepin' sech a place. That there is the defense of the country ag'in that there kind of a foe."

"Yes," sez Jerushy, "but that there indictment wa'n't ironclad, or if it was, it wa'n't the kind of armor plate that you was a-readin' 'bout in the paper. What became of it in the court, I'd like to know? Why, Bob Ginn's lawyer got up an' fired a shot at it, an' the jedge declared it was squashed, an' that was the end of it. Bob Ginn went away grinnin' over that there squash more'n you ever did over the biggest one you ever tuck to the county fair, though they do say it cost him a hundred dollars; an' it has been reported by the reportin' of some ten or eleven reporters that Rufus Shoat Blackstun Redtape, the prosecutin' attorney, got a twenty dollar slice of that there one hundred dollars for drawin' up the indictment so's't it could be squashed. What's the ust tew have defenses that ain't ironclad; or if they be, that the iron on 'em is so soft an' squashin' like that any snipe of a lawyer can jist poke his wits right through it, an' they soft 'nuff for buckwheat batter? What's the ust tew be a-defendin' the sea coast ag'in the furrin foe, that like as not won't never swoop down upon us, with ironclads dressed in armor plate that no steel-pointed ball can't punctuate, an' defendin' the land coasts of the nation, where a foe has swooped down an' is a-killin' men already, with defenses that ain't no better than a boy's snow fort?"

An' Jerushy give her head another tost an' turned up her nose, jist as if she had asked a question that was goin' tew be purty tough to wrestle with in the way of answerin'. An' I vum it was.

Seein' that I wa'n't makin' any motion toward answerin', Jerushy commenced ag'in. "That there ain't the only place where we're a-needin' a new kind of ironclads. I was a-readin' somethin' in the paper t'other day, that wa'n't edited like Napoleon P. Bunkum's is by snippin' an' pastin' from Associated Wine-press dispatches in other papers of the same kind, but finds out the truth and tells it whether any other papers tell it or not. An' in that paper it told 'bout some jedge—where the people had gone and voted that there shouldn't be no saloons nor whisky made or sold in the state—that had decided that there kind of defense wa'n't worth a pile of rotten logs, an' had fired a shot into it from off the bench that made a hole big 'nuff tew let all the railroad companies a-comin into that state from other states, ship all the beer an' whisky, an' intoxicatin' drinks they wanted to; an' the state couldn't stop 'em, no more'n a rabbit, provided it was sold and drunk in original packages."

I didn't say nothin' very fluent after them there tountin' an' ironikal remarks of Jerushy's 'bout the country needin' a new kind of ironclads. I jist remarked, "Ahem!" tew sort of clear my throat. But I got tew thinkin' tew myself, an' the more I thought 'bout it, the more it 'peared tew me that my better half was right. An' that while it might be good 'nuff to put three or four million dollars apiece into a lot of ironclads with armor plate, that the sharpest pointed steel balls couldn't faze, tew defend the sea-coast of the nation, we was a-needin' rale bad some different kind of ironclads that could defend the people on the land coast of the nation from a foe that was already in an' a-doin' its deadly work every hour an' minute of the day. I kep' a-thinkin' 'bout it all the time I was a-doin' up the chores 'round the barn that evenin', an' whilst I was a-drawin' off my boots a-gettin' ready tew go to bed, an' while I was a-tuckin' myself under the kivers, I was still a-thinkin' of that there new kind of ironclads, an' tryin' to conjure up what in Sam Hill it would be like.

After I got tew sleep that night, I had one of the quarest dreams that I ever knowed a man tew have. I dreamed that I see a lot of fellers with blue coats an' caps, like they mought hev been from Uncle Sam's navy, out in my south paster lot. They had a piece of somethin' square tacked onto a tree, but when I come tew look at it clost, from behind the tree, where I had hid myself tew peek out tew see whether they was for war or for peace, it wa'n't nothin' but a piece of paper; an' off, a leetle risin' of a hundred rods, they was a-loadin' big guns an' gittin' ready tew fire at that there mark.

Purty soon the gun went off with a bang that must have rattled the winders in all the houses for a mile 'round. An' sech quar things as did come out of the muzzle of that there gun an' go pell-mell through the air a-drivin' ag'in that there paper like a flock of dux ag'in a lighthouse winder! The first shot looked like a man flyin' head foremost. An' I swan to guinea, when I come tew examine the linaments of his features, if it war'n't Rufus Shoat Blackstun Redtape, the prosecutin' attorney. He went kerthump ag'in that there piece of paper, an' I 'lowed tew see his brains butted out ag'in the tree an' the paper ground tew fragments. But when he struck the tree, he jist collapsed like a bag of wind. An' all I ever see of him ag'in was a leetle pinched up piece of skin a-bouncin' back from the tree, follered by four or five law books that he had had in his coat tail pockets; an' there stood the paper as firm an' as sound as though it had never been fired at.

Whilst they was a-loadin' the gun, I crep' up to spy into the thing. When I got near 'nuff tew see what it was, it wa'n't nothin' under the sun but the law that the legislature had made ag'in sellin' whisky without a license, or sellin' tew anybody under age, or a-sellin' it to a drunken man, or sellin' it after twelve o'clock at night, or on Sunday, or a holiday, or on election day. An' underneath it, on the same paper, was an indictment ag'in every whisky seller in Hardpan county; for every one of 'em, it 'peared, had broke the law in some way, shape or form.

I scooted back an' watched 'em till they had fired the gun as much as a dozen times at that there paper. Every time they fired a lawyer, an' sometimes, jist for a change, they would ram in a hull passel of 'em tew onct with three or four law libraries into the bargain; but every time that there paper come out unfazed.

Onct they loaded the gun with bribes, an' a jedge with a red nose an' two or three jurors with bulges on the sides of their coats like there was bottles in their pockets, but it didn't do 'em a mite of good. That there law an' them there indictments 'peared tew be the toughest kind of ironclads, that no shot couldn't faze 'em.

By an' by, when they'd give up a-tryin' tew crack it or punch a hole through it, one of the men with a blue coat an' cap come an' tuck it down off the tree, an' handed it tew another man, a-tackin' up another one in its place.

"Here," sez he, "that armor plate is all right. I'll give you a certificate that it's stood the test, an' it's tew be shipped right away tew where it was made, an' three million square feet of it made tew fill a contract with Uncle Sam tew be nailed onto the land coast defenses of this country ag'in the inside foes. Tell 'em tew hurry up an' fill their contract, 'cause there is great need of it in all them states that ain't got anything better."

Whilst he was a-sayin' this, an' a-tackin' up the other piece of paper, the other blue-coated men with blue caps on was a-gittin' ready tew shoot ag'in, an' I dodged behind the tree an' waited tew see what was a-goin' tew come out of it. They loaded up a bigger gun this time, an' when they teched her off it 'peared like as if the shot was a man with a long, black gown on. He went a-scootin' through the air like a comick an' butted his head ag'in that there tree, kerthrash like a runaway hoss a-jumpin' into the front of a crockery store.

It flattened him out like a pancake, an' he lay there a-writhin' on the grass like a tumblebug that a two-hundred pound man had stepped on. I hurried over tew spy what it was, an' I see a piece of paper a-stickin' out of his coat-tail pocket a-readin' "Supreme Court Decisions." An' I swan to guinea, if the man didn't look 'bout as flat as the paper an' the decisions looked 'bout as thick as the man! But that there sheet of paper tacked onto the tree wa'n't fazed a mite. Every dot was over the i's an' every cross on the t's.

Then they wheeled out a bigger gun an' loaded it up heavier than ever, an' I scooted back an' got behind the biggest tree in the lot, for fear they was a-goin' tew bust the piece, an' I was wonderin' what was goin' tew become of my stock an' fences an' my widder, if I was tew be killed. When they fired the shot it didn't 'pear tew be one solid shot, but more like a flock of blackbirds. The air was jist full of 'em, only they wa'n't blackbirds nuther, but men shootin' like greased lightnin' toward that there piece of paper on that tree. An' it 'peared tew me as I looked at 'em that I knowed some of their faces, or I had seen 'em somewhere in the newspapers, an' I began to git scared for fear some of my friends an' relations might be in that crowd, and hurried back tew one of the men in blue coat an' cap that was a-loadin' an' firin' the gun, an' pullin' him by the skirt of his coat, sez:

"Mister, for the land's sakes! what was that there last shot you fired?"

"Why," sez he, "that there is the Republican party. You see they're all standin' on a board. That there is the 're-submission plank' in the party platform, an' we're firin' it as a test shot at that there statuatory Prohighbishun piece of armor plate, 'tew see if the land coast defenses of the people from inside foes are strong 'nuff tew be trusted. An' if this here shot don't knock a hole in it or crack it we will certify to Uncle Sam, an' he'll order a lot more of this here kind of armor plate for other states that want it."

So I stood an' watched while that there shot went hum. I didn't 'low ever tew see root or branch of that there tree ag'in, let alone the piece of paper. But when that shot struck it like a swarm of locusts ag'in the side of a barn, I swan tew guinea, if the ground under the tree wa'n't strewed thick with corpses. That there "re-submission plank" that they stood up on was knocked into splinters fine 'nuff for tooth-picks—but the tree nor the piece of paper on the tree wa'n't fazed nor scratched.

An' when I stepped up an' commenced tew read that there paper, I found it was the Prohighbishun law that the legislature had passed. Then the head man in the blue coat an' cap says tew one of the others, sez he:

"I will certify that this armor plate is all right. I think we have got somethin' that is invulnerable."

Then all the other fellers tuck off their blue caps an' threw 'em up in the air an' hoorayed. An', I vum, I did tew, but stid of my cap I throwed up the bed kivers an' waked up.

I was put out powerful that I hadn't had time tew ask one of them fellers what the secret of that there land coast defense armor plate was; but when I mentioned it tew Jerushy regretful, she up an' sez:

"Shucks, Jonathan! that ain't no secret. It's nothin' but sure 'nough temperance backbone they put into it."

COLUMBIAN CRUMBS.

BY B. V. CUSHMAN, M. D.

What plums shall I pluck for my readers from the rich loaf of Columbian news this week? is the perplexing question before me. How shall I coax space from the crowded columns of THE UNION SIGNAL to give a glimpse of the ravishing beauties coming forth from their chrysalis packing boxes to deck Jackson Park as no spot on earth was ever bedecked before? I want to tell you of the many things, "too sweet for any use," that delight our eyes and hearts—else were we not women. I want to describe the cunning little soup plate of Chinese design, in blue and gold, invoiced at sixty dollars, and the one hundred and twenty dollar platter that no one would ever want to serve a sirloin on, or do anything with but select a bracket to support it at the most sightly point in the dining-room. Some day I shall suppress all other news, if necessary, in order to tell you about the wonderful china stoves from Holland.

After this letter the great Exposition will be a present reality instead of a charming prospect. All who can come will be here to see for themselves. But I am to be eyes for the great host of ministering angels, who for reasons innumerable are unable to leave their charges, and I am going to see for them what they would choose to see for themselves, if I can guess their choice aright.

The material exhibits, attractive as they are sure to prove, will be rivaled by the great convocations in which the intellectual progress and status of the age will be measured. A system of

is a new feature of International Exposition. Perhaps there is no greater evidence of progress than the fact that the Woman's Congress leads in these world gatherings. Faire place aux dames might be anticipated in a movement presided over by gallant Judge Bonney. The choicest date of the entire season—June 5 to 12—will be given to temperance organizations. All divisions of the cold water army, without distinction of sex or sect, are invited to delegate their most gifted and persuasive to set forth their respective methods. Vegetarian societies will give their ideas of diet and its bearing upon temperance reform.

It will be followed by the closely allied department of moral and social reform. The subjects treated here cover great scope, including the care of neglected, abandoned and dependent children; the care of juvenile delinquents; the public treatment of pauperism; the hospital care of the sick, training of nurses, dispensary work, and first aid to the injured; general treatment of the insane; training and development of feeble-minded children; prevention of crime and the punishment and reformation of criminals; preventive work among the poor, and the organization and affiliation of charities in cities, towns and villages. The work of orders and associations of all kinds whose object is the amelioration of social conditions, will be considered. Among them are the Salvation Army, the King's Daughters, and Humane societies. The sessions of these two departments will be rich in interesting facts and profitable suggestions for all who are trying to make the world a better place to live in. The swelling heart of humanity is no longer content with caring for "God's poor," as is shown by a glance at the topics for discussion. Not only the oppressed of poverty, ignorance and idiocy, but the farthest strayed and deepest lost in vice and crime are subjects of these latter-day vice-shepherd's care. Future students of the history of civilization will find a milestone of philanthropy set at this point. Every effort is made to get brief, pithy presentation of subjects, believing it better in a given hour to have two or three compact papers from as many different leaders, than to have the time occupied by a long discourse from one. The object desired is statement of results, presentation of existing problems, and suggestion of remedies. The debates will not be submitted to the vote of the audience present. The most remarkable and unprecedented scheme is that of arranging a commencing September 11, and continuing seventeen days. Preceding, leading up to and overlapping it will be a consessional series of denominational congresses occupying a hundred of Chicago's largest churches. Almost every sect in the United States has prepared to hold a separate congress, and the grand finalé is to be an ecumenical religious gathering of the representative faiths of the race. Dr. John Henry Barrows, of Chicago, a member of the conservative Presbyterian denomination, is at the head of this gigantic moral enterprise. Associated with him is an advisory council numbering nearly two thousand members, representing not only the gifted of Christendom, but the stars of Buddhism, Shintoism, and followers of Confucius, Zoroaster and Mohammed. It is remarkable that some of the strongest indorsement of the parliament has come from men whose lives have been spent in trying to introduce Christianity to the very "heathen" for whom we are now building a rostrum upon which to exhibit their cults. Rev. T. J. Scott, for years a missionary in India, believes the effort will do much to deepen the spirit of human brotherhood among men of diverse faith, and expresses the opinion that too many religious teachers hold narrow and ungenerous views of God's mercy and providence in dealing with non-Christian peoples. He raises the question of probability that the immense majorities outside Bible lands are wholly without God's grace, and asks: "Can it be that they have had no available dispensation of salvation? Have their great teachers rendered no service to the race? Has their literature and science and philosophy had no mission in the progress of mankind?"

Even more enthusiastic is Rev. James H. Pettee, of Okayama, Japan, who hopes something may really be achieved toward bridging the chasm between Occident and Orient, not merely by a display of courtesies, but by the actual mingling of fundamental ideas of the East and the West. He says: "In my thought there is a mutual lesson to be learned. The West with all her wonderful progress has something to learn from the East. In these days of free reign to competition, when business has become war, when the relation between classes and masses are strained to their utmost, when nations would be hermits in coin and commerce—it is time to ask whether the ideals of the practical do not need retouching as well as the practices of the theorists. . . . Certain it is that if the West cannot cope with the East in faith and in reason as well as in works, she must yield the palm. Has the time not come when a truer understanding may be reached between the real and the unreal, the substantial and the trans-substantial? One side seems made of airy nothings, the other when alone is a simple though powerful unit. Together they sum up the countless worth of the world that now is, and the world that is to come. Chicago honors herself and her civilization by attempting the solution of this problem of the ages." This is undoubtedly the all-around view of one who is acquainted with both sides of the world. Let the wise and mighty of conservative Christendom grapple with and solve the problem of joining reflection with action, and human achievement will mount higher than the Brahmin's dream or the Saxon's reach.

Buddhism is to be represented by men of high position and great learning in the lore of the Orient. Among them is a brother of the king of Siam; the noted Japanese writer Ashitsu, whose volumes are counted by the thousand. Hon. Dhadabai Naoroji, who stood for the Liberal interests in a London borough during the administration of Lord Salisbury, and was stigmatized by him as the "black man," represents the Parsees—a people allied to us by their loyalty to total abstinence. It may be recalled that a few years ago a Parsee writer made a strong appeal for the elimination of what is distinctively Christian in the ritual of Good Templary, that being the only drawback to its wide indorsement by Parsees.

Hinduism comes in the person of a hereditary high priest, whose family patent of priesthood bears date of 1299 and is still on record in the Persian language. Shintoism is represented by the president of the Fuji sect, who has now under him 3,000 teachers and 500,000 students. Among Mohammedans will be Mr. Ali, author of that remarkable English work, "The Spirit of Islam"; also Kazi Ismail, of an old and honored family of Bombay, who has done the practical work of preparing an exhaustive volume upon the origin, cure and prevention of cholera.

From Rev. Jon A. Hjattalin of Iceland comes the acceptance of his appointment to the council, and the happy "hope that the great work of the Parliament of Religions will dwell more nearly upon what is really good in all religions, rather than what is the difference between them." Let us say Amen!

GENERAL BOOTH IN ACTION.

BY FRANCES E. WILLARD.

On March 27, 1893, in a Union church, which I suppose means a Congregational in London, spacious and on the amphitheater plan, I first saw and heard the man whom I have long been wont to call the "old war eagle" of the Salvation Army. It was eleven o'clock on a bright spring morning when we entered, and the church was nearly full. A brass band was stationed at the right of the pulpit, and the bonnets of the sisterhood were a marked feature not only on the platform where one of the General's daughters was seated, but throughout the audience, while the Garibaldi shirts of the brotherhood lighted up the scene on every hand. One of the officers, who has a bassoon voice, was singing as we entered, and this was the refrain, "He saves to the uttermost"; his voice was mellow and immense. The General put an arm over the huge shoulders of the singer, and said, "You shan't sing it unless you mean it," upon which the gentle giant smiled, nodded his shaggy head and all the people shouted "Amen!"

Having been escorted to the platform by one of the officers, I had a good opportunity to study the leader. He is, I should think, over six feet in height, and has an "off-hand" manner in the presence of an audience such as he probably used when disporting himself at home with his children in earlier days. He has a remarkably fine large head, well poised; keen, dark brown eyes; an eagle beak like the Duke of Wellington, and a long, gray beard worthy of St. Gerome. He has a fine, delicately made hand with the wedding ring on his finger that reminds one of that great woman—"the mother" of the Salvation Army. In her going the light of this world went out from the life of this great leader, for no two were ever more devotedly attached. He walks up and down the platform, advances with the Bible extended in both hands; pounds the pulpit; thrusts his hands through his abundant dark locks now turning to gray; and gestures with shoulders as well as head and hands. He was talking to the officers who had assembled to celebrate what was announced as a "day with God," which means a day given up to the endeavor to realize more thoroughly the personal relations of the Salvation soldier to the Captain of the salvation of us all.

The General said eagerly: "Some people quarrel with us; they say you can be saved too far according to our plan—further than is contemplated by the plan in the Book, but I suppose we who are here to-day think that we could be a bit gooder than we are; we could be a bit cleaner perhaps and sweeter than we are. The saints are very much like the workingman of the present day—he wants to get all he can out of his employer and I like him all the better for that, but what I want is that we should get all out of God we can, and however often anybody may say that we 'go too far,' still everybody will admit that he may be a little more like Christ in this doomed, dying, half-damned world." (This was uttered with tremendous force and fervor.) "Now I do not ask you to take the uttermost salvation that I desire but take your own. If I could only think that you would set to work to get your 'uttermost,' I would lock the doors of this church and keep you here until you had it." Here he paused a moment, and the band, made up of young men with very bright, pure faces, struck up, and the great audience sang with enkindling earnestness, "To the uttermost He saves."

"I am not very well," resumed the General, "you see I have a cold and cannot talk to you as I should like, but I am hoping for a Turkish or a celestial perspiration! Salvation has put me right many a time when I have been just this way." He then began reading from the Second Epistle of Paul to the Corinthians, seventh chapter. "'Oh, ye Corinthians, [Oh, ye Londoners] our mouth is open unto you, our heart is enlarged. We want you to be bigger, we want you to be better. You are straitened—God is not straitened, but you are straitened in your affections, you are beggars. Oh, my God, make us all beggars for bigger hearts to-day [a loud amen]. If a man wanted to run a race he would not put stones in his pockets, and if you want to spin along the heavenly highway you must not unequally yoke yourselves together with unbelievers. Be among them as Christ was, and separate from them as He was separate, for He was thoroughly in the world and yet He was thoroughly not of the world.

"We can be so if we will only fasten on to the power He had and is pressing forward to bestow. It is easy to be saved from sins you have no mind to—it is easy to be saved from the sins of somebody else. You perhaps don't want to drink, but you want to do something that is just as bad. What does the book say? 'Cleansed from all defilement of flesh and spirit!' But you say, 'That is a very large order.' I admit it; but not one jot or tittle will I abate from the gospel proclamation of our freedom; you can be freed if you will from all sins of the flesh and spirit. If you are not striving for this liberty everybody knows your weakness who sees your life. It is no use for you to go on quoting poetry and getting your children to go and hear somebody preach because you hope that it will do them good. It is no use giving backhanded raps about religion to your children. If you don't live right yourselves you may be sure they are silently saying and seeing for themselves the way you spend your life, and they despise what you are pleased to call religion. What you have to do is to come straight to the altar without waiting to be better and give to God your hard, bitter gooseberry of a heart." At this there was a Salvation Army smile, whereupon the General said: "If we did not laugh in church we should not laugh at all, we Salvationers, for we are always in church, seven hours a day, and seven days a week.

"Now, as I understand it, this is the way you are to do, just like a workingman of my acquaintance. For seventeen weeks he had had no work, and he has a wife and four children to support; he had borrowed from his relations, but they had little to give; he had begged from the Salvation Army, but we had not much money to bestow; he had pawned every article in the house that he could. Behold him! there he sits. What is there in this world more pitiful than to hear the wailing of one's own children who cry for bread? That is the only sound that fills his ears. But, see, the postman enters, bringing a letter. The workingman wonders and says: 'Why will anybody pay a penny for me.' He breaks the seal in haste; he reads—it is from his late master who has just returned from the continent and says: 'Dear Tom:—I hear you have not had work for a long time and I am afraid you are in trouble. I enclose you £5 and if you will come around in a day or so I think I can find you something to do.'

"Look at the workingman. He executes a dance right then and there," and the General imitates this action in a mild manner but wonderfully droll, so that everybody laughs. "£5!" cries the wife. And now the children wonder, for they see nothing but a piece of paper in their father's hand; they see no food, no money; but what does the poor fellow do with that most precious promise? Does he act as the people of God do with the promises of this book? Does he get down the Bible and pin the £5 note to the fly-leaf? Does he send the letter to a preacher? Does he ask a poet to sing him a song about it? No, he is a downright practical fellow. He tells the children to bring a basket and come along. He walks into a bank, holding his head up as if he owns the place. He draws his money and puts aside five shillings to give at the next Barracks Meeting of the Army!" At this everybody laughs and cries: "Amen!" "Having then these promises, dearly beloved, what shall we do with them? for every promise has a condition either implied or declared, and the one we have to-day is expressed in plain words, and I want to be a witness of its truth. I want to stand here as a witness." This he said five times over with constantly increased ardor and great impressiveness. "God never yet discounted a note or dishonored his own paper: He pays full value for them every time. 'Dearly beloved,' let us say to each other," (and the friendly word was echoed throughout the church,) "dearly beloved officers, soldiers, strangers, let us be cleansed this day; let us get rid of that devilish temper; that nagging appetite. Shall we be cleansed one-half, three-fourths, seven-eighths? No, no, that is not what the check in that bank of God calls for. We are to be 'cleansed from all defilement of flesh and spirit, perfecting holiness in the fear of God.'

"Before you were converted you ran after sin; after you were converted sin ran after you. That is a wonderful difference, but it is not a difference as great as we want to see and feel in our own hearts to-day. 'From all filthiness of the flesh,' that means to subordinate all impure appetites to reason and grace. 'From all filthiness of the mind'—that means doing away with malice, envy and pride. Sin is filthy. You may excuse and paint and disguise it as much as you please. You may talk about your temperament and circumstances. Sin is of the devil—it is a curse." This he repeated seven times with constantly enkindled countenance and more powerful emphasis.

"One of the conundrums of the sky is why God should have taken a fancy to us. We wonder at it and we never get over wondering, and at that I do not wonder! Suppose the queen should send word to you or me in our humble homes that she was coming to see us and all she wanted was that the place should be clean. We could not make it look handsome or luxurious, but we could make it clean by putting in plenty of elbow grease and sunlight soap! Now, that is just what God wants with us. He wants a clean habitation when He comes into our hearts. You can make your humble little tenement or garret as clean as Buckingham Palace, and your hearts can be just so, for our blessed Redeemer is clever enough and wise enough and great enough to make something even out of poor fellows like you and like me.

"Now I am going to give you something to do. We will clear the front row and ask you to come to the penitent's form—not because God is any nearer here than He is where you are seated, but because it strengthens your purpose if you once let everybody know that you want more religion. Oh, my God, London is a hard nut; there is no more trying place to work in on the face of the whole earth. I am glad, dearly beloved, that you are not in your coffins; I am glad that you are not cursing in the house of some publican; I am glad you are here in the house of God. No matter what you have been, let the past go." Three times he uttered this. "God comes to you walking over the wall; he comes to you over the mountains of unbelief and the dreary desert of sin." Then the band and the Army struck up:

"Take my poor heart and let it be,
Forever closed to all but Thee."

It was a moving scene, as rough men came forward crying to the altar, women with their little children, girls with worn, wan faces, which told of harder lives than they ought ever to have known. "Thirty-four are in the gospel net!" called out one of the brethren, going down among them to help, and we noticed that men talked with men, women with women; there was no exception to this rule, which seems worthy of imitation in all revival meetings. Among those who superintended this solemn altar service was a grandniece of Sir Fowell Buxton, the anti-slavery reformer, and a cousin of Elizabeth Fry.

"You want white robes," cried out the General. "They are not the fashion now; they're scarce down here; the smoke of London seems to soil them, but they will be the fashion yonder, and God will help us carry them white and clean into the promised land."

It was a scene that recalled the old-time camp-meetings in the far West. It had all their simplicity of heart, earnestness and devotion. Again and again the band led the great assembly as it sang: "He Saves to the Uttermost." The effect was indescribable, and moved to tears eyes not used to weeping; the pure faces of the Salvation women as they knelt beside the hapless, friendless young girls who came forward, the brotherly tones of the men as they knelt beside the horny-handed, hard-faced offenders, who were crying for deliverance; and while they prayed, the General turned to Lady Henry Somerset and me, and showed us a handful of stub pipes already given up by the men, and said: "We get these, and lots of whisky flasks, too, and so we work for temperance."

A cultivated woman handed me these words, hastily written, as she looked on the scene I have described: "In spite of all criticisms, and after all is done and said, I always ask myself, 'What other organization brings the people out of the abysses of sin better than the Salvation Army?' I have seen it in nearly all countries of the world, and it stops my mouth when I hear something said by the Salvationists which may be true or not, for the one thing needful always remains, that the Salvation Army men and women are at it, all at it, and always at it to save the world." She who wrote these lines was Elizabeth Wheeler Andrew, so long one of the editors of THE UNION SIGNAL, a woman beloved in every part of Christendom, and so quiet in her manner, speech and life, that if any one could be repulsed by the pronounced methods of the Army it would be herself.

One thing I know, that this weary scribe went out thence with tearful eyes and a more mellow mind, singing in tones unheard except in heaven:

"Take my poor heart and let it be Forever closed to all but Thee."

Doubtless this did not come to pass, but I drew a hair's-breadth "Nearer, my God, to Thee," because of that strange morning with the old war eagle and his devoted brood.

London, 1st day of Self-denial Week, April 3, 1893.

MY ASCENDED COMRADE, LOIS L. SMITH.

DEAR UNION SIGNAL:—

I have fought a good fight, I have finished my course, I have kept the faith: henceforth there is laid up for me a crown of righteousness, which the Lord, the righteous judge, shall give me at that day; and not to me only, but unto all them also that love his appearing.—2 Timothy 4:7, 8.

In a daily text-book, the first we had seen, arranged with the birthday spaces, I find this record, made by her own dear hand: "Converted December 1, 1853, evening. Reckoned to be dead indeed unto sin. At the school-house at Union Corners, Illinois, Oct. 7, 1866." These dates tell the story of her putting on the armor, and the whole armor of God.

Though naturally unobtrusive and shrinking, she "obtained help from God" at the time of her conversion to take her position among her associates, at school and everywhere, as positively on the Lord's side. She was recognized by her pastors, and Christian people generally as a girl of rare intellectual endowments and sterling principle, and all agreed that she was an accession indeed to the "army of the living God." On account of her superior judgment, she was depended upon oftentimes as the counselor of Christians who were much older than herself. And yet she was by no means independent of their influence which was, in very many things, helpful to her. But she failed to receive the encouragement in her church associations, through the word of God and the facts of Christian experience, that opened her eyes to her privilege to be freed from inbred sin, and "filled with the Holy Spirit."

After she had been eleven years a professed Christian, a newly baptized disciple of the Lord, who had been her guest, sent her "Wesley's Plain Account of Christian Perfection." Of the impression made by this means she testifies in her own quaint way: "When I finished reading it, I felt smaller than the period at the end of the book, because after the strictest sect of our religion I had lived a Methodist Pharisee, and yet through prejudice, had been in complete ignorance of the distinguishing doctrine of my own beloved church." She became at once a bold defender, and an earnest seeker of the precious grace the little book described, obtaining light and help through Bible study, correspondence, etc., until October, '66, when she received the testimony of the Spirit in these words, "Now are ye dead indeed unto sin, but alive unto God through Jesus Christ our Lord." The usually bright face had an unusual illumination, as she now witnessed for Jesus, speaking with the "other tongue," and she went forth to "the battle between the two kingdoms," equipped as never before. When using the weapon of prayer a few days after she received this precious testimony, the Pentecostal power fell upon all assembled and she received then and there her commission as a gospel evangelist.

About the seals of her ministry we shall know much more on the other side of the river. But many recognized in her an able minister of the New Testament, of the Pauline order. A pastor, upon whose charges she labored as an evangelist, says: "It has been but seldom that I have listened to the preaching of divine truth from the lips of an anointed preacher which so moved the congregation. I have seen crowded houses swayed by her words and thrilled by her utterances, as they are moved by few public speakers." One of "our women," of whom she often spoke as being with us, marked for "the tribulation company," writes of her: "Lois was a genuine, faithful, common sense, practical Christian. God gave her great insight into the blessed word, and wondrously helped her to unfold the truth to her hearers."

The one who was privileged in hearing her more frequently than any other, often listened with the mental comment, "An oracle of God." Her place in every reform movement, and especially that carried on by the white ribbon army, was among the advance guard, for she was emphatically progressive in thought and aggressive in method. She not only held a position in the W. C. T. U. from the beginning, but wherever we went as evangelists, she was an inspiration to the union, and sometimes organized a W. C. T. U. at the close of a series of revival services.

Some who have missed Lois from the pulpit and convention platform, and upon inquiry have learned that she was an asthmatic invalid, have supposed she had left the field of contest and had laid down her work. But "if you want a field of labor you can find it anywhere," and without doubt the years of her invalidism will be found to have been among the most fruitful of her whole life. She avoided attracting unnecessary attention to her suffering condition, but was ready to cheer on the workers, who would return to the white fields after an interview with her, with a fresh inspiration. One of the busiest, bravest and most successful of the workers in the church and the W. C. T. U. voices the testimony of many others when she says: "Her life and triumph in her shut-in experience have been a constant blessing. I loved her. I love her. I am a better woman for her, have done better work for our Master because of her."

She was not only generally "full of sweet content," as an invalid, but was often full of holy triumph as well, and would delight to express her faith and joy in the Lord in some of the grand old hymns which were her special delight. Of these, the one beginning, "Peace, doubting heart, my God's I am," etc., was one of her favorites.

Oh, those wearisome nights, struggling for breath, continued for more than nine years! No wonder that sympathizing friends sighed at the thought of them. And yet these were sometimes her chariot in which she went up to the mount of vision. There was something peculiar about the atmosphere of the room which reminded one of the "Holy of Holies." When she recovered sufficient breath to admit of conversation, there was something about the tone of her voice that affected one strangely, and an unusual radiance was seen on the dear face, as she said: "I was just thinking that the Lord had done a great deal more for us during these long years than if He had suddenly healed me, when I first had the asthma, and you and so many people prayed for me to get well. Do you see it?"

And this was but one of the many wonderful talks, the record of one of those "wearisome nights" when "our heart burned within us," because "Jesus himself drew near." In spite of her limitations she was also an active worker. Her fertile brain, her gifted pen, her earnest heart, were on the alert to accomplish her part in "the program of Christianity." She sent to her W. C. T. U. comrades this message: "Tell them I am not willing to be cried over, or counted out." She put herself on record in an article that was being "set up," when the dear hand was growing too weary ever to hold the pen again. She began by referring to her last report as evangelistic superintendent in the Rhode Island W. C. T. U., the closing verse of which is from Whittier's "Adapted":

"While here we stand with planted feet,
Steadfast where loyal souls have stood,
Upon us let the tempest beat,
Around us swell and surge the flood,
We fail or triumph on that spot,
God helping us, we falter not."

She said: "As I read the lines, an impulse seized me to send my next report, if it be no more than to reiterate, I am still standing on that spot of total abstinence and prohibition; prohibition with an executive force—that is, an organized political force behind it. I never had the slightest symptom of non-partisanism about me, and I am intensely now, as ever, interested in all movements and maneuvers of the white ribbon army. . . If it were my privilege to march, I should walk by the same rule of principles, and mind the same things as to ultimate purposes, as formerly. In my present condition, I watch the battle with eager, prayerful interest, and the thoughts I think about the departmental and general work would make a big book if I could catch them as they fly."

From a letter lying on her desk ready for the mail, we find one of her last messages to "our women": "If God should give me any more health, it sometimes seems to me that I would use my life to preach a continual sermon from the text, 'It is not by might, nor by power.' This world will not be wrenched from Satan by the most enthusiastic assaults of Christian workers, but it may be saved as it has been redeemed by Jesus Christ. What we need, to use our vitality to best advantage, is to 'be filled with the Spirit'; then our weakest efforts become mighty through God."

She labored fervently in prayer for the success of every good cause. A godly minister writes: "Her prayers, the memory of some of them linger in my mind to this moment, and shall to the end of life. To have been the subject of them is a reason for devout gratitude." A dear white-ribbon woman who knows the Lord, exclaims: "How wonderful she was in prayer. She prayed in the Holy Ghost. I cannot forget the last time I heard her. It was at Ocean Grove in your own cottage. I was to leave in a few moments. We, you and I, Cassie, knelt at the bedside on which she sat, too sick to kneel with us, and after we had prayed, commending each to God, our hearts already feeling His divine presence, dear Lois began to talk with God and pour out her great soul into His ear for such things as she saw we stood in need of for our eternal salvation. The presence of God was so manifest that I looked to see, and such a halo of glory rested upon her countenance as I never saw. Her head, instead of being bowed down, was lifted up, and it seemed to me she looked into the face of God, and His smile made the shine on the face." Another dear worker writes: "I feel sore bereft. When I received the telegram, I thought, What shall I do without her prayers? I realized often that our Father was giving me special help and strength and success, because of her prayers, then I remembered Rev. 8:4, that they are being answered, for they are going up as 'incense,' and they certainly will not lose their power because she is face to face with Jesus, our High Priest. Bless God 'their works do follow them.'"

Although there had been the usual failing of strength and aggravation of the symptoms of her disease, which attended her visits to her dear ones in New England and we were solicitous that she should soon have relief through a change of climate, in mind and soul she seemed to triumph over the difficulties in her condition as never before. In hoping she would endure the strain without complete prostration, and shortly get on the road to health again, we hoped against hope. And she literally laid down her precious life in her interest and care and self-sacrifice for others. She was decidedly worse only three days, and then, suddenly at day-dawn, on February 3, 1893, "the silver cord was loosed and the golden bowl broken."

My broken heart took up David's lament for Jonathan, 2 Samuel 1: 25, 26, 27: "How are the mighty fallen in the midst of the battle! Oh, Jonathan, thou wast slain in thy high places. I am distressed for thee, my brother Jonathan. Very pleasant hast thou been unto me; thy love to me was wonderful, passing the love of women. How are the mighty fallen and the weapons of war perished."

But while I was wailing, it was easy for those who knew her to realize that she is one of the most radiant of the "shining throng" in Immanuel's land. One of her brother ministers writes: "Great soul, so full of original thought, so genuinely sincere, so transparent, so discriminating, so thoroughly consecrated and so uncompromising in her religious methods, beloved and loving, gentle as a zephyr, and when duty aroused her as rugged and strong as Elijah. Glorious Lois! from Manheim to the present I have looked upon her as a crown jewel." Another: "I could congratulate the angels,-and 'the blood besprinkled band' on the addition to their exalted society."

Mrs. Barney, National W. C. T. U. prison evangelist, formerly our state president, with whom Lois served as evangelistic superintendent, occupying the relation of an "Aaron" or a "Hur" in her loyalty and helpfulness to our chosen leader, sent to her casket a lovely harp of ivy and violets with palms attached tied with white ribbon. Among other choice floral offerings was a beautiful harp with the word "Victory," which bore silent testimony to the assurance of her dearest friends concerning her final triumph.

When her hands were folded and her eyes closed in her last sleep, she still wore the air of a conqueror, so that we exclaimed: "Was ever death so robbed of his terrors?" Four ministers and five white-ribbon messengers took part in the services upon which God set his seal, as we dwelt on the memories of her happy, useful and victorious life.

Our own Frances Willard speaks from over the sea: "Our Lois, what a great, free spirit she is in the heavens. I feel sure she has found my beloved one, and they have talked over many things. They were victorious spirits here, and how full of triumph must have been their entrance upon the higher life. How our beautiful white-ribbon flock is growing in the heavens, so rich are we in saints, so hallowed by promoted comrades. May we move onward, without haste, without rest, to the beautiful goal."

I SHOULD like to ask our friends who think it would be such a boon to have one hundred and twenty public-houses cut down to eighty, whether they are of opinion that if eighty out of one hundred and twenty bakeries were closed in any city, less bread would be bought or eaten? —F. E. W.

PAUL, in speaking of his tribulations, affirms that he was being "baptized for the dead." We suffer from limitations and burdens which past generations, through the channel of ancestral life, have imposed upon us. In a like manner the present generation is engaged in a hand-to-hand conflict, not merely for itself, but for a coming brotherhood.—Henry Wood.

The just shall live by faith.—Rom. 1:17.

It will be very gratifying, I am sure, to the friends of the Temple to know that the opinions of three of the ablest lawyers of Chicago coincide with that of Mr. Adolph Moses, whose decision on these points was in the article I wrote in answer to Mr. Hobbs' attack.

Mr. John P. Wilson stands at the head of his profession in Chicago as a corporation lawyer. Such men as Mr. Marshall Field will not sign any lease of importance, purchase any property or put money into any corporation until all papers pertaining thereto have been examined by Mr. Wilson. Hon. J. S. Runnells is the attorney for the great Pullman Company; unless his qualifications were of the highest order he could not fill this very responsible position. Hon. Mason B. Loomis is one of Chicago's ablest lawyers, and has been one of our most honored judges.

CHICAGO, ILL., April 13, 1893.

Mrs. Matilda B. Carse:

DEAR MADAM:—I have considered the three questions submitted by you for answer by me, namely:

"1. Can a corporation, not for pecuniary profit, that has in view acquiring certain property for the purpose of its organization, own stock in a corportaion for pecuniary profit?"

"2. When moneys are placed in the hands of trustees by donors for a specified purpose, do these funds become their individual property, subject to the rights of creditors in case of insolvency, or the rights of heirs in case of the death of the trustee?"

"3. Can the $300,000 of Temple Trust bonds issued 'for and on behalf of the National W. C. T. U.' and signed by Matilda B. Carse as an individual, in case of her death revert to her heirs?"

I beg leave to submit herewith my answer to said questions as follows:

1. To the first question I answer, yes.
2. To the second question, no.
3. I have examined one of the bonds referred to in the third question, and find that said bonds are signed by yourself; that they purport to be issued on behalf of the National W. C. T. U.; that by an order on the back it is stated that the certificate of stock deposited as collateral security to secure the payment thereof, was acquired by you for and on behalf of the National W. C. T. U., and for its sole benefit.

Neither you nor your heirs could acquire any interest through these bonds or in the stock pledged for their payment, except through the purchase or payment of the bonds with your or their own individual funds, in which case you or they might have the same rights under said bonds that any other bona fide purchaser or holder thereof would have.

Yours very truly,

JOHN P. WILSON.

Mrs. Matilda B. Carse, The Temple, Chicago:

"1. Can a corporation, not for pecuniary profit, that has in view acquiring certain property for the purpose of its organization, own stock in a corporation for pecuniary profit?"

To this question I answer, yes.

"2. When moneys are placed in the hands of trustees by donors for a specified purpose, do these funds become their individual property, subject to the rights of creditors in case of insolvency, or the rights of heirs in case of the death of the trustees?"

To this question I answer, no.

"3. Can the $300,000 of Temple Trust bonds issued 'for and on behalf of the National W. C. T. U.,' and signed by Matilda B. Carse as an individual, in case of her death revert to her heirs?"

To this question I would answer that I have no doubt, under the facts of the case as stated by you, that in case of your death, the bonds would not revert to your heirs. Neither you nor they could acquire any interest in them except by purchase and payment for them with your own individual funds.

Yours very truly,

J. S. RUNNELLS.

CHICAGO, April 12, 1893.

Mrs. Matilda B. Carse, The Temple, Chicago:

DEAR MADAM:—In answer to the foregoing questions submitted by you to me I have to say:

As to the first question, Whether the purchase of stock in one corporation by another is legal or not, depends largely on the purpose for which the purchase was made. If such purpose is made by a corporation for the legitimate purposes of its organization, and is a proper and necessary means of carrying out the objects of that organization, it is not illegal and will be sustained by the court.

As to the second question: I have no doubt that moneys placed in the hands of trustees by donors for a specific purpose are trust funds not subject to the rights of creditors or of heirs, in case of the insolvency or death of the trustees; and, so long as the fund can be followed as a separate and independent fund, distinguishable from any other fund, it may be pursued and reclaimed by the cestui que trust, or person or corporation for whom the fund is held.

In answer to the third question, will say: I have been shown one of the Temple Trust bonds referred to in the question, which shows plainly on its face the purpose of creating a trust in the funds collected for the purpose therein named; from which I think there can be no doubt that in case of your death the same will not revert to your heirs, as they are charged with the trust and held by you as trustee for the purposes herein named.

Respectfully submitted,

MASON B. LOOMIS.

FOR GOD AND HOME.

BY E. H. CHACE.

Behind were rent hearts steeped in tears;
  Around the day grown black with woe;
Before them lay the curse of years,
  Feeding on all they loved below.
And what were they? A feeble band
  Of women weak, their loved ones gone!
They breathed a prayer, they heard a voice:
  "Strike for thy loved! Press on, press on!"

For God they raised their standard high;
  For home they pressed against the foe;
The curse sent out its horrid cry,
  And raised its head as for a blow.
What could these fragile women then?
  The hope from them was well-nigh torn;
They knelt and prayed; again the voice:
  "Press on, press on, press on, and on!"

The world aloof—now here, now there,
  One joined with them for Native Land;
The curse was troubled in its lair,
  And roused to swallow up this band;
Like bold Goliah on Elah's plain
  It boasted loud at eve, at morn;
The women prayed: "Be Thou our strength!"
  "I still am God! Press on and on!"

Their numbers grew; brave leaders came,
  Sent by their Lord whose flag they bore.
The world is now their battle-field,
  Their courage ever more and more.
Adown the ranks, from file to file,
  Goes up the prayer, goes out the song—
God their commander, and His word:
  "Fight on, fight on, and right this wrong!"

A FOND ILLUSION DISPELLED.

A Pre-Raphaelite Sketch.

BY ANNA M. VAIL.

The farm-house kitchen door opened to admit a little, oent old man with wrinkled, weather-beaten face, tobacco-stained at the corners of the mouth. The housewife cast an apprehensive glance toward her shining "cook-stove" as she exclaimed: "Why, how do you do, Mr. Downing! Come right in."

It was old Phil Downing, but there was an unwonted smartness about him; he wore a new cheap suit, and carried an ancient, rather "lanky" satchel.

"Could he be a widower again? I hadn't heard Mis' Downing was even sick," cogitated Mistress Hale.

"How ar' ye, Mr. Downing? Travelin' fur?"

This greeting was from the farmer, coming in with the milk pails at the other door.

"Wal, considable fur," answered the old man, moving the offered chair to a spot where he could balance on its back legs.

There was a good deal of bustling about just now at the sink, to and fro between the kitchen and the milk house, placing chairs to the table and dishing up a steaming supper, so the old gentleman deferred his announcement until a more favorable moment for producing its due sensation.

"Set up an' have some supper with us, Mr. Downing."

"Don't care if I do," said the visitor, "an' I reckon I'll stay all night with ye, if ye've got a bunk fur me; I calkilate to take the cars in the mornin'."

"Wal, I guess we've got room fur ye. Going to the city, Mr. Downing?"

"Jest passin' through," replied the old man, slowly, in anticipated enjoyment of their surprise. "I'm a-goin' to visit my folks down East."

"That so?"

"Wal, wal! you have taken a start!"

"Wisht I was goin' along!"

"Wisht ye was, too, Mis' Hale; they'd take us fer a new married couple, wouldn't they?"

"Like as not if ye was comin' t'other way," returned the farmer, in full enjoyment of the personal allusion to his own experience.

"Specially if ye told everybody all about it," added his wife.

"How long's it ben since you was back there?"

"Nigh on to forty year."

"You'll find some changes, Mr. Downing."

"Wher'abouts in the East do your folks live?"

"Wal, I have to go a little furder'n old Varmount, Mis' Hale; I come from 'way down in Maine."

"You'll need to fill your flask before you get into the state of Maine, Mr. Downing," said the farmer's son jocosely.

"Ho! not much!" said the old man loftily; "you must be green! Why, *any*body ken git sperits down there whenever they want to; no trouble 'tall about that."

"Then what's the use of that Maine law they seem bound to hang on to?"

"No use 'tall, 'n they hain't got no license money to fix up their towns; they hain't got enterprise like the West or they wouldn't stan' it; they're shiffless."

"I've heard say that their prohibition law was a complete failure," said farmer Hale.

"'Tis; 't'aint nothin' else; jest a perfick farce; an' they don't git nothin' fer 't."

"Maybe they'll do differently after you've been down there, Mr. Downing," joked the farmer's son. "Perhaps they haven't heard how much better we manage matters out here."

The old man sniffed contempt but otherwise ignored this pleasantry; "An' 'taint no such pizen stuff's ye git here, nuther, it's the giniwine article, an' it wouldn't harm a baby."

Supper over, Mr. Downing poised his chair as usual against the corner of the sink within long expectorating range of the open stove hearth; long practice had only made his aim from fair to middling.

The evening passed pleasantly enough with the exception of some natural disgust on the part of the housewife; her men folks didn't use tobacco. Conversation ranged from crops, the weather and the new railroad to reminiscences of "down East," with an occasional refrain from the visitor, as he glanced over at the young man studiously bent over a book, of—

"Maine law! pshaw! don't ye fool yerself, young man; an' what ye git down there is the pure quill."

"Call again when ye come back, Mr. Downing," said farmer Hale hospitably, when his guest set out betimes on his half-mile walk to the station. "How long d'ye 'xpeck to be gone?"

"O, I calkilate to spend the summer 'mongst 'em—don't want to go so fur 'n jist turn roun' 'n come back."

* * * * * * *

The season was about three weeks older when farmer Hale's wife caught sight of a familiar figure plodding along in the light of the setting sun. "I believe in my soul that's old man Downing!" she exclaimed, and opened the door to make assurance doubly sure.

"Why, good land, Mr. Downing! you ain't back from the East!"

"Yes, I be," he answered, setting his satchel down by the well while he helped himself to a drink of water. "It's good sometimes to wash the dust out o' yer throat," he allowed.

"Wal, Mr. Downing, how's the East?" inquired farmer Hale at the supper table.

"Ther' ain't no place like home," returned the traveler. "I don't want to live in no sech pesky country."

"Everything all run down, I s'pose—look's pretty desolate?"

"Wal, no—things looks mighty slick—folks seems to be makin' a livin'."

"Wa'n't the folks glad to see ye?" queried farmer Hale, who never hesitated on delicate ground.

"Land, yes! they was tickled enough—no—they didn't like it—I didn't so much's stay over night with some on 'em; couldn't stan' no sech country!"

"Why, Mr. Downing, I shouldn't think you stayed long enough to get the 'pizen' out of your system," said young Hale, with a sly twinkle of the eye as he noted the conscious look on the old man's countenance.

"You don't mean to say you couldn't get likker?" exclaimed the farmer.

"Pshaw, Mr. Downing," said the young man, "that was because you didn't half try. I guess you didn't want it much."

"Guess I'd a-choked to death 'f I'd a-stayed much longer!—couldn't git it for the cramp—couldn't git it fer a sick hoss, fer I tried it; no, sir! not a darned smell."

And the old man sighed and changed the subject.

LIGHT WINES.

A True Story.

BY S. K. C.

Some ten years ago, while visiting in a distant city, I had several opportunities of seeing the workings of a state inebriate asylum, where several hundred women were serving terms of imprisonment, according to the sentences that had been passed upon them.

The friend who introduced me conducted me to a handsome building, with well-kept grounds. We were ushered into a pretty little library, from whose open door we could see, across the hall, a spacious and cheerful office. Upstairs was a large and elegant parlor, dining-room and other apartments for the use of the officers, all giving the impression of comfort, convenience and beauty.

But how changed was the scene when we passed through the great door, which our conductor locked behind us. Everything was clean and neat, but cold, cheerless, prison-like. The brick walls were whitewashed and void of ornament, the staircases iron, the windows heavily barred. We passed through the different departments—the dining-room, with its long tables; the kitchen, with its ranges and great vessels, constantly filled with tea and coffee, to quench the unnatural thirst of these poor creatures; the sewing-room, where they were taught to sew and knit; the laundry and chapel. Everywhere were women in gowns of coarse blue denim, some with faces bloated and brutalized, some youthful, with a wild, fierce beauty in them, almost all bearing cruel traces of their past lives. Among them was one sweet, fair, refined face, and it is her story that I tell you.

A few years before, in an English home, one of its young daughters was educated as an artist. In course of time she went to the south of France, and while there a great sorrow came upon her. Accustomed to the use of wine from her childhood, why should she fear the light wines of sunny France? How could she dream, as she sought relief from her depression, that she was fastening upon herself the chains of a terrible appetite? Yet so it was. Her friends, too late, awoke to her danger, took her home, and after months of loving care hoped that she was cured. To enable her to begin life afresh, under new conditions, remote from all who knew her weakness, a position was obtained for her in a college on this side the Atlantic. She was successful and happy in her work, but as she became known, and began to move in society, she entered homes where her entertainers served wine at their tables, and the fatal appetite reasserted itself. At last she fell so publicly that she was arraigned in a police court and sentenced to a term in the institution of which I have spoken.

At the expiration of her time, a brother, who had journeyed from England for the purpose, was there to receive and help her; but the saloon beckoned on every side, polluting the air with its odors, and in three days she was lying dead drunk on the streets of the city, and was sentenced to a second six months imprisonment.

Her term of confinement was now nearing its end, and the matron felt much anxiety for her future. She showed me beautiful fancy work, wrought by her fingers, spoke of her fine literary tastes and musical ability, of the sweet disposition that had endeared her to them all, and then added: "My poor Mabel; if I only had some place to send her where she would not be constantly exposed to temptation."

Alas! that such places should be so rare. But ever since, when I hear people advocate the use of light wines as the solution of the drink problem, I think of this young woman, twenty-two years of age only, who, despite education and social position, had been brought low.

A WORD OF CAUTION!

BY ELIZABETH U. YATES.

"Wolves in sheep's clothing" is a common figure of speech to express one of the most frequent forms of hypocrisy—the assumption of religious garb for evil purposes. The Quaker bonnet and nun's veil are often the guise of disreputable characters.

The fact that the white ribbon has been chosen as the badge of an organization whose object is purity and right purpose has caused it in many instances to be worn by the vicious to allure confidence to its betrayal. At our National and state conventions some of our over-trustful sisters have suffered materially by their confidence in women wearing the white ribbon, whose offers of timely assistance they received as disinterested kindness.

At the World's Fair it will be assumed by the pick-pocket and procuress, by whom the unsuspecting may be easily duped and serious consequences follow. Especially will the daughters of white-ribbon mothers from country homes, believing every heart beneath that badge to be true and kind, naturally seek guidance and counsel from such in preference to others, amid the confusion and bewilderment of the great crowds. With special reference to such innocent, unwary ones, this word of warning is written.

No confidence should be placed in a stranger, because she wears the badge of the W. C. T. U., Y. P. S. C. E., or that of any other organization that is the exponent of purity and charity. These may be worn by the most disreputable persons to allure the innocent to dens of vice and infamy.

Directions and other information should be sought of representative officials.

THE COLD WATER CLUB.

BY MABEL S. MERRILL.

"Attention!" said the chairman, balancing himself on the limb of a low-branching apple tree. "We propose, ladies and gentlemen, to form a cold water club in the interests of temperance. Jim French, come to order and face the chair," this to an unruly member who was surreptitiously angling for "minnies" in a convenient brook.

Jim turned with a start and fixed his eyes in some confusion on the dangling legs of the "chair" who continued, "Nominations for president are in order."

"I nominate Jim," said a small voice.

"My goodness!" exclaimed a blue-eyed mischievous morsel of a girl. "I—"

"That's very unparliamentary, Elsie Vernon," interrupted the "chair" with great severity. "You ought to say Mr. Chairman."

"Well, then, Mr. Chairman," said Elsie. "I think we ought to have Lily Sheldon for president, because this is a temperance club and her father drinks wine and she cries and cries about it and so does her mamma—and I know she'd like to come—do have her!"

Elsie ended her logical argument with a little quiver in her merry voice that produced a silence till the recreant Jim said scornfully, "Who ever heard of a girl for a president."

Elsie wheeled round on one small foot, with most unparliamentary suddenness. "A girl president wouldn't go fishing in meeting, anyway, Jim French," she said, and Jim subsided, crushed, while the despairing chairman rapped on the trunk of the apple tree, and Eddie Willis said, thoughtfully: "I think we ought to have Ned for president (Ned was the dignified chairman), because he has been to the debating club and knows the rules, but we might have Lil for secretary, she writes so plain."

Great applause greeted this happy solution of the difficulty, for both Ned and the absent Lily were great favorites with the small people.

As soon as the meeting adjourned Elsie ran off to find Lily Sheldon and tell her of the new plan.

"Oh, how lovely!" said Lily, her rather sad, brown eyes beginning to sparkle. "I'll work every one of us a beautiful badge and we'll meet in the big garret at home, and we'll have a pledge and get names; perhaps papa'll sign—poor papa!"

That was the burden of Lily's childish thoughts—"poor papa," such a handsome, brave, kind man, whom everybody referred to as "Colonel Sheldon, one of our most influential citizens," but who was slowly but surely slipping into the abyss where little Lily's tears and her mother's agonized prayers were powerless to save him.

The Cold Water Club prospered finely, for Miss Ellsworth, the popular village school teacher, who had suggested the idea, befriended it generously and interested older hearts and hands in behalf of the children.

But Colonel Sheldon, absorbed in his business, knew nothing of the matter, so it was with some perplexity that he said to his wife one day, "My dear, can you tell me what is going on in the garret?"

He might well ask, for an uproar that would have done credit to a band of Comanches on the warpath had just been succeeded by pin-drop silence.

"Lily and her little friends have got up some sort of a club and they have their meetings up there," said Mrs. Sheldon, wisely refraining from a full explanation.

The colonel's eyes twinkled. He was as much a boy as ever under his soldierly exterior.

"I think I'll go up and take a survey," he said and stole upstairs on tiptoe. Just outside the half-open door where he could see without being seen he stopped.

President Ned was sitting as straight as a knitting-needle in a chair that would have accommodated half the club and every member was in a like attitude listening attentively to little Elsie Vernon, who was reciting something. The colonel's eye swept over the room with an amused smile and alighted on a gorgeous motto on the wall, "Long live the Cold Water Club!"

Something in the words arrested the colonel and suddenly the whole meaning of the scene came over him as he looked. A temperance pledge hung at the president's right hand, badges of white ribbon adorned each member, and Elsie was reciting a pathetic temperance poem—the old, sad story of the lost father, the broken-hearted wife, and the dying child. Elsie was a remarkably good speaker for her age and she had hushed her audience into perfect stillness.

The colonel looked at the group of earnest little faces, like so many flowers, he thought, some of them already bedewed with bright drops—yes, here was his own white blossom, his Lily, leaning forward from the secretary's chair with lips slightly parted and soft eyes growing larger and brighter with gathering tears.

A feeling he never forgot stirred the colonel's warm heart as he looked, and something wrought so powerfully within him that when the recitation was ended he walked in at the open door saying, with a strange tremor in his voice, "God bless you, children! Let me put my name on your pledge, and please God I'll keep it this time."

The small president sat confounded at this unexpected and unparliamentary move, but the little secretary settled matters by running across the room and throwing herself into her father's arms with a wild sobbing cry of joy, "O papa, papa, I knew you would—sometime!"

There was no use trying to restore order after that. The warm-hearted children crowded about Lily and the colonel who hastened to put his name on the pledge—a great gain for the Cold Water Club, for who could refuse to sign when Colonel Sheldon headed the list?

"A little seed, dear, but a golden harvest," said Mrs. Sheldon to Miss Ellsworth weeks afterward as they talked together of the wonderful fulfilling of many hopes.

"A little seed," answered Miss Ellsworth, "but sown in the best of soil—the hearts of the children."

DEAR BOYS AND GIRLS:—A letter came from a little nephew a few weeks ago which pleased me greatly. It was not intended for publication and did not contain much besides the answers to some puzzles, but there was a great deal in it, after all. This is what he wrote, "I send the answer to —— but it is not all my own. I could not get one of the words, but at last mamma guessed it. I did not think it right to send my name alone, and so put mamma's with it. Please put the name in the paper that way or else not at all."

What do you call that, children,—honesty? Yes, and F— is one of the boys you'd trust, isn't he? And I think, too, there are many more like him in our temperance family. God bless them all!

Affectionately,

Aunt Jane

I live on a large farm, eleven miles from town. We have a nice country W. C. T. U., and my mamma is the president. We have an L. T. L. of forty-five members, and my sister and I belong. I like to read the Cozy Corner letters, and hope they will never stop. My big sister is an evangelist under the auspices of the W. C. T. U. of Kansas. HELEN HILL.

You must surely be an earnest temperance lassie, Helen, in such good surroundings. I think our Cozy Corner budget will never stop for lack of letters, and am glad you like to read them.

Mamma and us and all our house 'cept Cousin Waite are temperance, and we are trying to get him to give up smoking and join. My temperance pin I put on Katherine sometimes, on her shoulder, and she likes to wear it. Katherine is going to be a temperance girl when she grows as big as I am. She is two years in June and I am seven now. We have almost a hundred children in our Legion. I would like to see the Children's Fountain at the World's Fair when I go with papa.

I hope "Cousin Waite" will soon give up smoking (such a useless habit!) and join the great home protection army too. Next week we will have a picture of the Children's Fountain on this page, and you can all get an idea of what it is like.

THE EVOLUTION OF REFORM.

The objective points which must first be reached by the reformer are to get people to see that there are evils which need righting, and, second, to show that they can be righted. The Anglo Saxon, more than any other race, has always persistently refused to become convulsed over mere abstract principles of right. "If a man has a wrong, let him state it, and it shall be redressed, but as for mere theories, we will have nothing to do with them," has been the unchanging attitude of our race throughout the centuries, in marked contrast to the French, whose attempt to reorganize society from the foundation, in accordance with the general principles laid down in the declaration of the rights of man, convulsed the nation with a revolution, whose very name is suggestive of untold horrors and which ended in a despotism as absolute as any that had preceded it.

Nor will our people attempt the overthrow of an evil until they see some reasonable prospect of effecting a permanent remedy. It is not because men and women are heartless and hopelessly selfish that the miseries of their fellows arouse them to no effort in their behalf; it is because they see no possibility of making things better, and, rather than have their sympathies lacerated to no purpose, they shut their eyes and ears, as far as may be, to the sufferings around them.

In these two facts lie the explanation of the relation of the cause of woman's suffrage to the W. C. T. U. movement. Prejudiced enemies of woman's suffrage have said that the W. C. T. U. is little more than a woman's suffrage society. The charge is false, and those who make it might know that it is if they chose to examine the facts which are easily within their reach. Nevertheless, at the risk of incurring the displeasure of our sisters, who have labored long and faithfully in behalf of woman's suffrage, and whom we hold as trusted friends, we venture the statement that the W. C. T. U. has done more for their cause than all the woman's suffrage associations in existence.

So long as woman's suffrage was advocated upon mere principles of right, it made little progress; unless it was very clear that women were suffering real evils from the leprivation of the right no one cared very much about it. Even the instances of women wrongfully robbed of children or property made little impression. The cases were comparatively isolated and people were slow to see the connection between these and similar wrongs of women with disfranchisement. It seemed easier to make new laws in these particulars than to inaugurate so great a change as the enfranchisement of women concerning which prejudice foretold new and greater evils than any now endured. Women themselves, like all subject classes, believed their bondage a necessity and were incapable of comprehending freedom.

That the pioneers in the suffrage cause did noble and effective work, no one can doubt. They deserve and will receive the lasting gratitude and honor of their sex, yes, of humanity, for the uplift of woman means the uplift of the race, but they could do little more than prepare the way; not until, in the evolution of Christian civilization, women should be brought to realize their need of freedom and to chafe under the injustice of their bondage was it possible for any marked advance in the great cause of the emancipation of woman. The temperance work to which God called the Christian women of the world has been the great school in which women have been trained to demand their rights, not for their own sakes but "for God and Home and Native Land."

The vast majority of white ribbon women entered upon their work, thoroughly believing in the subjection of women. "You can't vote, ladies," was the response of legislators as they presented modest petitions to the legislatures of the states and the nation. "You can't vote, ladies," was the refrain of political conventions when entreated to recognize temperance in their platforms. "You can't vote, ladies," shouted the liquor dealers in derisive triumph as they chained legislatures and political parties to their chariot wheels. What wonder if these women who sought only the protection of their homes and loved ones from the trail of the serpent who had wrought such devastation and ruin, lifted their standards and declared, "We must vote and by the help of God we will vote." The conditions which have converted women have also converted men, and thus the W. C. T. U. has become a powerful agency convincing men and women alike of the necessity of woman's suffrage.

Similarly, the woman's missionary societies of the various denominations have wrought more for the elevation of woman to her true place in the church than years of argument upon the abstract right of women to preach and pray and share in the councils of the church. In heathen lands Christian men found their own theories of the subjection of woman carried to their consistent, logical conclusion. Try to evade it as they may, it remains true that the theories of those who argue that "wives be in subjection," "I suffer not a woman to speak," etc., were meant for all time, if followed to their logical conclusion, shut women in zenanas, and made them the merest slaves of men. Christian missionaries had no access to heathen women; they soonfound that converting the sons and leaving the mothers in heathen ignorance was like trying to purify a polluted stream by pouring in fresh water at its mouth. There was only one resort, Christian women must be called to the rescue. How nobly they responded, let the great woman's missionary societies of every denomination witness. In these organizations, women soon proved themselves the peers of their brothers in organization, in the conduct of deliberative bodies, in the management of finance, in short, in various capacities for which men had modestly assumed that the Creator had specially and exclusively endowed them. The old jokes, which used to be so very funny, of woman's incapacity for all matters of business and her utter ignorance concerning parliamentary usages, etc., have grown hopelessly stale since women have undertaken this kind of work.

But these missionary societies have done more; since women have become initiated into these matters, they have learned to scan closely and not always approvingly the methods and work of the brethren in the highest councils of the church. They have whispered among themselves that a few women in the general assemblies, conferences, conventions or councils would have had an excellent effect upon some things done there.

More than all, in their work for the heathen, women have found that the cause of Christ demanded that they be endued with the highest prerogatives in the gift of the church. When a poor heathen convert is dragged off to a life of shame because her Christian sisters are unable to perform the rite of baptism, and in many other cases heathen women must be deprived of the consolations of gospel rites because Christian women, though higher up in the scale, are yet under the limitations of a bondage precisely similar in character and spirit to their own, these same Christian women and their brothers at their side are convinced that these are "God's" facts and that in their light the interpretation of God's word concerning the position of woman becomes very clear. Thus through God's wonderful, overruling Providence, human error is made to defeat itself and the wrath of man is converted to His praise.

These things are true of the woman movement, only because they are true of all forward movements of humanity. Human society will yet be organized upon the principles which Christ taught, but it is folly to attempt to raze our social structure to the ground and begin de novo to erect it upon right principles. Because of the limitations of human nature, we are forced to reach the end by meeting each evil as it presents itself. In the development of our civilization, the wheat and the tares grow together; when the evil matures, it is cut down and destroyed. From the necessities of the case, this is God's method of developing humanity and perfecting our social structure. It therefore becomes of the greatest moment that we note carefully the trend of events. We may not lightly oppose this onward sweep nor bitterly denounce honest men and women engaged in the social movements of our time; "for," concerning each of them, "if this counsel or this work be of men, it will be overthrown, but if it is of God, ye will not be able to overthrow them, lest haply ye be found even to be fighting against God."

WILLING OFFERINGS.

We are too apt to forget in our "offerings" to God that all we have and hold already belongs to Him. We can call nothing our own, not even ourselves, for "the earth is the Lord's and the fullness thereof, the world and they that dwell therein."

The custom adopted by many Christians, and which is borrowed from the old Mosaic law—that of giving one-tenth of one's income to the Lord—does not in its original meaning indicate the right of God to one-tenth, and the right of ourselves to nine-tenths. The true significance of the "offering," its value as a religious observance, lies in the recognition of the truth that all things are God's. ',The silver is mine, and the gold is mine, saith the Lord of hosts." "Every beast of the field is mine and the cattle upon a thousand hills—the world is mine, and the fullness thereof."

In the offering of the first-fruits of all his increase, the devout Israelite perceived the true symbolism of the ceremonial observance, and acknowledged Jehovah as the owner and dispenser of earthly, as well as of heavenly bounties. So in the systematic giving of one-tenth (or of any part) of that which is "ours" to the special service of God, we likewise recognize—or should do so—His prior claim to the whole.

Some sort of system in giving proves the sincerity of our purpose concerning the earthly substance God has entrusted us with. It calls down the blessing of heaven upon our basket and our store; it "establishes the work of our hands." Material blessings in abundance—riches, honor, length of days—are promised to those who honor the Lord with the first-fruits.

As the tribute money paid to Cæsar by the Jews in the days of Christ was a token of their subjection to the Roman power, so the Christian's offering of a certain proportion of his possessions is a token of subjection—of a willing and entire surrender of all he has and holds to his King.

Ruskin says that, "there is always a good deal of self-pride in giving one's self to God. As if we ever belonged to any one else!" And thus we might say of the giving of silver and gold. Let us beware of self-congratulation in our offerings! The most we can do as regards the giving of ourselves and what we term "our possessions" is to recognize that everything in heaven and upon earth truly belongs to the Creator of all; that our souls, our bodies, and all that we have of this world's goods are His endowment, and are to be held in trust "till He come." This is consecration—true surrender. There is nothing meritorious about it. It is simply an act of acknowledgment, and in most cases a very tardy one.

If we were continually to bear in mind that the silver and the gold, the houses and the lands, by courtesy called "ours" are only ours because we are God's, we should, no doubt, make better use of the means at our disposal. Regarding ourselves simply as agents or stewards, we should naturally look for some sort of guidance or instruction from the Master as to the best use to make of our working capital. This would result in more profitable investments, even from a worldly point of view. It would bring about "better times" generally. It would show to the world a higher and broader conception of the idea, "live and let live." It would, without doubt, promote a higher order of material progress and prosperity, to say nothing of the spiritual side.

Godliness is not only profitable for the life to come, but it is in every sense profitable, right here and now. True godlikeness—a living in harmony, as far as we know how, with God's plan for us, brings peace and plenty and prosperity to nations and to individuals.

If there is one thing more than another which we mortals are prone to imagine belongs to us, it is time. Now time, like everything else bestowed upon us by the Father, is a factor in our lives for good or evil according to the use we make of it. There is a right way and a wrong way to use everything. Money rightly used carries with it a blessing; wrongly used it as surely entails a curse.

CANON WILBERFORCE.

Canon Wilberforce is a most uncommon character. He bears a name celebrated in the annals of reform during three luminous generations. His grandfather, William Wilberforce, was the central figure of the anti-slavery movement in Great Britain. His father, Bishop Wilberforce, was the leading son of the church, and Canon Wilberforce is to-day the most eloquent exponent in the mother country of the temperance reform. He lives at Southampton, in a beautiful house called The Deanery, and has a parish of twelve thousand souls. Adjoining his library is an oratory, where he gathers the family for worship and often bows alone before the altar, for the little chapel, with its mellow light, is fitted up like a "High Church" in miniature.

The entrance door to this beautiful home has on the stained glass the words: "Adam's house was Paradise; to his sons the true Paradise is home." Photographs of our own leading temperance workers, Gen. Neal Dow, Joseph Cook and many others, illustrate the comradeships to which the Canon is always loyal. Great characters in church and state speak from the walls to the thoughtful visitor of ideas the highest and most helpful to humanity. The sweet note of a bullfinch in its cage by a window looking on the conservatory and garden causes Canon Wilberforce to say, in his impetuous manner: "That bird knows a sweet little German song, 'Ich liebe Dich,' 'I love you,' but I can only get him to sing it by standing before his cage, whistling the tune myself, turning my head from side to side, smiling upon him, and in every way making myself as much at one with him as possible. Doing this, I often think it is just the way that God gets a song out of my heart; he could crush me in His hand, just as I could crush the little bird, but what good would that do? It would be spoiling a beautiful organism, and not getting the song after all. The bird is like me; neither of us can sing to God, 'I love Thee,' except we see that which is so true in nature and in grace—'He first loved us.' Freewill must always go with love."

Having heard the fiery utterances of Canon Wilberforce on the temperance platform, it was a great contrast to see him enter the church with the white-robed procession of priests and choir boys, going through the intoned service, praying with his face to the altar where a crucifix and burning candles were set out in full array, besides seven branched candlesticks on either side of the altar. When he entered the pulpit, however, he spoke with the individuality that is inseparable from his utterances, both public and in the social circle. He inveighed against the efforts now being made by the Established Church to prevent the people of Wales, who are nearly all Dissenters, from securing the liberty they seek from the oppressive rates they are obliged to keep up with the church they have no sympathy with. He said with great earnestness: "Well might the prelates, who are now so active to prevent the passage of this bill, say with the great dramatist: 'He who steals my purse steals trash; but he who filches from me my good name takes that which, while it cannot him enrich, renders me poor indeed.' The good name of the State Church would be brightly burnished by its participation in the great fight that is now going on against the dramshops."

Canon Wilberforce gives this definition of theosophy: "It is a modern substitute for Christianity; this is its true status, for the old sages would not know their creed as developed by the modern Christianity who have taken in hand to teach us what Oriental religions are and who cannot separate themselves from their environment, saturated as it is with Christianity."

"WHY ARE THESE THINGS SO?"

Two items have been recently reported in the daily papers which are of interest not so much because of their rare and unusual occurrence as, alas! because, though perhaps somewhat extreme, they are yet characteristic events of our civilization. The first is that of a scoundrel who called himself "Black John," and who recently committed suicide in California. According to his own written confession he has been "married" thirteen times in twenty-one years. Every time except the first, his object was money. He would marry a rich woman, obtain possession of her money, and then leave for parts unknown to play the same trick upon some other victim. The other case is that of a young man, who, after paying devoted attentions to two girls at once, chose between them by having each cook a dinner and the one whose cooking pleased him best obtained the high honor (?) of becoming his wife.

We do not vouch for the truth of either of these stories. But we do know that there is nothing inherently improbable in either one of them. We also know that both of them in milder form are enacted very often, and that both are intolerable insults to womanhood. Thoughtful women are becoming alive to the fact that, as a rule, men choose their wives from whom they will, women their husbands from whom they can; that it is infinitely more rare for great and good men to marry bad women, than for great and good women to marry bad men; and, that while the world is loud in its lamentations over the one, it has comparatively little regret or surprise for the other.

And what is more, these same thoughtful women are beginning to ask with an emphasis which demands an answer, "Why are these things so?" The answer is not far to seek. It lies wholly in the abominable doctrine of woman's subjection. So long as woman is financially and politically dependent upon man, so long will this state of things continue. The remedy lies in a complete reconstruction of the popular view of woman's sphere. The view which makes her sole place in the universe that of wife and mother and looks with scorn upon the unmarried woman as one who has failed to reach her vocation, will result forever in the wholesale sacrifice of noble women. The true Christian view, the only one which can give woman her rightful place in the world, the place where alone she can do the work which God intended her to do, is that which makes not "motherhood" but "womanhood" the crowning glory of woman; the view which gives her for her sphere not, as is sometimes prettily said, "a hemisphere," but half the world, and that an undivided half.

Let no one take this as an undervaluing of wifehood and motherhood. It is only by the exaltation of womanhood that wifehood and motherhood are ever sufficiently honored. We have before our eyes the results of the attempt to exalt wifehood and motherhood at the expense of womanhood. It is the degradation of all. In spite of all the pretty talk, it is a deep-seated belief in the mental inferiority of woman which shuts her out of the institutions of higher education. It was a contempt for the holy office of motherhood which denied that woman needed the education of her powers which man claimed for himself. It is the same supercilious spirit which shuts her out of her proper share in the councils of church and state, and classes her with idiots, lunatics, criminals and minors. The common expressions which we meet everywhere of this character, "Religion is very good for women and children, but is not fitted for men," "that the character of the legislative body of a great church will be lowered by the admission of women," "that painting on china and similar work is appropriate enough for women, but contemptible for men," etc., ad infinitum, are not mere surface pleasantries. They show an underlying contempt for womanhood, which has reacted upon wifehood and motherhood.

The logical inference from all this is, that if woman is incapable of doing the work of man, the work for which she is fitted must necessarily be of inferior character, and such, indeed, is the very general view. Laud wifehood and motherhood as much as the opposers of woman's advancement may, they cannot counteract the effect of their own deeds, and it is a fact that motherhood wears very generally the badge of contempt. Can you deny it, in face of the dreadful prevalence of infanticide practiced not merely, nor even chiefly, by the lower, but by all classes of society? Its cause is to be found in the contempt for womanhood engendered by those who profess to so highly exalt wifehood and motherhood that they dare not trust womanhood out of the rule of a strong master. Not until womanhood is exalted to its rightful place can wifehood and motherhood be truly honored.

THE Baltimore conference of the Methodist Episcopal church has passed a resolution practically refusing to vote at its session in 1895 upon what is known as the Hamilton resolution. Our readers will remember that the Hamilton amendment requires a majority of three-fourths of the annual conferences and two-thirds of the general conference in favor of inserting the words "and said delegates must be male delegates" into the second restrictive rule in order to prevent women being received as delegates. The Baltimore conference voted also to pass the question around again in the original form, by which this large majority is required to seat the women. The Western Christian Advocate says that the Baltimore conference is powerless to take any such action; that no bishop can refuse to put to vote before the conference the amendment demanded by the general conference, and that if a single member of said conference desires to vote upon the question the conference is obliged to allow him the privilege. This paper also clearly states the position taken last summer in a contributed article in THE UNION SIGNAL, viz., that the Hamilton amendment assumes the interpretation of the constitution held by the majority of the general conference when the amendment was voted, and that the majority of the general conference of 1892 had precisely the same right to assume its interpretation that the majority of the general conference of 1888 had.

The Sunday Rest League is making progress in France. One of the largest dry-goods establishments, "Le Louvre," recently sent out ten thousand circulars to as many lady customers, asking if they would consent to not receiving goods on Sunday. The answer, "Yes," was almost unanimous. Other business houses are following the example.

An examination was made of the two hundred and eighty inmates in the girls' department of a House of Correction, in New England. All were under eighteen, and but two could make a dress and only three a loaf of bread. Can any one doubt the necessity of industrial schools in all our cities? What better field for work could young women, college graduates, find than in lending a hand to such girls?

A white-ribboner writes to a friend: "My 'exercises of mind' are:

"1. Forget thyself, but never forget that Christ is in thee.

"2. Obey His every word in sincere and childlike humility.

"3. Because it is He that lives and not you, believe that others are to be blessed by every act and word, and be restful about it.

"4. See in others what Christ sees in them, the gold that is to shine some day just as He perhaps sees how He can make me shine when He has me as trustful and pliable as a child!"

Verily "the world do move," when a great paper like the Inter Ocean, of Chicago, sends a woman to Hawaii to report war news. This lady is Miss Mary H. Krout, so long editor of the woman's department of the above paper. Miss Krout has furnished excellent accounts of the Hawaiian situation, despite the fact that she has a lame foot and is unable to walk. She writes from Honolulu to Miss Willard under date of April 8: "I must tell you that I came all that long journey of five thousand miles on a pair of crutches, and with my lame foot in a cast. I am still entirely unable to walk, but my sight, hearing and other senses are in perfect working order, so that a foot, more or less, of activity, does not matter. I have been through some stirring scenes, watching the various phases of this national crisis."

Everything which concerns the life and death of the Woman's Laureate, John G. Whittier, will be read with deepest interest. The poet had a cousin like unto himself in Mrs. Gertrude Cartland, and a beloved brother in her husband, Joseph, who were much with him. Mrs. Cartland writes to our editor-in-chief: "I have longed to tell thee some particulars, which I was sure thee would like to know, of our last restful, happy summer at Hampton Falls with dear Cousin Greenleaf. After his recovery in the spring from his severe illness in the winter, he expressed a desire to go early in the summer with us to one of our favorite haunts near Centre Harbor, N. H., where he had been for many years. But fearing the journey would be too much for him, as it had proved several times, we proposed accepting the invitation of a friend at Hampton Falls, seven miles from home, for a few weeks, and take Centre Harbor later if he should feel able. This proposition seemed to exactly suit him. We had lovely rooms in one of the old colonial houses, in the second story, overlooking the beautiful Hampton meadows with a distant view of the sea. We had our own carriage, and he drove with me twice to some localities familiar to him in his mother's and sister's days, but he usually preferred walking, and every pleasant day he would go to the post-office, near by, or stroll about the grounds and sit under the trees. When we had been there about a month my husband spoke to him of Centre Harbor, asking if he still wished to pass a little while there, to which he replied, 'We are finding everything so enjoyable here that I think we might as well give up Centre Harbor.' This was entirely our choice also; he really seemed to be gaining strength all the time, sometimes saying that he had not known such a rest for forty years. The last day of summer he was taken sick and soon after had a stroke of paralysis. He failed steadily until just a week from his first attack he passed peacefully away. His right side was the part most affected, and he had difficulty in speaking and taking food and medicine. One physician was with him all the time, the three in attendance taking turns. He was perfectly conscious until within a few hours of his death, and spoke connectedly though slowly, thanking the doctors, saying they had done all that human skill could do but it would not avail, he was worn out. 'All right,' and 'I love all the world,' were frequent utterances. I cannot describe to thee the overshadowing of the Infinite Peace which we all felt as we watched the closing hours of the beautiful life."

ON DUTY.

THE BEAUTY OF DOING ONE'S DUTY.

BY HESTER M. POOLE.

There comes a time in every youthful life when our footsteps reach the parting of the ways. On one hand the roadway seems so inviting and delightful. There is sunshine and beauty, easy ascents and declivities, the song of birds and the fragrance of flowers. Bewitching pleasures invite and few clouds obscure the sky. Surely we have the right to choose so easy a path.

On the other hand the way is rugged and uninviting. Perhaps it may be positively repulsive to our pleasure-loving temperaments. There are obstructions in the scarcely trodden way. Why should we essay it at all?

If there are no reasons why one should be traversed rather than another, then it is in human nature to take the easier. Except one delights in trying her strength and battling with adverse conditions, no one is perverse enough to choose the unpleasant things of life.

But few are so situated that there is no choice. At the parting of the ways stands a figure stern and grim. Her limbs are strong, her pace is steady, her face resolute, pure, simple, majestic, yet not unsympathetic in mien; one glance upon her calm face convinces us of her truthfulness, her judicial spirit. She wears no trailing robes, but the simple folds of her classic gown leave free her arms for active service. Her low-heeled sandals are sufficiently strong to withstand the stones and briars she may encounter. Evidently she is equipped for active work.

As we look more closely the figure is not so unattractive as we thought. The sincerity of her expression wins upon us until we recognize its utter sweetness. The firm mouth grows gentle; the impression, after all, is one of tender womanliness. At last, upon the fillet bound around her shapely head, we read the word, "Duty."

Is this, then, our leader? May we not follow Pleasure instead? See, there she beckons, that seductive creature with trailing garments, crowned with roses, and dancing to the sound of her own zither! Every line is graceful, voluptuous, beautiful. So far as we can discern, her way lies along a gentle descent bordered by babbling brooks and blossoms. Who can turn from this merry, laughing creature to her staid and quiet neighbor?

Ah! there is a to-morrow and to-morrow, and then a to-morrow. Over the path of pleasure storms will arise. Flowers wither, birds are songless, all decay that grow not from roots planted deep in the very subsoil of rectitude. Pleasure is the queen of a brief summer's day; Duty the empress of the livelong year.

Strange as it may seem to the inexperienced, only in following the lead of the latter is there lasting good or happiness. The symbol of the one might be the butterfly, of the other the century-living oak.

Under the simple folds of Duty may be found the lines of perfect beauty. Yet will she never disclose her glorious proportions until we walk with her, sup with her, sleep by her side, and gaze, under her tutelage, upon the theater of human life.

The daughter, emancipated from the restraints of school, seeks the companionship of Pleasure. The mother, bending under many burdens, craves help and sympathy. Yet, with a mother's unselfishness, she hesitates to impose cares upon the gay child-woman, who looks, with shining eyes, upon her future. The latter, thoughtless and inexperienced, fails to see how much that mother might be relieved, if she should take upon herself a few of the daily cares that are weaving a network of wrinkles upon the loving brow. She might keep in order her brother's rooms, look after their clothing and mending, take care of the parlor, watch for the father's return at nightfall and bestow on him that service which would be so grateful to a parent. She might even see that her mother's gloves are smoothed and straightened, her outer clothing brushed, her various belongings kept in nice order, the table laid neatly and the daily service well performed, and be the better and the happier for all this doing.

The keynote of character is usefulness, and usefulness is the handmaid of Duty. To live for one's self alone is the meanest of all things. What, are we brought into this wonderful world, which is developing day by day, merely to selfishly seek our own ease and good? We may be certain, if we do so live, we shall miss both.

None of us live alone. In a thousand ways are we connected with individuals, families, society. Whatever helps others in our association, helps ourselves. "Chickens always come home to roost."

One of the great truths which, among much rubbish, has been emphasized by mental and Christian scientists, is the fact that our thoughts are not only potent to others toward whom they are directed, but they are all-powerful upon the thinker herself. They are boomerangs, which return to the individual who sent them forth. Thoughts of love, of kindness and helpfulness are the thoughts of Duty. They strengthen her arm; they make smooth the rough places we tread if we walk beside her. To do right, because it is right, without regard to consequences, to return good for evil, to champion an unpopular cause, like dress reform or equal rights, is not only a mental, but a physical tonic to the champion. To retain good health, bright eyes, energy, vigor and real solid happiness, there is no medicine like doing one's duty.

There is something in a serene, positive stand for duty, which gives buoyancy and youthfulness of feeling. What is it that keeps Mary Livermore bright, elastic and forceful, at an age that to many would indicate it was "time to retire, to take in sail"? What keeps Susan Anthony at the age of seventy-three as full of interest, as ready to enter upon a new occupation as man ager of an industrial school, as if she were barely twenty? What keeps the pen of Elizabeth Cady Stanton and Lucy Stone as brilliant as ever, though they are both on the farther side of three score and ten? What has given to Frances E. Willard and her secretary, Anna Gordon, younger though they are, the strength to traverse thousands of miles every year of their lives for many years, speaking, writing, going through countless trying experiences in all sorts of weather and in adverse conditions?

The secret of this sustained power, this prolonged season of usefulness under trying circumstances is the same in all the cases mentioned and many another. These women faithfully, courageously, nobly, followed that hard and rugged pathway in which Duty led the way. Pleasure they ignored. In so ignoring her they have gained such happiness as Pleasure could never bestow.

Sweetest and deepest by far are the hidden treasures of life. All superficial things are only symbols. If we take these for realities, if we mistake the road and follow Pleasure merrily, we shall surely miss whatever is worthiest, best and happiest.

Whatever is really beautiful, it follows, must be sought as intrinsically good. That which endures is elusive, coy, shy. It is veiled and walks abroad unseen of the ordinary eye. Only the eye of the spirit looks beneath the symbol in which it is hidden.

Such women as these whom we have quoted never thought of retaining youth and freshness when they chose their pathways. They never asked of Duty, "Have you a cosmetic? Do you know where is the spring of eternal youth? Through toil and perplexity and weariness of the flesh, will you assure me of unabated interest in all things that affect humanity? Will you help me to thoroughly enjoy this life and to prepare for that other which the idle and the vain view with so much dread?"

They never considered the effects upon themselves. They simply asked, "Where is Duty? Whither leads she?" and placing their hands in hers, followed her behest. Think you that, however toilsome the path, they have not had heavenly comfort on the way?

There are compensations such as the merely rich, the beautiful or even the learned, have never known. There is the satisfaction of righting wrongs, overthrowing evils, instructing the thoughtless and misinformed, of making it easier and better for women to live their truest lives, of helping men to nobler manhood, which such as these can only know.

Conscience is the parent of Duty, and conscience must be intelligent. That which leads to flagellations and asceticism, is, we all know, merely a superstition born of ignorance. Of that we must have a care. It is the strife of the spirit warring with the flesh, of the higher over the lower. But, if unenlightened, it becomes fanaticism.

Hence Reason is also to be the handmaid of Duty. To unenlightened conscience the world owes its greatest cruelties. Most of the wars of the past have grown out of a wrong conception of Duty. If we look at the persecutions in England and Scotland, of Smithfield, with its burning of protestants and witches, of the executions in the times of bloody Queen Mary, of Charles II., and James II., of the thirty years war in the Low countries, besides other dark days too numerous to mention, we shall understand the necessity of a reasoning conscience.

There are those yet living who would condemn every innocent and artless amusement. They would close every natural avenue of enjoyment. Happily, the number of such narrow souls is growing less. It takes a level head always to choose between what is right and its reverse. The woman who trusts always to feeling, who yields to her emotions, will often be misled.

True, a woman's intuitions, when unbiased by prejudice can generally be trusted. But how can they be unbiased unless she has developed powers of reason and then absolutely determines to abide by their decision? Hence the unreasonable person is unsafe. If she be well-developed in conscience, she is still as liable to go wrong as right. With the best intention in the world, she may spend her substance in sending dressing sacques to Booriboola Gha while her children are going to ruin at home, or in condemning her neighbor for petty faults while she herself is committing the greatest injustice.

SOME RACY SAYINGS OF SPURGEON.

"Grin and bear it" is the old-fashioned advice, but sing and bear it is a great deal better.

A little sprig of the herb called content put into the poorest soup will make it taste as rich as the king's turtle.

Poverty is no shame, but being discontented with it is. In some things the poor are better off than the rich; for if a poor man has to seek meal for his stomach, he is more likely to get what he is after than the rich man who seeks a stomach for his meal.

The New Bread.

ROYAL unfermented bread, made without yeast, avoiding the decomposition produced in the flour by yeast or other baking powder; peptic, palatable and most healthful; may be eaten warm and fresh without discomfort, which is not true of bread made in any other way.

Can be made only with Royal Baking Powder.

Receipt for Making One Loaf.

ONE quart flour, 1 teaspoonful salt, half a teaspoonful sugar, 2 heaping teaspoonfuls Royal Baking Powder, half medium-sized cold boiled potato, and water. Sift together thoroughly flour, salt, sugar, and baking powder; rub in the potato; add sufficient water to mix smoothly and rapidly into a stiff batter, about as soft as for pound-cake; about a pint of water to a quart of flour will be required—more or less according to the brand and quality of the flour used. Do not make a stiff dough, like yeast bread. Pour the batter into a greased pan, 4½x8 inches, and 4 inches deep, filling about half full. The loaf will rise to fill the pan when baked. Bake in very hot oven 45 minutes, placing paper over first 15 minutes baking, to prevent crusting too soon on top. Bake at once. Don't mix with milk.

NOTE.—It is necessary to follow, precisely, the above directions, even to the size of the pan. Observe that water should never be added until the powder has been thoroughly mixed with the flour in a dry state.

Perfect success can be had only with the Royal Baking Powder, because it is the only powder in which the ingredients are prepared so as to give that continuous action necessary to raise the larger bread loaf.

The nutty flavor noticeable in this bread is due to the fact that no acid except that derived from the grape is used in the Royal Baking Powder.

Breadmakers using this receipt who will write us the result of their experience will receive, free, the most practical cook book published, containing 1000 receipts for all kinds of cooking. Address Royal Baking Powder Co., 106 Wall Street, New York.

INDIANA JOTTINGS.

"From Afric's sunny fountains" comes a long, cheerful, happy letter from our own Alice Palmer. Although out on the "world-wide mission," we claim a special interest in all she does. For five years Miss Palmer toiled for the upbuilding of the Indiana W. C. T. U., untiringly, unselfishly. The results for us were many, and her letter received this morning contains the well-known ring, "It must be done." Miss Palmer reports herself in excellent health, but acknowledges the continued heat to be trying. She is now in the South African Republic, and will remain there until May. Thence she goes to Natal, to remain until after their annual meeting in July; thence back to Cape Colony until October. God keep her safe, and bring her home to us and her dear mother.

Friday, February 3, Miss Palmer addressed all the schools at Wellington in the morning, and spoke before the Y's in the evening. Saturday, the 4th, she went to Stellenbosch, and spoke that evening, and on Sunday to the children. Tuesday she organized a union of eleven members. The wives of three theological professors of the Dutch Reform College and three of Professor Hoffmeyer's daughters are among the membership of this union. Tuesday evening she went to Paarl, to meet with the Y Branch Tuesday night and the executive committee Wednesday morning; thence on to Johannesberg, etc. This shows that our Alice has lost none of her characteristic activity.

THE Y'S GIRLS.

E. Emma Echols, president of the Ft. Wayne Y, writes of the activity of her union. Their work is along the kitchen-garden, literary, flower mission and social lines. The kitchengarden is directed by Miss McLachlan and is in session every Saturday morning. Miss Dickson visited them recently, and shortly after a reception was held at the Y. M. C. A. hall, at which a musical and literary program was given and many new names were added to their roll.

Mrs. W. F. Sult writes on behalf of the Plymouth Y, which now numbers twenty active workers. A press committee has been appointed and the union contemplates taking up flower mission, Sabbath observance and narcotics. The program committee have enlisted the services of two of the city schools. Professor Reed instructs in political ethics and Professor Martin conducts exercises in current events.

The Akron Y has just begun a new year's work with a competent corps of officers. Miss Gertrude Cook writes of their determination to make this a good year's work. This Y gave a Martha Washington supper, February 22.

Anderson Y, by their president, Ida C. Alldredge, reports the work done by them. Miss Pearl Patterson, an elocutionist of reputation, from Muncie, recently gave an entertainment for them by which they realized a nice sum for their treasury. Their next attempt was an oratorical contest given by a class of high school girls who had been trained by Rev. C. W. Gordon, the Congregational minister. Miss Nix Taylor won the medal. This young lady is preparing to enter upon the study of law. The door receipts were twenty-two dollars.

Nora Miller, press superintendent of the Frankford Y, writes of a valentine social. About sixty persons attended and six dollars were cleared for their work. This Y is an expert in the way of socials.

The Martinsville Y carries on the following lines of work: Press, scientific temperance instruction, literature, juvenile work and flower mission. These girls push their work in the daily papers. A load of coal for a poor widow is only one of their many kind deeds.

The Wabash Y have for their president, Rose G. Smith, and secretary, Hattie R. Benham. We predict success for them. At a social recently given they cleared twelve dollars for their work.

Mother Wallace and Mrs. S. C. Harrel spent some time at Indianapolis doing legislative work. Mrs. Trish is occupied in the northern part of the state doing excellent evangelistic work. Mrs. Fields and Miss Farley are busy all the time. Miss Mary Monroe Dennis, daughter of Margaret R. Dennis, of Richmond, began a series of evangelistic services in Asbury M. E. church, Sunday, March 19. Miss Dennis is an excellent preacher and has won quite a reputation in her church. Your correspondent began a series of gospel services at Saline City, April 7, and goes from thence to Centreville.

There will be no strikes, at least not of any serious prolongation among the Indiana coal miners. Thomas McQuade, of Brazil, has been reappointed state mine inspector, and I am sure he will, so far as I know, look after the miners' interests. The United Mine Workers of this district were in session in Terre Haute. Michael Cummesky was reëlected president.

Monroe county convention was held at Bloomington this winter. Mrs. Thompson, state evangelist, gave the Bible readings. Mrs. L. M. Beck, state president, made an address upon "Benefits derived from the state W. C. T. U." Ellettsville, Stinesville and Bloomington unions reported, and officers were elected for the ensuing year.

At the La Porte county annual convention, Mrs. Baldwin reported excellent work done in our northern prison. She gave sixty Bibles of large print to aged prisoners, and is now anxious to place a Bible in every cell. Allen county annual convention was held at Maysville. Eighty-four members and total receipts, $97.63, were reported. Each union in the county sent a delegate and Miss Mildred Winchs' report of the Ft. Wayne Y. W. C. T. U. was excellent. The annual meeting of Wayne county was held at Economy; Mrs. Fields made the address of the evening. Steuben county held her annual convention at Orland, Angola, Ray, Clear Lake and Orland unions being represented. Papers upon various lines of work were read. Mrs. J. R. Nichols gave the address of the evening.

The annual convention of White county was held at Brookston. Reports of county officers, local unions, and some excellent papers were read, and Mrs. Calkins, of South Bend, made the address of the evening. Amboy was the scene of Miami county convention. The president's address and several papers were of excellent merit. Mrs. Fields addressed Lake county annual convention which was held at Hammond. She also addressed the Prohibition club of Hammond. The convention of Elkhart county was held at Nappanee, Mrs. Tompkins, county president, in the chair. Mrs. Hume, president of Marshall county, was present and spoke upon the W. C. T. U. as an educator of women. The annual address of the president was excellent. Mrs. Trish was present at this convention and conducted a mothers' meeting.

Johnson county's meeting was held in Crowell Hall, Franklin, and was a good convention. The following resolution was passed at this convention:

Resolved, That we ask God's blessing to rest upon her who has labored so faithfully among us, and has now dedicated her life more unreservedly to work in a foreign land, Miss Alice R. Palmer.

The Y's gave an excellent evening program.

At Mooresville, Morgan county annual convention was held. Mrs. L. M. Beck, state president, made the address. Mrs. S. C. Harrel met with the officers of the local unions of Franklin county at Brookville. We are glad to welcome this new county into the sisterhood.

As time moves on apace, I sometimes wonder what next? The depth of this great reform cannot just yet be fathomed, but as God rules, right yet shall triumph.

MISSOURI.

AUSPICIOUS LABORS.

The first three months of the new year has seemed to open auspiciously for W. C. T. U. work in Springfield. The good seed sown by our state convention is bringing forth fruit in many directions. The last time Mrs. Hoffman spoke in this city she brought out prominently the benefits of scientific temperance instruction. By the constant and persistent efforts of our state superintendent of this department, Mrs. Neva Thomas, the school board has embodied in their curriculum for the coming year's course of study, scientific temperance instruction, from the lowest to the highest grade.

There is probably not a more active and efficient body of Y's organized within the same length of time in the state than Springfield contains. Beginning in October with a mere handful, they have now a strong union of fifty members and twenty honoraries. They assist the W's in every way possible, managing and executing the esthetical part of the W. C. T. U. household, besides taking exclusive charge of the musical programs on every occasion. Verily, they are daughters of a King.

One of the most gratifying circumstances connected with the Springfield union is the perfect harmony in which they work with the ministers of the city. They and the Y. M. C. A. are constant allies, lending their aid and council upon every needed occasion. The ministerial alliance appointed a committee to confer with the board of finance for the industrial home, and after investigating, each pastor pledged for his church a pro rata of the indebtedness of the Home, thus placing this bark of social purity on smooth waters. Since the opening of this life-saving station, seventy-five friendless, homeless and unfortunate creatures have found shelter, and friends ready to show them a better way; very few have returned to their former life.

This union greatly regrets the removal from their ranks of Mrs. Stella Brubaker, who has gone to Peoria, Ill. The Illinois W. C. T. U. will find in Mrs. Brubaker a capable worker in every department, being one of the few women who can be called upon to work in any department, and do it well.

The greatest interest in temperance affairs which has moved Springfield for years was the series of meetings just held by Miss Jennie Smith, our National superintendent of railroad work; coming for three days she stayed ten, and her stay was one continual round of success. The two Sabbaths she was in the city the people gave her regular ovations, the Grand Opera House being filled to its utmost capacity twice a day. Four hundred and fifty railroad men put on the white button, and two large railroad temperance associations were organized in the respective shops located here; besides these, numerous additions were made to the two unions, and the white and blue ribbon upon the coats of these loyal men is no unfrequent sight upon the streets. A most delightful reception was tendered Miss Smith and the members of the South Side union by the North Side W. C. T. U. The hours from two to five were most happily and profitably spent in listening to a Bible reading given by Miss Smith in her own inimitable style.

Many lines of work have been made prominent by the coming of National officers and superintendents, five of which have visited the city within the past year, and have brought prominently before the public their respective lines of work, thus manifesting to the people that the W. C. T. U. is an organization of wonderful capacity, and as broad as the universe itself, and this the good people of Springfield appreciate and understand.

Bethany enjoyed a visit from the district president, who spoke words of comfort and encouragement to them and secured two subscribers for the Missouri Home Guard. Many medal contests are being held in this district, as they should be in all our districts.

The L. T. T. L. of Canton has sixty-five members and is a thrifty band of workers. A delightful musical was held at the home of Mrs. L. R. Brook, which netted ten dollars for the union. A gospel temperance meeting was held and a collection taken for district work. Why cannot such an arrangement be made in every locality having a good program first prepared and well announced, and ask the people to generously contribute to district work? Many of the new districts are much in need of money to carry on the work. Let's try this plan.

At Eldorado Springs two of the druggists have been arrested for the illicit selling of "wet goods" and it is hoped justice will be dealt out generously to them. The energetic president, Mrs. Phipps, is planning for much work this year and the numbers are constantly increasing. Letters from this union have been sent to many of the legislators, and protest after protest has been sent against the social evil bill which proposed to license houses of ill repute and thereby make the state or city a partner in the traffic in human souls. Shame! shame! It will never pass in Missouri. Our state superintendent of this work has done noble work for purity and has hurled petition after petition to the legislators, and throughout the state hundreds of signatures have been secured urging the honorables to stand by the womanhood of the state and not sell the virtue of their fair daughters for a mess of pottage.

Excellent educational work has been done in almost every union along the suffrage lines. Petitions, numerous and lengthy, were sent to our legislature. Hon. J. E. Carter, the champion of our cause in the legislature, says these numerous letters had a good effect, and were well received. Missouri women are indeed very grateful to Hon. J. E. Carter for the interest taken in our behalf, and while victory is not ours, we are encouraged. Our untiring state superintendent, Mrs. Hedges, says: "Next time more of our husbands, fathers and brothers will vote for those candidates who favor equal rights. Interview the candidates, and commit them. If woman's influence can be brought to bear in the next election let us use it for our cause. In the meantime, we will teach suffrage and preach it, work for it and pray for it, and keep sweet till it comes, for come it must and will."

Our new state superintendent of narcotics, Mrs. Isa Hall Elder, of Harrisonville has lost no time in placing petitions and letters before our legislature, asking for legislation against the liquor traffic's twin brother, the tobacco habit, and if nothing else is accomplished, much educational work has been done that cannot be undone.

discouraged from the fact that two saloons have obtained license and heretofore respectable men have gone into the saloon business. For how much better is the man who signs the petition than the saloon-keeper? This is truly a time for faith and works, for verily the Lord reigneth.

The W. C. T. U. at Webster Groves has had some delightful parlor meetings. Mrs. A. S. Benjamin gave two of her parliamentary drills to the members and their friends, at the home of one of the white-ribboners. A third drill was given at night in the Congregational church, to which the public was invited. Much amusement and some astonishment was created when it was found that ignorance regarding parliamentary law was not wholly confined to the ladies. Mrs. Benjamin delivered an able discourse and we hope she will come to this state often to teach us what's what.

An elegant reception was tendered Mrs. L. Lake, of St. Louis, organizer of the Catholic Women's Temperance Union. Mrs. Lake addressed the audience in her motherly manner and urged every mother present to ally herself with this reform for her children's sake. At the close of the address excellent refresqments were served and the remainder of the afternoon was spent in social intercourse. As each went to her own home they could but think that Catholic and Protestant sisters had much in common in putting down the saloon and working for purity and sobriety.

Bonne Terre enjoyed a lecture given by Col. John Sobieski. He also addressed the L. T. L. and ten members were added to the union. Bonne Terre union have had excellent attendance at their regular meeting recently; have had two gospel temperance meetings which are always uplifting and inspiring. A Martha Washington Tea Party this winter was an enjoyable occasion and the net receipts were twenty-four dollars. Mrs. Maud Greene, National chalk talker, gave an interesting and instructive entertainment under the auspices of the L. T. L.

At Bolivar, the W. C. T. U. have formed a club for Bible study. Two hours each week are given to this spiritual work as the outlines given in the Oak and Ivy Leaf are systematically followed. This club has been joined by many ladies not connected with the union and has large and profitable meetings. The Hoo Nan Tea was a unique entertainment and netted the union thirty-eight dollars. This union has paid five dollars to the state and forty-five dollars have been sent on their $100 pledge for the Temple to have the name of our self-sacrificing state secretary, Miss Ellen D. Morris, placed in Willard Hall.

NEWS IN A NUTSHELL.

A TOWN convention was held at De Ruyter, N. Y., this winter, in which the union at New Woodstock also participated.

MRS. IZA HALL ELDER, of Harrisonville, Mo., has been appointed state superintendent of narcotics for Missouri, in place of Miss Emma Mekeel, resigned.

GOOD literature for distribution, where it will be of benefit may be sent to Frances Liter, field matron, Friends' Mission, Douglas, Alaska, and Mrs. Rebecca Stallard, Dryden, Va.

MRS. S. E. V. EMERY, National superintendent of relation of temperance to labor and capital, is suffering from a serious though not dangerous illness at her home in Lansing, Mich. All unite in the earnest hope that she will soon rejoice in renewed health and activity.

MR. DAVID H. BURWELL, of Zanesville, Ohio, has closed his second series of gospel temperance meetings under the auspices of the W. C. T. U. at York, Pa. Two L. T. L's, numbering over two hundred members, were organized, and a large number of young men signed the pledge.

REV. L. G. JORDAN, now of Philadelphia, is associated in the publication there of the only Afro-American prohibition paper published in America, called The Christian Banner. Sample copies of these to send to negro voters can be procured by sending to 1327 Rodman St., Philadelphia, Pa.

WITHIN the last few weeks, Corvallis, Ore., has doubled its membership from twenty-five to fifty. The tide turned at the time of Mrs. Helen B. Harford's visit, which was followed by children's meetings addressed by Mrs. Ellen Blair, National chalk-talker, and Mrs. Ada Unruh. An L. T. L. has resulted.

REV. Z. M. WILLIAMS, A. M., the efficient secretary of the Cross-bearers' Missionary Reading Circle, is a Missourian by birth and a graduate of Central College. He is an enthusiastic advocate of missions. Six cents in stamps inclosed to his address, St. Joseph, Mo., will bring you a fifty page C. M. R. C. Hand-Book.

ANY one desiring a photograph of Miss Jennie Casseday, taken just immediately before her last illness, can secure it by sending thirty-five cents and postage to Miss Jennie C. Benedict, 1327 Third Avenue. Also an excellent photograph of her grave taken the day she was laid to rest, for twenty-five cents and postage.

THE North Capitol W. C. T. U. of Washington, D. C., has held two meetings at the district headquarters this winter, at both of which Mrs. Ruth G. Havens gave a paper on suffrage. The president of this union, Mrs. Margaret B. Platt read a stirring paper on tobacco before the ministers at the Baltimore M. E. conference at Hagerstown, not long ago.

As the result of a visit and address from Mrs. M. J. Borden, territorial president, the ladies of White Oaks, Lincoln County, N. M., rejoice in the organization of a W. C. T. U. which numbers nearly fifty members, active and honorary. Arrangements are already being made to open a public reading-room with an enthusiasm which bespeaks success for the undertaking.

MRS. DORA A. EVANS conducted several Demorest medal contests in San Diego, Cal., as a result of which a permanent organization, called the Demorest Club, of San Diego, has been formed, the members being the contestants whom she so carefully trained. They have voiced their appreciation of her untiring energy and faithful work in fitting resolutions.

THE second conference of the second district Illinois W. C. T. U. was held at Douglas Park, March 16, Mrs. Mary A. Gordon, district president, in the chair. The Temperance Hospital, L. T. L., and evangelistic work were all ably presented; an address was given by Mrs. Daisy H. Carlock, state vice-president, and a silver medal contest occupied the evening hours.

ONE of the best musical and literary events enjoyed by the colored W. C. T. U., of Paola, Kansas, was the Demorest medal contest participated in by a class of nine intelligent young contestants, and held in the opera house. This is probably the first medal won by our colored members, who should find this a peculiarly fitting means of forwarding their temperance work.

"WILL you please ask through THE UNION SIGNAL that any parties who desire to subscribe for the paper for friends in Utah to write me? Literature is so badly needed there and no workers anywhere are more worthy of help than the splendid workers of that territory, laboring at such a disadvantage." Thus writes Mrs. M. B. Reese, National W. C. T. U. organizer, Chautauqua, Washington.

MRS. HELEN L. BULLOCK has recently organized a W. C. T. U. at Pasadena, California, and there gave the white ribbon badge of membership to Mrs. ex-Governor Beveridge, of Illinois. Mrs. Bullock states that South California has a union which consists of one brave woman only, who is president, secretary, treasurer and superintendent of literature, scientific temperance tnstruction and petition work, filling all ihese offices well.

MRS. ELIZABETH ROWE JOHNSTON, of Akron, O., passed away this winter at the ripe age of seventy-two. Possessing a strong character, her opinions were ever of a decided nature, and in the cause of temperance her convictions were so strong that for many years she was a fearless and outspoken advocate of total abstinence and prohibition. She never missed an opportunity to do good and to instil in the hearts of all, especially the young, a love for temperance and hatred for strong drink.

MRS. MARRIAGE-ALLEN, of London, has had four months' work among the colored people, holding gospel temperance meetings, visiting the public schools, impressing the importance of scientific temperance instruction, taking total abstinence pledges and introducing Bible study among the colored people. She has added to her work in former years by taking 1,511 total abstinence pledges, and more than one thousand persons were added to the Scripture Reader's Union. Owing to the illness of one of her helpers in the Charles Square Mission, London, Mrs. Allen has returned to England.

"PROHIBITION sentiment is very strong in South Dakota and we do not intend to go back to the old saloon system," says a correspondent. "A reception was tendered our returned legislators, Hon. John T. Belk and G. H. Stuvernd, of Codington county, for the honorable stand they took and the gallant fight they made against resubmission in our recently adjourned legislature. The very best class of our people were represented and they were thoroughly aroused on the subject of better enforcement of the prohibition law and to the necessity of nominating a straight temperance ticket for our city election."

THE many friends of Mrs. Grubb, our National superintendent of foreign work and president of Kansas W. C. T. U., will be pained to learn that she and her husband have met a second great bereavement within a year, in the death of their lovely daughter, Edith, eighteen years of age. She died of La Grippe, contracted a year ago. Mrs. Grubb has been with her in Texas and Arizona for nearly four months, endeavoring by every means love could command to ward off fatal results, without avail. The fair, young life went out full of trust in God, but she left breaking hearts to mourn her loss. She was a white-ribbon girl, consecrated to all good purposes.

MRS. DR. JOHN DAVIS, of Cincinnati, president of the Women's Home Missionary Society of the Methodist Episcopal church, passed away recently to her heavenly home. Mrs. Davis was a rare woman, and one of the most refined and cultured that Christianity has produced in our times. Happily, she had a husband worthy of her, as rare and choice a spirit as she was herself. They lived together for forty years and she survived him but two. Mrs. Davis was the most intimate friend, as well as the biographer of Mrs. Lucy Webb Hayes. It is good to think of the reunions on the other side, for the recent translation of ex-President Hayes makes their circle complete; four such minds and hearts as these have seldom been enriched by mutual appreciation, or left upon the world a choicer blessing by reason of character and deeds.

AT a recent memorial meeting for Miss Mary Allen West, held by the Freeport, Ill., W. C. T. U., the church was simply decorated with "bands of ribbon white" and an evergreen globe encircled by the white ribbon. "Memories of Miss West" were given by Mrs. Adeline Goodrich Soulé, former president of the sixth district. Mrs. Catharine Marsh told personal reminiscences of Miss West's early life. A paper on "Characteristics of Miss West" was read by Mrs. Emily Keever. Mrs. Wesley Snyder read a selection from THE UNION SIGNAL'S memorial supplement. Sketches of other workers who have been called home, under the title of "Our Own" were given by Mrs. Hea. The choir sang beautiful selections, among them, "We'll never say good-bye in Heaven," and the impressive services were concluded by prayer.

MRS. G. WITHYCOMBE, of St. John's, Newfoundland, during an address at a public meeting, held March 2, gave the following answers to the question, "Why I am a member of the W. C. T. U."

"First, because I believe it to be one of the best organizations in the world for the promotion of temperance and every other kindred virtue. Second, because it has done more for woman in educating her and elevating her to her true position, than any other organization could possibly have done. Third, because it is a Christian union having for its foundation the Word of God. Fourth, because I love it. I say in all sincerity that the W. C. T. U. has done more good for me than anything else outside the Gospel. I have been benefited by it in every way. Oh, that each of us realized our individual responsibility and were found doing all in our power to advance the cause of God and humanity."

MANY requests come to THE UNION SIGNAL for a list of the articles suitable to be donated to the National Temperance Hospital. The following list has been prepared by Mrs. Hornby, the matron: "Money is always in order; towels, napkins, tablecloths, dresser and table scarfs, splashers, blankets (white, all wool), bed-spreads, nice feather pillows, fruits, vegetables, butter, eggs, poultry, canned fruits, jellies and grape juice, are some things needed every day. Then we hope the states will feel like assisting in furnishing the ward, it will contain five beds; if they could do no more than furnish one bed that would be a great help. Each bed complete will cost forty dollars. Then if others would send rugs, easy chairs, dresser, stands, how soon we would have the much needed ward! There are but twenty beds at present; many are promised but they are slow in coming; twenty more should be furnished at once, for we can easily fill them. We are trying to raise money (three hundred and fifty dollars) to endow a bed for poor children and working girls; every week we have calls for such but must turn them away for lack of means to keep them. It makes my heart ache to have to say, 'We cannot take you.' How pitiful they look. This should not be; a little from each one would soon raise the amount, and the good it would do no one can tell. At present every bed in the house is filled. We have men, women and children, rich and poor; one judge's wife, one minister's wife, the wife of a policeman and many others, with four charity patients, which is all we can take. I wish half the beds were endowed so that we could do more for the very poor."

You have read of the little book, Dainty Desserts, which we will send you for a 2-cent stamp.

Now we will tell you of KNOX'S SPARKLING GELATINE. It's the purest made; has no odor or taste; it dissolves the quickest, and sets up into a Jelly in half an hour, ready to serve. Has no acid in it, and you don't want any; make your own acid with lemons, then you know what you are eating. Ask your Doctor about this, and see if I am not right. Our new package has both Rose and White Gelatine in, so you can make Fancy Desserts at no extra cost.

ANNOUNCEMENT.

AN EXPLANATION.

Because of the introduction of a special Sunday-school pledge, as authorized by the National Convention, the L. T. L. pledge containing the words, "as a beverage" will no longer be kept in stock by the W. T. P. A. It was intended for Sunday-schools, and hence is superseded by the new issue. The regular L. T. L. pledge corresponds with the pledge of the National W. C. T. U., and omits the words "as a beverage."

It is not intended thereby to teach the children in our Legions to take the matter of alcoholic medicines into their own hands in defiance of parental authority. The pledge is to be interpreted according to the conscience of each signer, as is the case in the W. C. T. U. But it is entirely in the province of the leaders of the Legion to teach the fact of efficient substitutes for alcoholic medicines, and to lead the children to influence their parents to provide and require them.

The new Roll of Honor, or Wall-Roll pledge, corresponds with the two forms named—one for the Loyal Temperance Legion, the other for the Sunday-school.

PETITION OF THE WORLD'S WOMAN'S CHRISTIAN TEMPERANCE UNION FOR THE PROTECTION OF THE HOME

Addressed to the Governments of the World.

Honored Rulers, Representatives and Brothers:

We, your Petitioners, although belonging to the physically weaker sex, are strong of heart to love our homes, our native land, and the world's family of nations.

We know that clear brains and pure hearts make honest lives and happy homes, and that by these the nations prosper, and the time is brought nearer when the world shall be at peace.

We know that indulgence in Alcohol and Opium, and in other vices which disgrace our social life, makes misery for all the world, and most of all for us and for our children.

We know that stimulants and opiates are sold under legal guarantees which make the Governments partners in the traffic, by accepting as revenue a portion of the profits, and we know with shame that they are often forced by treaty upon populations, either ignorant or unwilling.

We know that the law might do much, now left undone, to raise the moral tone of society and render vice difficult.

We have no power to prevent these great iniquities beneath which the whole world groans, but you have power to redeem the honor of the nations from an indefensible complicity.

We therefore come to you with the united voices of representative women of every land, beseeching you to raise the standard of the law to that of Christian morals, to strip away the safeguards and sanctions of the state from the drink traffic and the opium trade, and to protect our homes by the total prohibition of these curses of civilization throughout all the territory over which your Government extends.

NAMES. | RESIDENCES.

Will not everybody who loves the great cause of home protection, send to Mrs. Mary A. Woodbridge, Ravenna, O., for the regular form and circulate it to the best of her ability, mailing the names to Miss Alice E. Briggs, Evanston, Ill.?

Our Library Table.

PEBBLES FROM THE PATH OF A PILGRIM, by Mrs. H. L. Hastings, wife of Rev. H. L. Hastings, editor of The Christian. This book in pamphlet form consists of stories—true stories—of personal reminiscences, answers to prayers, providential guidance, rescue work and mission work among the freedmen of the South after the war.

Published by H. L. Hastings' Scriptural Tract Repository, 49 Cornhill, Boston.

SOUVENIR, MONTREAL '93. The Endeavor Herald Publishing Co., of Toronto, Canada, are issuing this beautiful little booklet descriptive of Montreal and vicinity, to be illustrated with about forty handsome half-tone engravings. It will also contain portraits of the members of the Montreal Committee, and of the Officers and the Trustees of the United Society. This will be the only official book of the kind published, and the only one which will be for sale in the Convention buildings. Every American Endeavorer should procure one of these Souvenirs. The price is placed at such a low figure that the souvenir is within reach of all.

ART IN A NUTSHELL is the title of a remarkably well arranged little volume by Mrs. Mary Thompson Tuttle, daughter of Mrs. Judge Thompson, which will be useful to the Crusade Army and white-ribboners in all parts of the world. Mrs. Tuttle is an accomplished art student, having studied on both sides of the sea, and she has in this tasteful, handy volume "boiled down" the results of her long observations and experience. Any person of average intelligence could learn the book by heart in a few weeks, and will thereafter feel that he knows who are the painters of the world in all ages and nations including our own as well as something about their great works and the characteristics of their style.

PHILLIPS BROOKS, THE MAN, THE PREACHER AND THE AUTHOR. The Christian public have united in declaring that in the death of Phillips Brooks, America has lost her greatest pulpit orator. J. K. Hastings, 47 and 49 Cornhill, Boston, is the first to announce a life of Bishop Brooks. It is from the pen of Newell Dunbar, who is in every way fitted to prepare such a work as this. It presents a fine account of the Bishop's life and labors, as a pastor, preacher and philanthropist, together with choicest gems from his sayings and writings. The introduction to the work is written by Joseph Cook, while Archdeacon Farrar, Canon of Westminster, is the writer of a chapter presenting an able estimate of the dead preacher. The publisher designs this as a beautiful memorial volume. It is printed in two colors from clear, handsome type on a fine quality of paper. It contains numerous fine half-tone illustrations, including several specially engraved for this work. The book will not be found in the stores, but is sold only by subscription.

THE EVOLUTION OF IMMORTALITY, OR SUGGESTIONS OF AN INDIVIDUAL IMMORTALITY BASED UPON OUR ORGANIC AND LIFE HISTORY, by Dr. C. T. Stockwell. This little book of but one hundred pages ranks as one of the best correctives of the materialism of the time. It meets scientists on their own plane, and handles their weapons with as much skill as any of them is able to command. The lowest of embryological and cell life are invoked to illustrate the statement that Nature follows one method and movement throughout and that by the process of development familiarly met with in all organic forms either we are to live on continuously beyond death, or else Nature at this point suddenly deserts the line and method followed in the other states and changes as far back as we can go. Law is simply continuity of form in the exercise of force. If any one makes a point that the analogy that claims immortality for man requires it also for animate life generally, the author does not fear to say with a great thinker whom he quotes in the following anecdote:

"But," said an objector, "we find no stopping place anywhere." "And I want none," said a philosopher. "But," persisted the objector, "we shall have then to include the oyster." "Well," replied the philosopher with a warm and peaceful smile, "I like the oyster."

Whatever may, or may not be true, this most thought-provoking book will help any who read. For those who accept revelation it is less needed, but it will do them good, as well as the agnostics and the materialists.

In the April number of The Advance Guard, Miss Alice Guernsey with her concise and explicit directions makes it possible for every boy and girl to see the great Columbian Exposition safely and profitably.

Among other excellent things to be found in the April issue is a story upon Hindu child slavery which is both instructive and pitifully interesting. The faces in the picture of four Hindu child widows emphasizes the sad truths of the story. Price one copy per annum, $.50.

DANESBURY HOUSE.

Our attention has been called to a recent publication of Rand, McNally & Co., of Chicago—"Danesbury House," which obtained the $500 prize of the Scottish Temperance League, and has been called the "Uncle Tom's Cabin" of the Temperance party, 305,000 copies being sold in England. The American edition has an introduction by Miss Willard and Lady Henry Somerset, who most heartily indorse the work. It may be obtained of the Woman's Temperance Publishing Association, The Temple, in cloth, $1; paper, 50 cents.

NEW LEAFLETS.

We have just published three new total abstinence leaflets, by Josephine R. Nichols. Numbers eleven, twelve and thirteen all upon the subject of "Beer," "Is Beer a Temperance Drink?" "Beer versus Food," "A Crusade against Beer," are the three titles. Give number eleven to your friend who claims "If we would have the country temperate we must make it a universal beer consuming country." Root out the superstition that there is nutriment in beer, with number twelve, and you will have inaugurated a crusade against the beer traffic which will be still more effective by a careful perusal of number thirteen.

Dr. Cushman is the superintendent of the Bethesda Mission, which is located in one of the worst sections of Chicago. If you want to know how to help just such people as she is helping there every day, send to the Woman's Temperance Publishing Association for a copy of the Bible reading for March, 1893, on "Convalescence."

FOR PITY'S SAKE.

This is the title of a new total abstinence leaflet, condensed from one bearing the same title, which is published by the B. W. T. A. It is a touching appeal in behalf of the weak and tempted ones, who cannot resist the deadly appetite, which overpowers their resolutions and makes a desolation of life.

ELECTION AT HARVEY.

The election at Harvey Tuesday passed off very quietly. There had been no excitement previous to the election from the fact that both tickets were representative men of the very best element in the village of Harvey, and the question of prohibition was not raised, although the successful ticket, headed by Mr. P. B. Lamb (which was called the Harvey Land Association ticket) was pledged to prohibition so far as the town of Harvey was concerned, and against the saloon. The fact is that a very large majority of the citizens of Harvey are against the saloon, but the question of prohibition as a political factor, so far as Harvey is concerned, is of very small moment, from the fact that it is impossible for saloons to get into the town, as all deeds for lots sold by the Harvey Land Association contain a covenant that no saloon shall ever be erected upon or occupy the property, and is made a condition of the sale.

CALIFORNIA.

The fame of the climate of California draws to that charming state new friends every year, particularly from sections where long, severe winters, followed by trying spring seasons, work such disastrous results among the weak and debilitated.

The great improvements in passenger train service, higher degrees of comfort in the cars, and shorter time required on the trip, combined with the cheapness of the excursion tickets now being sold to California and back by the Santa Fé Route, make the journey agreeable and, one can almost say, economical. The many delightful resorts now established in California afford every comfort and luxury desired by the fastidious, and present unique attractions.

The Hotel del Coronado at San Diego, the Raymond at Pasadena, the Redondo at Redondo Beach and the hotels at Santa Barbara, Monterey, Riverside, Los Angeles and many other points, have grown as famous as any on the Atlantic Coast—and a fact that should not be forgotten is that they are resorts all the year around, although the greatest number of people from the East are in California between the months of November and May.

Write to John J. Byrne, Asst. Passenger Traffic Manager, 723 Monadnock Block, Chicago, Ill., if you are interested in California, and he will send you some reading matter.

WHY?

National Leaflet No. 60, by Mrs. E. C. Read, answers the question, "Why you should be a W. C. T. U. woman." It will enable you to fortify yourself with arguments against the flimsy excuses of weak women, who are not members of this grand organization.

The new leaflet, No. 62, by Josephine R. Nichols, upon "Beer and the Brain," clearly demonstrates that beer influences the cerebral centers, even more than the stronger liquors, and that its claim to be a "promoter of good fellowship" is unfounded; its effect on rich and poor, cultured and ignorant, being "to make men vicious, arousing man's lower and more brutal nature, so that he often becomes a dangerous foe to his best friends."

The following letter was written by the business manager of "The Christian at Work," a well-known New York religious weekly, of large influence and circulation, after visiting the Sterlingworth Sanitarium and personally investigating the wonderful cures there being effected.

NEW YORK, N. Y., Mch. 21, '93.

MY DEAR MR. FRISBEE:—

My departure the other day was so hurried that I fear I expressed very inadequately my appreciation of all the courtesy extended to me during my visit. I am sure that the pleasure it afforded me, and the number of interesting features brought to my attention will be matters of delightful recollection for some time to come.

I had the good fortune to fall in with Mr. Fred. Clark, one of your patients, on the train going to Buffalo, and from his remarks I was able to verify fully much of the matter contained in your "Clinical Report." It was a source of much gratification to find that your work in many of the cases had been under rather than over-estimated, and Mr. Clark's whole report was creditable to you in every sense of the word. (He made his statements absolutely without any knowledge of my purpose in talking with him; in fact, I rather encouraged any confidences he might have had that would have been against the institution, and I was delighted to find how fully he sustained the excellent impression I had received of your work.)

I had an interview with Dr. Hallock this morning in relation to your affairs, and have succeeded in interesting him so far that he is already anxious to proceed to Lakewood, if he can possibly arrange to give his time to the investigation at this season. I have great hopes that he will be able to do so, and shall advise you in a day or two as to the decision. He has very carefully perused your literature, and can hardly credit the fact that such wonderful cures can be effected. I am satisfied that if he is once convinced, as he certainly must be if he visits you, he will prove a firm and useful friend to "Humanitas."

You can rely upon the fact that I shall use every effort to get him started in the course of a few days, and look forward to his conversion to our way of thinking.

Very truly yours,
HARRY HALL.

THE last of the Russian serfs have been freed from serfdom, the Kalmucks of Astrakhan.

THERE are men who would be willing to go on a mission to China who let their wives carry in all the stove wood.—Ram's Horn.

THE highest honor ever won by a woman as a medical student has been awarded to Miss Blake at the London University. She was "double first" in the examinations.

"IF you Christians were as good as your Book you would in five years conquer India for Christ," said a Brahmin recently to a Christian. Forcing opium and liquors upon them is not being "as good as one's book."

OH! Lord, Thou hast made me for Thyself, and my heart is restless till it rests on Thee. Take my heart for I cannot give it. Keep it for I cannot keep it, for Jesus Christ's sake. Amen.—St. Augustine's Prayer.

THE privilege of retailing liquor seems to be a profitable one even at the rate of $100 for a license, judging by Philadelphia, where three thousand three hundred and ninety applications have been filed for licenses.

THE new department in the McCall Missions in France is arousing great interest, namely the mission boat. France is intersected by canals and rivers, and a large part of the interior can be reached by means of the boats.

THE University of St. Andrews not only admits women as students at all classes including medicine, theology and sciences, but offers them a share in the pecuniary benefits, the women studying medicine even having the prior claim to the scholarships.

THE St. James Gazette is not a friend of prohibition, but it recently gave unimpeachable testimony to the fact that prohibition does prohibit. It spoke of America as being the land of the free according to our own testimony, but there are corners here where a man cannot do as he pleases. For instance, in the state of Maine, "You need to be as expert as a pickpocket and as wily as a company promoter before you can get a glass of beer."

IN Boston, England, one of the public-houses has an ancient sign representing two men smoking and drinking together, with the words: "We three were at loggerheads." A bright little Boston girl mentioned to her father that she had often wondered who was the third man, as there were but two figures in the picture. "Why, my child," he answered, "the third is the person who reads the inscription under the sign, and the intention is that he shall come in and be a 'jolly good fellow' with the rest." Moral:—The social feature of the saloon is its greatest fascination, and must be "offset" by the church. What better could the church do than to open its closed doors to the people all the year round; establish reading and assembly rooms in its lower story and have religious services, praise meetings and lectures every night in the week?

Naaman the Leper

whose strange cure is related in the Bible, is a type of many sick people to-day. They have naturally thought much of their case, and suffered much from its progress, and, therefore, feel that it will require some great thing to restore them—something not only great in power, but great in visible proportions also. This idea manifests itself in the desire for very strong and unpleasant medicine which many people express. It needs, however, but the recollection of the rough and tumble treatment of past years to convince one that the whole trend of medical progress is in line with the claim that the mild power subdues, and that natural rather than unnatural remedies restore.

What the sick person most needs is a cure; and he is indeed foolish and short-sighted who suffers any preconceived notions of the means to interfere with this much needed result.

Drs. Starkey & Palen's Compound Oxygen belongs to the class of natural remedies. It is not a pill, pellet or powder to rack the system, but on the contrary, only the air we breathe, enriched with more oxygen, (its life-giving element) and then magnetized. The method of its administration is natural also. It is not poured into the stomach, but inhaled into the lungs, and then taken with and by the blood to every needy part.

If there is anything in the world capable of proof, it is that this simple means and method has cured thousands of desperately sick people, and made thousands of weak and run-down people strong.

Yet not one of these had the discomfort in its use that would come with a single old-fashioned dose of castor oil. But one thing is certain, they were helped and cured.

If any sick or run-down person who cares more for restoration than heavy doctoring, will write us, they can learn who these people are, what they suffered from and how they were relieved; having free consultation on their own case, if desired. Address Drs. STARKEY & PALEN, 1529 Arch St., Philadelphia, or Chicago, San Francisco, New York, and Toronto, Ont.

CERTAIN ADVERTISEMENTS FROM TRADE RIVALS,
who fear the phenomenal success of

Van Houten's Cocoa

in America, contain innuendoes against it, and appeal to the authority of Dr. SYDNEY RINGER, Professor of Medicine at University College, London. Author of the Standard "Handbook of Therapeutics."

This eminent physician ACTUALLY writes as follows:—

"From the careful analyses of Professor ATTFIELD and others, I am satisfied that Messrs. VAN HOUTEN'S COCOA is in no way injurious to health, and that it is decidedly more nutritious than other Cocoas.—It is certainly "Pure" and highly digestible.

The quotations in certain advertisements from my book on Therapeutics are quite misleading and cannot possibly apply to VAN HOUTEN'S COCOA."

The false reflection on VAN HOUTEN'S COCOA is thus effectually repelled and the very authority cited to injure it, has thereby been prompted to give it a very handsome testimonial.

"I Believe I am Cured of Double Rupture."

Dr. Sir:—Nine years ago I was ruptured on my left side; for eight years I suffered, trying all kinds of steel and rigid Trusses, and until about a year ago the undue pressure of a steel Truss forced a rupture on the other side. Five months ago I sent to you for one of your Electro-Magnetic Trusses. Before putting on your Truss, I was so weak I could scarcely sit up. A few days' use of your Truss enabled me to go to work. Now my rupture does not come down any more, and I believe I am cured.
J. G. UPTHEGROVE, Manistee, Mich.

A Physician Says.

Dr. Sir:—After meeting with such good success by the use of your Electro-Magnetic Truss on Mr. W. J. Calhoun, prompts me to use one on a patient of mine here. He has worn the old kind of spring Trusses, but they do no good. I think yours will do the work.
NORTON BROKAW, M. D., St. Joseph, Mo.

"Its Effects are Wonderful."

Dr. Sir:—It is with great pleasure that I inform you that the Electric Truss bought of you a short time ago is giving entire satisfaction. 'Tis worn with so much ease, and its effects seem to be wonderful. Within a short time I will be entirely well.
W. A. KING, S. Greenfield, Mo.
Agent & Operator, Kansas City, Ft. Scott & Gulf R. R.

From Missouri.

Dr. Sir:—The eighteenth of March last I bought one of your Electric Trusses. It is helping me nicely, and will cure me by wearing it a little longer.
S. C. POUSH, Andover, Mo.

'I Consider it the Best Retainer I Ever Had.'

Dr. Sir:—The Truss you sold me some time ago gives me perfect satisfaction. I take pleasure in recommending it to all who suffer from rupture. I consider it the best retainer I ever had.
C. M. HAIGHT, Medford, Wis.

Rev. Thomas Swain, of Sodom, Ohio, says:

I have worn Dr. W. J. Horne's Electro-Magnetic Truss since the middle of March, 1885. Although not perfectly cured yet, still I can say the Electric Truss has helped me greatly, and I firmly believe it will cure me. I would recommend its use to all who are afflicted with Hernia, believing it a God-send to the suffering.
REV. THOMAS SWAIN, Sodom, O.

"The Best I Ever Tried."

Dr. Sir:—Your Electric Truss is the best I have ever tried. I have less headache and less pain in my back since I wore the Truss than I have had in a long time. I will speak well of your Truss to every one.
MONROE HOTT, Somerset, Ind.

"THOU HAST GIVEN A BANNER TO THEM THAT FEAR THEE; THAT IT MAY BE DISPLAYED BECAUSE OF THE TRUTH."

Volume XIX.—No. 18.] CHICAGO, May 4, 1893. [Price $1.00 per Year in Advance

SINCE OUR LAST ISSUE.

The World's Columbian Exposition was formally opened at Chicago last Monday.

News of a terrific cyclone, doing great damage to life and property, came from Oklahoma last week.

The Mississippi river and its tributaries have commenced their annual inundations, doing great damage.

The Young Woman's Christian Association met in fourth biennial convention at Toledo, Ohio, April 27-30.

May Day was observed by labor organizations in various cities of Europe; with few exceptions, order prevailed.

The whisky trust, which is said to be entering on a struggle for existence, has just reduced the price of spirits one cent a gallon.

Two statues have been unveiled in New York, one of Ericsson, the illustrious Swede, the other of John Jay Audubon, the great naturalist.

At a meeting of the national commission last week, the question of Sunday opening of the Fair was freely discussed and referred to the judiciary committee.

A new national holiday, the birthday of General Ulysses S. Grant, which occurred seventy-one years ago, was celebrated at his birthplace, Galena, Ill., April 27.

Another great Australian bank, having one hundred and fifty branches in Australia and agencies in many cities of Great Britain, the Continent and the United States, has failed.

The Woman's Presbyterian Board of Foreign Missions of the Northwest met last week in Burlington, Ia., with several hundred members in attendance, for its twenty-second annual convention.

The great naval review in connection with the World's Columbian Exposition took place at New York last Thursday, President Cleveland reviewing the fleet from the deck of the steamer Dolphin.

The office of the committee on awards for the World's Columbian Exposition was opened in the Administration Building last week, Hon. John Boyd Thacher, a national commissioner from New York, chairman.

THE act of Congress authorizing the formation of the World's Columbian Exposition with a local Directory, a National Commission composed of two representatives from each state and territory, and a Board of Lady Managers was passed April 25, 1890.

THE "round-up" of the Great Petition is near at hand. It will be on exhibition at the Columbian Exposition, during which names will be added, and will be afterwards presented as a gigantic object lesson to the rulers of the world. The need of influence to counteract the iniquitous traffic in rum and opium by the civilized governments of the earth is hourly growing. Let the prayers of every lover of mankind ascend for the downfall of this traffic and for an especial blessing on this Petition.

THE charter of the South Park commissioners contains some ordinances, which are a curious commentary upon the determination of the Columbian Exposition Company to sell liquor on the Fair grounds. Paragraph 72, Chapter VIII, forbids any person "being drunk in the park." Paragraph 84, Chapter IX, places the penalty for this offense "at not less than five nor more than one hundred dollars." Paragraph 34, Chapter V, declares "the police shall have power to arrest any person found in the act of violating such laws and ordinances, or aiding or abetting any such violation."

CONSIDERATION for our great clientelle compels us to declare that the Columbian Exposition is not ready for the inspection of visitors. We advise every reader to stay away at least one month. The tremendous and frequent storms of the past month and indeed the past winter have delayed the work of installation to such a degree that nothing but keen disappointment awaits the eager and studious visitor. The grounds are in fairly good condition and the buildings exteriorly, are finished, and beautiful enough to repay a journey across the continent, but more than this we cannot truthfully say. No building was entirely ready for visitors on opening day and everywhere were evidences of hurried and temporary preparations. If you must come in May or not at all, we say, come, but if possible, defer your visit until June or even until October rather than suffer the disappointment and inconvenience of half installed exhibits and poorly provided transportation and restaurant accommodations.

"SMOKING Prohibited" is a frequent sign on the Exposition and Plaisance grounds, but "Smoking Permitted" is the recognized though unwritten code of the dining halls of the Exposition. With the nauseating smoke curling up in great clouds around one's head and the popping of corks everywhere in the blackened air, as was the case in the Wellington restaurant of Horticultural Hall on opening day, one could easily locate himself in the beer-gardens of Germany or the Wein-staube of Austria, with the less satisfactory substitution of glass ceiling for blue sky and board wall for green trees. On the whole we believe we prefer (on the ground "of two evils choose the less") the open beer-garden. Have America and American restaurants come to this? We protested to the manager of the above restaurant, and he replied coolly, "There has been no objection so far." We then and there registered objection number one, and here give the facts to our great constituency, that they may register objections enough to show that American women will not meekly submit to such a foreign innovation as beer-garden manners in a dining hall for men and women. Object, OBJECT, OBJECT!

NO POINT in the Woman's Building will be visited by our white-ribboners with greater interest than the World's and National W. C. T. U. exhibit in the north pavilion. This is under the able supervision of Mrs. Josephine R. Nichols, World's W. C. T. U. superintendent of fairs and expositions, who had in charge our exhibits at the Paris Exposition and at New Orleans. In the World's department, beautiful banners from various countries are displayed, and groups of the World's W. C. T. U. workers, in photographs and large framed portraits. Histories of the W. C. T. U. in different lands, and temperance literature of all kinds are exhibited. The National W. C. T. U. and the Y Branch are well represented, the former by banners, large framed pictures of the National officers and photographs of the National superintendents and organizers, and by bound volumes containing the history of W. C. T. U. work in the various states, as well as other literature. The Y's have a large framed portrait of their General Secretary, a finely bound volume containing the annual reports and Y. W. C. T. U. manual, and a pretty literature souvenir in the form of a Y—a pledge card for free distribution. The exhibit will be the pride of visiting white-ribboners, and as much of "the wherewithal" to defray needed expense is still lacking, we feel sure that our state unions will respond promptly to the call and send ten or twenty dollars for this fund to Mrs. Josephine Nichols at the exhibit or to Mme. E. L. Demorest, 21 E. 57th St., New York City.

DESPITE the fact that the Exposition directors have announced that liquor would be sold only in connection with restaurants, where meals are served, the Pabst Milwaukee Beer Company have issued a diagram of the Exposition, marking with red ink the buildings in which its beer will be sold, and declares, "as our product is to be sold in all exhibition buildings, it is probable our friends will have no difficulty in finding us." Fifteen buildings are thus marked! Is it possible that this brazen company will be permitted to sell its soul and body destroyer in buildings erected to testify to the glory of man's achievement and the prosperity of a God-fearing people!

PHILADELPHIA holds in high estimate the historic Liberty Bell, which is one of the few precious historic relics of our country. Great wonder it was then to the waiting populace in Chicago's busy streets last Saturday to see this silver tongued memento of revolutionary days borne to its place of exhibition in the Pennsylvania Building with honors perhaps never before accorded a piece of inanimate metal. A mounted guard of forty-four policemen attended it, representing the states and territories; preceding it was a body of cavalrymen, thirteen in number on black horses, symbolizing the thirteen original states. Philadelphia's municipal escort, with state and local dignitaries, followed in carriages. The vehicle containing the bell was beautifully trimmed with a canopy of natural flowers surmounted by the "bird of freedom," and several custodians stood within it, carefully guarding the precious property, which was carried along amid the shouts and hurrahs of the people. Patriotic demonstrations greeted the old Liberty Bell at every station on the route and rightly, too, for never again, say the zealous Philadelphians, will the precious relic be taken from its niche in old Independence Hall. Surely we can rejoice and be filled with hope at such evidence of genuine patriotism!

PROHIBITION around the World's Fair grounds is just now a topic of absorbing interest to every public-spirited citizen of Chicago as well as to every opposer of the drink traffic. There is a clean spot in this city of seven thousand and fifty-three saloons, and that, fortunately, is in the immediate vicinity of Jackson Park, the site of the Fair, in the former village of Hyde Park. When this village was annexed to the city in 1889, it was agreed that the prohibitory laws of the district should remain inviolate. But very soon the insatiate greed of the liquor-seller manifested itself in a suit brought by a restaurant proprietor against the mayor to compel him to issue a liquor license. This litigation was carried to the supreme court of the state and resulted in victory for prohibition. Two years later a petition, signed by the necessary number of names, one-fourth of the entire voting population, was presented to the city council for the submission of license to the voters of the district. By a fortunate discovery, more than one-half the names on this petition were proved to be fraudulent. The timely exposure of the infamous fraud killed the wicked attempt and registered victory number two. The present form of attack is to invade the prohibitory district by a secret and reckless sale of intoxicants in the myriads of restaurants, hotels and boarding houses that crowd the region of the Fair grounds. There will probably be no attempt to secure a license, so that "eternal vigilance" will be the "price of liberty" from the death-dealing beverage. The Hyde Park Protective Association, whose spokesman is Rev. Arthur Skeele, has entered vigorously upon the campaign for the third victory.

FOUR HUNDRED YEARS AGO—AND NOW.

BY KATHARINE LENTE STEVENSON.

White sails sped swift o'er unknown seas
West bound, four hundred years ago;
Glad sails that caught each favoring breeze,
That laughed, though winds blew high or low;
For Hope and Courage led that fleet,
And Faith sublime, and Purpose grand;
The fiercest storm could but repeat
To such an one the pledge of land.

Storm-tossed and harborless they sailed
Where ne'er before had ventured prow:
The stoutest heart might well have quailed:—
His lordly courage did not bow.
The God above who honors faith
Such faith divine could ne'er withstand;
"Believe and ye shall have"—He saith;—
Columbus' self was pledge of land.

If need were, God's creative word
Had called new shores to being there
Ere he had suffered, as unheard,
To rise to heaven such faith-filled prayer.
Long ere the vision crossed his ken
Its substance God held safe in store;
His own as fully then, as when
He knelt to kiss the new-found shore.

To-day a new ship sails God's deep:
God's deepest deep of purpose true;
About her prow mad billows leap,
Above her soars the fadeless blue;
Against the sky her white sails gleam,
Her tall masts tower to stateliest height;
Almost she seems a beauteous dream
As on she sweeps in radiant might.

And Hope and Courage lead her, too,
And Faith sublime, and Purpose grand;
No coward heart in all her crew,
Not one who doubts we'll find the land.
The land where right shall wed with might,
Where God's will shall be fully done;
Where shines undimmed truth's glorious light,
Where each bears likeness to the Son.

A land where wrongs are crushed for aye,
Where courage fills each fainting heart;
Where all the children of the day
Shall dare to act the Christ-like part;
A land of peace, a land of song,
A land of gladness full and free;
That land for which all true hearts long,
The land God wills each land to be.

What though the storm beat mad about?
What though the forkéd lightnings play?
Our ship, God-built, is staunch and stout,
She sails straight on, by night, by day.
On through the maddened billows' foam,
On, past each rock and treacherous sand;
She laughs to scorn the storm's wild moan,
While rent sails shout the pledge of—land.

We shall find land: let doubters doubt,
Let sneering scoffers still gainsay;
Our faith puts each dark fear to rout;
We know Who guides our onward way.
Our being is glad earnest still
That what we seek God holds in store:
Look, yonder gleam the future's hills;
Courage, our bark shall touch the shore.

A HIGH IDEAL.

BY MRS. O. W. SCOTT.

Paul Lockhart was walking rapidly toward the station, where he was to take his train for B——.

A representative gathering was to be held in the city that evening—a patriotic, high-toned affair—and he was to be one of the speakers. This was a great honor for so young a man, and he felt it all through his finely strung organism. How he had worked over his speech! He had condensed years of history into terse sentences, had culled from the critical epochs of many nations their heroic elements, and combined poetic imagery with practical argument that he might exalt America—his America—to the pinnacle of national perfection. It was a beautiful enthusiasm because it was real.

During his college course, Paul had been known as "The American Ideal" because of his tendency to make national questions his theme for oration and essay. His discussions of civil service, tariff and kindred topics were considered "standard" by the men of his class and society, while older men in scholastic circles were accustomed to look at him with that half-envious, half-pitying expression with which experienced age surveys impetuous and optimistic youth. Sometimes they nodded wisely and said: "Wait a few years!"

But thus far Paul had not been greatly affected by the "cooling-off" process, supposed to indicate a hardening of material and immaterial substances. He was the same enthusiastic, hopeful, loyal soul as when, years before, he began to receive "rewards of merit" for "conduct good and lessons learned."

So, as he walked down Euclid avenue, his hands were vibrant with suppressed emotion and his lips moved from very excess of imprisoned thought—thought, concentrated, just now, upon his speech.

It was one of those balmy spring afternoons when one is glad to be alive, and his quick eye noted every green lawn and every brilliant tulip bed. He was conscious, too, of the perfume from flowering shrubs and opening buds, and enjoyed it all, as only those can who are "born into" the kingdom of beauty.

Turning at length from the street of lovely homes, Paul gradually neared the station. It is a curious fact that in many towns that important public building called the depot is located amid most unpleasant surroundings, as though for some reason the beauty of the place must be completely disguised and hidden from the traveling public. They look out upon dirty streets, dingy tenement houses and saloons and ask: "Is this Arcadia?" Ah! no! it is Arcadia's catch-all, rag-bag and "dump." Paul had a sense of this needless incongruity as he hastened past a row of grocery saloons, where barrels and unappetizing fruit stands encroached upon the sidewalk.

He was within a few rods of his destination when a little girl with tangled hair blowing over her eyes, and a tin pail held aloft, darted across the street directly in front of a hack which was rapidly nearing the station. The driver pulled his horses back upon their haunches and Paul sprang forward to catch the child who fell heavily against the curbing at his feet. The pail cover flew off at that instant, drenching the sleeves of his new spring overcoat, his immaculate cuffs and gloves with foaming beer.

"Hi! look at 'im now," cried a street urchin. "Look at the beer wasted on them fine clothes!"

"Nothin's too good fer him," drawled another. "He's one of the fellers that wants the world with a gold fence 'round it."

Paul tried to help the little girl to her feet but it was evident that she was badly hurt.

"Come, now, won't you take her home?" he asked turning toward the boys.

"She don't belong to us," they replied, edging farther away.

The train came thundering in. Our friend saw that in his present plight a later train was inevitable; and, yielding to the force of circumstances and a tender heart, he picked up the crying child and inquired of the little knot of idlers that had collected, where her home was.

"Right up over that s'loon," replied one of the sidewalk statues, advancing with unsteady footsteps, and pointing down an alley near by.

Seeing an acquaintance across the street, Paul asked him to send a physician, and then climbed the narrow outer staircase which led to the home "over the s'loon."

A woman opened the door in response to the child's cries. "Your little girl fell on the pavement and has hurt herself badly, I am afraid," explained Paul. "A doctor will be here soon; where shall I lay her?"

The woman shuffled toward a bed, exclaiming as she did so, "Katie, stop your noise or I'll slap ye! Where's that tin pail?"

The bed was already occupied by the father who appeared to be in a drunken stupor, and Katie clung to her new friend in evident terror of the insensible form. Her mother saw it and jerked her from his arms, administering as she did so the threatened "slap."

"Don't cry, little girl," said Paul kindly, "the doctor will be here soon."

"Who's goin' to pay doctor's bills?" said the dreadful woman standing before him with arms akimbo.

"I'll see to that; good-day!" and Paul turned away, but did not escape the torrent of profane and abominable language which was hurled after him. Almost choked with the odors of that close, filthy room, he hurried into the region of fresh air and sunshine. Less than ten minutes had been consumed by this wayside happening, but Paul felt as though he had had a glimpse of another world.

In the parlor at home his sister Claudia and her dearest friend, Sibyl, had remained after he left them, discussing, as women will, their hero's prospect of surpassing all other speech-makers that evening, and deciding unanimously in his favor. They had hardly finished this congenial topic when they saw him hurriedly crossing the lawn, and both sprang to the door.

"Why, Paul, what is the matter? Look at his cuffs, Sibyl—and his coat! And what do I smell?" cried Claudia, elevating her delicate nose.

"Let me get these wet things off and I'll give you all the particulars," he replied.

Fifteen minutes later he was satisfying their curiosity, while they sat near, each mending a glove to take the place of the beer-soaked, ruined pair.

"What a shame to have such an interruption just now!" exclaimed Sibyl, sympathetically. "Such striking contrasts destroy the symmetrical adjustment of things cruelly, don't they?"

"But the worst feature of it, in my opinion, is the knowledge that such degradation exists; that, however 'symmetrical' our 'adjustments' may be, we know and cannot forget that just around the corner or on the next street there are such wicked, wretched people. I have thought of it more this year than ever before. I think I know how the mother of a large family feels when she expects company. She wants her children to do uncommonly well, but feels sure they will be horrid. So this year when Mother Columbia wants everybody on good behavior, it seems as though they were getting into all sorts of trouble," said Claudia, who was very apt to use special cases to illustrate something she had already "thought out" on general lines.

Paul was gazing thoughtfully into space, but replied with assumed carelessness: "If 'Mother Columbia' could decapitate a few thousand of her graceless children I think she could play the hostess' part to better advantage."

"Why, Paul Lockhart!" cried Claudia. "Do I live to hear such sentiments from your lips? Do you take the ground that our boasted civilization has got no farther than taking off people's heads by way of reform?"

"Reform a jelly fish!" exclaimed Paul, emphatically. "What I mean is that there are people with so little brain, with such weak wills and flabby muscles that there is nothing to reform. I tell you, Claudia, I can't forget how that woman looked. Faugh! what kind of a mother is she? And it flashed upon me after I left that corner of Gehenna, that thousands and thousands of children are born in such places—born to drink and lie, and swear and —drink. I didn't want to think of such things. I didn't want to believe they actually existed. It made me feel that my speech would be sounding brass and tinkling cymbal."

Claudia was a little older than Paul, and, being differently constituted, had seen the shadows as well as the sunshine of life. But this mood, so strange in him, troubled her. She spoke cautiously, after a little silence. "Isn't it just possible that you have shut your eyes to what was distasteful and wrong? The patriot isn't a man who simply admires his country, is he? And a statesman, of course you know more about it than I do, but it seems to me our great statesmen were those who recognized and admitted that there were evils, and so sympathized with the people whose cause they pleaded."

"I know, I know, Claudia, but this is a special occasion; and I wouldn't have been so thrown off my base for a hundred dollars. You know there are to be several distinguished gentlemen from abroad at the meeting to-night. You wouldn't wish me to enumerate our imperfections in their hearing, would you?" and Paul, splendid fellow that he was, spoke as petulantly as any other man, because he could not banish from his mind a child's face wet with tears, nor forget the clinging arms, helpless in their misery, which represented to him the Appeal of the Helpless.

"No," said Claudia slowly, as though searching for words. "I would not wish you to reveal family failings, but won't they see for themselves that we are not an absolutely perfect people? Won't they see that intemperance and Sabbath breaking and other evils are actually flourishing here? It does seem to me, Paul, that it is better to honestly admit that we have not yet fully attained unto our high ideal. And I think, too, if they could see that the success we have won has sprung from the Gospel of Christ, and could understand that our failures are simply failures to apply the principles of that gospel to every problem—yes, to every problem—if you could just make them see that one fact in our national life, you would give them a higher inspiration than all your eloquence can suggest."

Claudia's eyes were very bright, and they were looking bravely into her brother's as she closed. Paul glanced at Sibyl. Her face was tenderly responsive, and she bowed gravely in answer to his mute question.

"Come, Claudia, go down and make my speech for me to-night," said he, covering her hand with his as he took his glove. "Between that little beggar on the street and you two girls I'm completely shattered. What! the six o'clock train due in twenty minutes? Well, here goes for a failure! Good-bye," and again Paul started for the station.

The morning papers gave very full reports of the great meeting, and our friend's speech was called "truly eloquent," "magnetic" and "wonderfully suggestive." But perhaps we can get a better idea of what it really was from the conversation of two white-haired men, who belonged to the rapidly decreasing number of old-time philanthropists.

Before Paul was born and during his very early youth they had been in honorable public service. Their memories were of days historic, when great moral questions developed a statesmanship now admired as among the things that were, and they longed to see once more leaders wise, unselfish, heroic—true lovers of their country.

"Columbian year means more to us than I thought it would," said Mr. Percival, his hands crossed upon his gold-headed cane. "Our young folks are learning more history than they would in five ordinary years."

"Yes, yes," responded his friend Dillingham, "and they are taking part in a momentous bit of history themselves. That the older nations are coming to this new world as friends, to consider matters which concern the entire human race, is truly wonderful. It is reversing the Tower of Babel scene and restoring the old family ties. I tell you, Percival, that young Lockhart gave us some new ideas along this line, last night."

"Indeed he did," was the hearty response. "I couldn't help calling him a prophet when he reached that climax, and repeated: 'Prepare ye the way of the Lord, make His paths straight.' I came pretty near saying, 'Why, bless your heart, young man, that's just what we want, straight paths!' Then as he went on sketching the ideal national life, I concluded the time had come when old men should see visions, for I am sure I had a vision of what this land might be with Christ as King."

"It was rather unusual to hear so young a man as Lockhart advocating a political righteousness founded on the Golden Rule, wasn't it?"

"Yes, but you and I know it is the true philosophy and I only hope he will be able to live up to it."

"If he does," said Mr. Dillingham, "I congratulate the future." And his friend added:

"If he does," with a half skeptical shake of his white head.

The face of the young man who had taken a seat just behind them flushed hotly as he gazed steadily at his morning paper, but there was a responsive thrill of heart and lip which said: "By the grace of God, he will."

WANTED, OTHER COLUMBUSES!

BY AMOS R. WELLS.

In a dull and stagnant age, anniversaries, those "years of turning," set men to regarding wistfully the splendid past. In times of eager progress, on the contrary, an anniversary either affords leisure and occasion for boasting of the present, or prompts men to speculate on the promise of the future.

Much has been written, during these last two years, about the doughty Admiral. Historians, philosophers, magazine editors, and other folk of serious minds have appealed most urgently to our historic consciousness, but, alas! we are too much interested in 1893 to have a historic consciousness. What do we care about the Cabots and the Drakes,—nay, about Columbus himself,—while Edison works at Menlo Park?

Spain's reproduction of those fateful, history-making caravels we'll look at with delight,—they make such a fine foil to our new navy! The Duke of Veragua, in whose veins flows the very blood of the great discoverer, we receive with high honors; we are glad to have the chance of showing off America to this descendant of Columbus. We ransack the past for illustrations of petty beginnings in order that the present may look bigger to us.

And all this, while it may raise a smile among our old world visitors who have a historic consciousness, and celebrate anniversaries that really look backward, yet it is, after all, precisely the finest, and brightest, and most hopeful part of this great Exposition. The manufacture of noble history is better even than the noblest historic consciousness, provided we cannot have both at once.

If we are loth to devote our anniversary enthusiasm to nosing around the dark galleries of the past, let us utilize it in blazing new paths, looking back on our outworn palaces only to sight from them. Let the thought of the Columbus whose year this is, set us to thinking of the greater Columbuses whose the coming century may be.

Oh, that some Lick telescope could disclose them, coming toward us down the shining years—men of might, women of strength, discoverers of the new worlds yet to be! There is Columbus Secundus, who will pilot a greater Santa Maria to the land of the Golden Rule, where men will not ask, "For how little will you do it?" but, "How much is it right to pay?" where the rich man will be his poor brother's keeper, and the poor man his rich brother's keeper; where men will be ashamed not to labor and the state ashamed not to give them work; where caste will hide his head, and all our social problems be solved by love. Oh, for a sight of Columbus Secundus! Where does he hide—or she?

There is Columbus Tertius, the light of heaven in his eyes: who will follow His star in the East until it stands over the One Church—Christ's "many in one" for which He prayed. There will be different members, but one body; different sects, but no schism; different denominations, but one domination; many forms, as the leaves and branches vary on the one tree, but no ambitions save for the single Lord, and no duplications or clashings of effort. Where is this Columbus, verily Christ-ofer, "Christ-bearing"? Where is he—or she?

There is Columbus Quartus, robed in dazzling white, whose heaven-directed rudder will drive straight, some glad day, into the haven of purity, with all our sons and daughters on board. He will have tossed overboard the last whisky bottle, the last opium box, the last quivering, reeking story, the last cigarette, the last instrument of unmentionable vice. And his beautiful passengers will step on shore with white, pure, strong bodies, wherein can dwell the glorious Spirit of God. Where waits Columbus Quartus? Who will bring him forth—or her?

Ah, they press more closely, a crowd of eager Columbuses! One has found the New Education, that will teach men wisdom as well as knowledge, and educate for the next century in heaven as well as for the next decade on earth. One has discovered the New Literature, wherein nothing is for show, nothing for fashion, nothing for hire, nothing for passion, but every word as sincere, as life-disclosing and life-giving as the words of Christ. One has fallen upon the New Wealth that can be stored up in heaven. One has found the New Civilization, based, not on competition, but on compassion. One has discovered the New Government, which is not a Republic, but the Kingdom for whose coming we daily pray.

My masters, Columbuses of the age to come, could you visit the World's Fair with the Duke of Veragua, who, I wonder, would receive most honor from the crowd? Or, would we all run off to see what Edison had to show us?

HILLSBORO CRUSADE SKETCHES.

BY MRS. ELIZA J. THOMPSON.

I.

Volumes have been written, and speeches without number made, setting forth most graphically the "Crusade of woman against rum." Yet strange to say the call comes with greater and still greater earnestness to the leader of the little "band of seventy," "Tell us more about the beginning of the Crusade in Hillsboro, and give us all the incidents connected with it, for the story must not die with the veterans of 1873 and 1874." As the shadows lengthen, and the number of that band counts fewer, we are reminded that what we do, we must do quickly.

Many years ago a friend wrote to me for a brief but plain account of the facts in connection with the starting of the Crusade in our town, and of my connection with it. Supposing at the time that it was for her own personal interest merely, I wrote freely, withholding no part of the truth, as it occurred.

That narrative was adopted by Miss Willard in her work,—"Woman and Temperance"—and has become the "old, old story." After all these years I could not change the "facts and figures," and might not change the diction to profit, therefore with slight additions will furnish it as the first of the promised series of Crusade sketches from the "Old Fort."

On the evening of December 22, 1873, Dio Lewis, a Boston physician and lyceum lecturer, delivered in Music Hall, Hillsboro, Ohio, a lecture on "Our Girls." He had been engaged by the Lecture Association some months before to fill one place in the winter course of lectures, merely for the entertainment of the people, but finding that he could remain another evening and still reach his next appointment (Washington Court-house) he consented to give another lecture on the evening of the 23d. At the suggestion of Judge Albert Matthews, an old-line temperance man and Democrat, a free lecture on temperance became the order of the evening.

Dr. Lewis was our guest until the morning of the 23d, when my brother, Col. Wm. H. Trimble, took him to his beautiful "Woodland" home, intending to send him across the country to Washington Court-house in his own carriage on the morning of the 24th.

I did not hear Dio Lewis lecture because of home cares that required my presence, but my son, a youth of seventeen, was there, and he came to me upon his return home and in a most earnest manner related the thrilling incidents of the evening, how Dr. Lewis told of his own mother and several of her good Christian friends uniting in prayer with and for the liquor sellers of his native town until they gave up their soul-destroying business, and said: "Ladies, you might do the same thing in Hillsboro, if you had the same faith," and then, turning to the ministers and temperance men who were upon the platform, added: "Suppose I ask the ladies of this audience to signify their opinions upon the subject?" They all bowed their consent, and fifty or more women stood up in token of approval. He then asked the gentlemen how many of them would stand as "backers," should the ladies undertake the work, and sixty or seventy arose. "And, now, mother," said my boy, "they have got you into business, for you are on some committee to do work at the Presbyterian church in the morning, and then the ladies expect you to go out with them to the saloons."

My husband, who had returned from Adams county court that evening, and was feeling very tired, seemed asleep as he rested upon the couch, while my son, in an undertone, had given me all the above facts; but as the last sentence was uttered, he raised himself up upon his elbow and said: "What tomfoolery is all that?" My dear boy slipped out of the room quietly, and I betook myself to the task of consoling his father with the promise that I should not be led into any foolish act by Dio Lewis or any association of human beings, but added: "If the Lord should show me that it was His will for the women to visit places where liquors were sold and drank, I should not shrink from it."

After some time my husband relaxed into a milder mood, continuing to call the whole plan, as he understood it, "tomfoolery." I ventured to remind him that the men had been in the "tomfoolery" business a long time, and suggested that it might be God's will that the women should now take their part. After this the poor man fell asleep quietly and I resumed my Bible reading.

Nothing further was said upon the subject that had created such interest the night before, until after breakfast, when we gathered in the "family room." First, my son approached me and gently placing his hand upon my shoulder in a very subdued tone said, "Mother, are you not going over to the church this morning?" As I hesitated, and doubtless showed in my countenance the burden upon my spirit, he emphatically said, "But, my dear mother, you know you have to go." Then my daughter who was sitting on a stool by my side, leaning over in a most tender manner, and looking up in my face, said, "Don't you think you will go?" All this time my husband had been walking the floor, uttering not a word. He stopped, and placing his hand upon the family Bible that lay upon my work-table, said with emphasis, "Children, you know where your mother goes to settle all vexed questions. Let us leave her alone," withdrawing as he spoke and the dear children following him.

I turned the key and was in the act of kneeling before God and His holy word, to see what would be sent me, when I heard a gentle tap at my door; upon opening it, I saw my dear daughter with her little Bible open, and the tears coursing down her young cheeks, as she said, "I opened to this, mother. It must be for you." She immediately left the room, and I sat down to read the wonderful message of the great "I am" contained in the 146th Psalm.

And as I read, new meaning seemed to attach to those promises (so often read before) and the Spirit said, "This is the way, walk ye in it." No longer doubting I quickly repaired to the Presbyterian church, and took my seat near the door. Several of my lady friends came and urged me to go up to the front. While hesitating, I was unanimously chosen as president or leader, Mrs. Gen. McDowell, vice-president, and Mrs. D. K. Fenner, secretary of the strange work that was to follow.

Appeals were drawn up to druggists, saloon-keepers and hotel proprietors. Then the Presbyterian minister (Dr. McSurely) who had up to this time occupied the chair, called upon the chairman-elect to "come forward to the post of honor." But your humble servant could not; her limbs refused to bear her. The dear ladies offered me assistance, but it was not God's time. My brother, Colonel Trimble, observing my embarrassed situation, said to Dr. McSurely, "I believe the ladies will do nothing until the gentlemen of the audience leave the house!"

After some moments Dr. McSurely said, "I believe Col Trimble is right; brethren, let us adjourn and leave this work with God and the women."

As the last man closed the door after him, strength before unknown came to me, and without any hesitation or consultation I walked forward to the minister's table, took the large Bible, and, opening it, explained the incidents of the morning; then read, and briefly (as my tears would allow) commented upon its new meaning to me.

I then called upon Mrs. McDowell to lead in prayer, and such a prayer! It seemed as though the angel had brought down "live coals" from off the altar and touched her lips; she who, by her own confession, had never before heard her own voice in prayer!

As we rose from our knees (for all were kneeling that morning) I asked Mrs. Cowden, our M. E. minister's wife, a grand, good singer of the "olden style," to start the favorite hymn, "Give to the Winds thy Fears," to the familiar tune of St. Thomas, and turning to the dear women, I said: "As we all join in singing this hymn, let us form in line, two and two, the small women in front leaving the tall ones to bring up the rear, and let us at once proceed to our sacred mission, trusting alone in the 'God of Jacob.'"

It was all done in less time than it takes to write it; every heart was throbbing and every woman's countenance betrayed her solemn realization of the fact that she was "going about her Father's business."

As this band of "mysterious beings" first encountered the outside gaze, and as they passed from the door of the old church and reached the street beyond the large churchyard, they were singing these prophetic words:

"Far, far above thy thought,
His counsel shall appear,
When fully He the work hath wrought
That caused thy needless fear."

On we marched in solemn silence, looking neither to the right nor left until we arrived at the drug store of Dr. William Smith, on East Main Street. Mrs. Milton Boyd had been appointed to read "the appeal" on that morning and proceeded to do so.

From the minutes so carefully kept by our secretary, Mrs. D. K. Fenner, we extract the following:

"Dr. Wm. Smith, after much persuasion, signed the druggist's pledge, with the understanding that he, as a physician, had a right to prescribe liquor and sell on his own prescription.

"Seybert and Isamen signed very willingly and assured the ladies of their good wishes.

"Mr. James Brown, (Sr.) signed also willingly.

"Mr. Wm. H. H. Dunn postponed his decision."

Before entering upon the visitations that followed with our readers,—we yield to the wishes of many friends, and (at the risk of seeming tedious and personal) in our next chapter will give the story of the "Crusade Hymn"—and why it was chosen as the marching song of the women on that memorable morning.

TWO WONDERFUL EPOCHS.

BY B. O. FLOWER.

The discovery of America which we are now celebrating suggests two wonderful epochs in the world's history, epochs abounding in striking parallels and rich in suggestive hints.

The century commencing with 1450 and extending to 1550 was one of the most memorable, and in many respects the most important hundred years in the history of European civilization. It was an epoch of intellectual, social and religious unrest, much like the present day. The fall of Constantinople before the victorious advance of the Mohammedans had led to the establishment of great schools of learning in Florence, whence numbers of Greek scholars had taken refuge when the Crescent floated over the Bosporus. These schools revived interest in Grecian thought and philosophy; indeed, they gave to the hungry mind of Western Europe a new world of intellectual health.

Then arose what is termed the New Learning, which fired many of the best brains of Continental Europe and spread to England, finding a hospitable reception at Oxford. Colet, Erasmus, Sir Thomas Moore, and scores of others were, through its magical power, spiritually awakened. To these wonderfully receptive natures it was like the light which overcame Paul on his way to Damascus. It touched and illumined their souls. Thenceforth they became consecrated to truth. A higher and truer realization of Christianity was the dream which filled their souls. A pure and united church and an educated and enlightened people was the ideal which haunted them, leading Colet to establish the first grammar school in England; Erasmus to wander far and near to teach the new truth; while from Sir Thomas Moore's luminous brain leaped "Utopia."

Ten years before (1440) this wonderful century of which I write opened, Gutenburg invented printing. Thirty years later it became possible for others than the very rich to have books and thus learn to read. Here again we had a power which quickened the thought of the world. In this century Columbus gave to Europe a new world and Copernicus a new heaven. The church was never so rich and perhaps never so corrupt; pomp, show, ceremonials—these characterized the dominant religion—it was at this time that St. Peter's began to rear her mighty walls, and it was also in this wonderful century that Genius kissed the brow of a Michael Angelo and a Raphael. It was during this period that a Luther spoke and the reformation was born. Nor was Luther alone in his protest: Zwingli, Calvin and Knox electrified the multitude by a sincerity and nobleness of thought which if sometimes severely austere was little less than sublime when seen in the light of the wanton licentiousness and vice which then paraded under the gorgeous mantle of Rome. Truly this was a marvelous epoch. An age of unrest, of discontent, of growth. Moreover, it seems especially interesting to us, for we seem to be passing, though on a higher ground, over the same part of the circle traversed by this epoch.

If of Columbus we can say,

"Toward the west he cast his longing view,
As with his chart and astralobe in hand,
He mused upon that undiscovered land.
Then spake: 'Here is one world,—let there be two.'"

Of our own Cyrus Field we can also say,

"Toward the east, beneath the kindly sun,
Gazed one in after years whom science taught.
He mused upon a thing his brain had wrought,
Then spake: 'Here are two worlds,—let there be one.'"

If Copernicus gave us a new heaven or changed the conception of the civilized world in regard to the universe, Darwin has given the world a new theory of the development of life which is rapidly being accepted by leading thinkers in every walk in life. If Gutenburg stimulated thought and shed abroad knowledge by his printing press, the great steam press, the railroad and the telegraph wire of our age are diffusing knowledge all over the face of the globe. In education Colet's grammar school was little less of an innovation than was our kindergarten for the young when first introduced, and paralleling the New Learning of that century we find in our day on every hand a wonderful quickening in spiritual thought.

The Altruistic spirit was never so strong in the hearts of the noble, the earnest and the true. In place of the austere and often severe and repulsive conception of Calvin, such men as Drummond, Farrar and Abbott are preaching a gospel of love, and as yet the period which parallels the century of which I have spoken has not half elapsed. What will the next fifty years bring forth? Another Reformation? I believe it will. The hour is ripe for a holy new crusade for human brotherhood and a higher civilization; a battle for JUSTICE, PURITY and LOVE.

1. For justice for all mankind. We must wage a determined warfare for the oppressed millions who are now in retreat or we will have to face a cataclysm, and this truth cannot be too impressively brought home to the conscience of the people. The slums or cellars of our cities are swarming with civilization's miserables. Our great farming regions are the scenes of a ceaseless grind and struggle for a foothold, while through class laws and special legislation a few are growing so rich that they can paralyze trade at will, influence legislation, and indulge in wanton dissipation and extravagance. If the money thus spent had been earned the case would not be so glaringly offensive, but the fact remains that almost every great fortune of our land to-day is the result of, first, unearned increment; second, speculation, or some form of gambling; or, third, special privileges made possible by class legislation or resulting from monopolies, trusts and combines. The vast fortunes of our money kings have been chiefly acquired, rather than earned, and the serious fact must be faced. The contention of the struggling toilers under the wheel is just, and, as true men and women, we must make their cause ours.

2. For purity. Again we are everywhere confronted by that most fatal of all poisons to individuals, nations, or civilizations—immorality. It always flourishes where great wealth enervates manhood, leads to criminal ostentation and unhealthy extravagance, as well as at the other social extreme where dire poverty forces our fellow men to herd in close quarters. Such conditions exist in our land to-day, and the attending impurity is constantly coming to the surface.

All who are in touch with the fashionable and frivolous in our great cities know how low is the standard of purity which satisfies many who pride themselves on being eminently respectable, especially among the men of "high society." In the terrible revelations in the divorce courts we also not infrequently catch glimpses of conditions which are ominous. The extent of this most dangerous evil is further seen in the startling exhibitions of low ideals among college youths, which from time to time come to the surface, as on Thanksgiving night in New York last year, when hundreds of Princeton and Yale students indulged in the most disgraceful debauchery, trailing every sentiment of true manhood and honor in the mire of drunken, sensual abandon.

These facts which constantly come to light reveal conditions the gravity of which it would be difficult to overestimate. In the slums, there is less opportunity and less desire to cover up impurity, and the social student is constantly horrified by sickening scenes of degradation. No civilization can long live when the spiritual is dethroned by the sensual, and immorality once tolerated by a society rapidly infects a people. When the higher aspirations succumb before the passional instincts of a civilization, its very soul flies from the polluted sanctuary. This is one of the most impressive lessons of history.

Now we have in our midst this element of decay; but it is not too late to save the Republic if we consecrate our lives to the great labor of awakening the conscience of our people. The spiritual perception must be quickened, and this work requires pure lives consecrated to one of the noblest crusades ever waged for the highest civilization. And in order to accomplish the best results we must go to the fountain-head, find the primal causes and then direct our best efforts for purity. Heretofore, far too little thought has been given to hereditary and prenatal influences and early environment, while the wife has not enjoyed rights of supreme importance if we are to have a race well-born.

Then there are the elements of artificiality; the sacrifice of reason to the animal nature by the stimulating of feeding of passion, alcoholic intoxicants being the chief curse of our civilization as opium is of many of the nations of the Orient. Alcohol and opium, while by no means the only elements which come under this general head, are the most important, not only because their influence for vice and crime is greater than other like agencies, but also because nothing so obliterates the moral ideal as do these feeders of the passional nature. The battle for higher morals calls for the best efforts of brain and heart from our people. We must touch the spiritual springs in man's nature, and fire souls with a passion for the noble, pure and true.

3. For love. The age which is pressing upon us demands the enthronement of love in the heart of man. There was a time when man's chief glory belonged to the realm of physical force. The strongest and most masterful individuals were the acknowledged leaders. But the age of brawn at length gave way to an age of intellectual prowess, and the brain became the master motor of life. The man who possessed the most luminous intellect was most esteemed, or he who possessed most intellectual shrewdness and cunning succeeded in becoming the master of the multitude.

The century in the midst of which we are living will witness a struggle for a still higher estate. The coming crusade will be for the supremacy of the spiritual over the physical and intellectual. It will be a battle for the ascendency of all that is best in the human soul. During the age of brawn some men thought and others dreamed. But intellect and soul were small factors in the aggregate of life. During the intellectual ages many souls have been made luminous by the awakening of the spiritual, but it has not yet dominated the soul of the masses. Man has talked much of spiritual development, but comparatively few hearts have been so touched by the higher life that passion became a slave and the luminous teachings of the Sermon on the Mount became a living actuality. Now this spiritual awakening of the people with love as the overmastering thought will blot out intolerance and bigotry and shrink from persecuting one who differs from the soul illumined by love as man shrinks from an adder. Love flies not to law to make man see his way, but says rather with Gamaliel of old: "If it be of man it will come to naught, but if it be of God ye cannot overthrow it."

In the dawning era the persecuting spirit which has so darkened and cursed the ages will be overpowered. For all who persecute, or who would persecute, are still in the bondage of the lower realm of being. The child of Love will first call into the citadel of his brain the Golden Rule, and act according as he would have others act toward him. He will call to mind the rebuke which Jesus gave His officious disciples for forbidding one who did good, but who followed not Jesus.

And just here I would cite a final parallel, to be noted in the happenings in the centuries of which I have written. After the era of the New Learning, and the noblest men dreamed of a purified church and an educated populace; after the printing press began to make books comparatively common; after Copernicus had given the world his revolutionary discovery; after Moore had written "Utopia"; after Luther, Zwingli and Calvin, there came suddenly over the civilized world a darkness more terrible than the history of civilization had ever known, and it lasted long. Then it was that Europe became a slaughter-house, and thousands of men became mad with religious frenzy. Then it was that the dominant church sanctioned the Inquisition, and for the glory of God unnumbered thousands of the noblest souls of Europe died at the stake or in the torture chamber. Then it was that Hugh Latimer and Cranmer perished in England. France was bathed in blood. The Netherlands were a vast burial ground, and Spain, opulent and powerful Spain, opened her veins and let forth her life blood. Spain has been dead since that awful age, and in proportion as the spirit of persecution triumphed, civilization was checked. There is no doubt of the sincerity of most of the insane fanatics who burned and racked their fellowmen at this time. They believed that they were carrying out the will of God, when in reality they were turning back the dial of civilization on the face of the ages.

Now at the present day, in the midst of the wonderful awakening which is seen on every hand as the horizon is broadening and the souls of the best in the world thrill with new hope, conservatism and bigotry are arming for the inevitable struggle, and the spirit of persecution is again seen lifting its head as of old, for the glory of God. Thus, in Tennessee, numbers of poor men who are profoundly religious, God-fearing men, are being persecuted by those who claim to be God's children. Persecuted for conscience sake. Oh, friends, he who persecutes is the child of darkness. The Golden Rule is not his guide. Let us steadfastly oppose the baleful spirit of intolerance and shrink from anything which savors of persecution. Let us welcome love, that perfect love which feels for every child of earth, and expresses that feeling in doing deeds of kindness; which believes in appeals to reason, but that abhors persecution as an assault upon the Golden Rule which is the foundation stone upon which Jesus built His ethical structure—a love which finds expression in the life of a Florence Nightingale or a Dorothea Dix.

Here, then, I think we may find the supreme demand of the present in this three-fold battle for light—this crusade for the enthronement of justice, purity and love in the hearts of the people.

The conflict, however, will not be won without a struggle, for the animal is still strongly entrenched in man, and the fleshpots are dear to the multitude. Moreover, selfishness and prejudice enthrall the thought of millions; but there is in man that which is divine. When a Luther, a Wesley or a Channing speaks, this higher life responds. Moreover, the conscience of the world is becoming awakened. The clarion voice of duty is speaking to millions of souls. The forces of the new day are being marshaled. The conflict is even now upon us. Progress and civilization wait upon the issue, for victory will usher in a new day and a transformed humanity.

THAT FLAG.

Can't We Do Something About It?

DEAR UNION SIGNAL:—I suppose I'm a rabid patriot. Our blessed work would not so completely commend itself to me if the motto did not say, "And Native Land."

The articles THE UNION SIGNAL has published relating to the above subject only blew a little white ashes off the fires that burn sacred in my heart, sacred and steady. And I ask in all earnestness: Can't we do something about it? Wouldn't this discovery year be a good time to begin? If the trade of drunkard-making is not more "national" in character than shoe-making or book-making, the world ought to know it. If the business of liquor-selling has practical sanction from our government which drygoods cannot boast, may we not at least be allowed to take down the token that this is true?

As the banner floats over our schools this year, shall it not be hauled down from seminaries of vice, ignorance and anarchy known as saloons? Every Memorial Day "the colors" are paraded above a hundred thousand of these places, and "Welcome, veterans" is flaunted to men who cower before a beer glass as they never did before a cannon. Independence Day tells a blacker tale of enslavement than any other of the year.

Half a million children and half as many foreigners now for the first time ask the meaning of the Stars and Stripes. The fox-eyed dealer, with his blear-eyed customer, sits beneath the flag of the free and makes them answer: "It means to kill, to steal, to debauch for gain."

Oh, patriots, are you dead? Or is this a horrible nightmare?

By all means use these sweet Columbian days for "Native Land." The Boston Central W. C. T. U. gives us fine example. Next, may not flags be "assisted" down from all liquor-selling places? I know what this is asking. It asks that some other rag float over the dome of our national Capitol building, since two teeming bar-rooms are essential to the perfection of law inside the people's sanctum sanctorum. But memorials, petitions, protests, asking protection for our flag upon our own grounds, would they not bring another of those arrests of thought for which our society is so deservedly noted?

"This work would be relegated to the Northern sisters"? Oh, no. I saw our Lide Meriwether in a Rochester audience not long ago where they closed a white-ribboner's talk upon "Christian Patriotism" with "America." In that full church none sang it more heartily and soulfully than she, and there are thousands of other Southern women with just her spirit. That war is over, and this is on. This, too, means America full, clean, free. And the old army nurse who writes this is not the only American who, with a hope in the heart where the ache used to be, calls out, "Patriots to the front!" M. J. T.

MISS ACKERMANN IN INDIA.

DEAR UNION SIGNAL:—I had several evening meetings at Benares where numbers signed the pledge and a society was formed among the native Christians, after which I left for Allahabad.

The weather was cool, much more so than I expected; it was necessary to wear heavy wraps morning and evening, so the journey made in the cool of the morning was a pleasant one, but the landscape was both barren and desolate looking.

I reached the city to find there was no one to meet me, so I had to drive over town to find a place to stop and the gentleman with whom I had communicated. I wrote to him because he was president of a temperance society, but to my surprise I found he was not an abstainer and had written me to say they did not need a temperance mission. I thought that conclusive evidence that they did, so I drove about to find those who would help. I found the M. E. minister who was an American, and we arranged for meetings. A union was formed and several hundred natives joined the temperance societies.

Here I met the Mahant of Benares, a Hindu priest who has done a mighty work; he is an interesting character and a fine scholar, educated in a Christian school though he never became a Christian, but he knows the Bible far better than most of our own people. After he became Mahant, which is a very high religious office, he retired to a cave to devote the rest of his life to religious offices. Coming from seclusion one day he chanced to hear of a temperance lecture to be given by a Mr. Caine, of England, and the awful pictures the speaker presented of the misery and want caused by the opium trade and the liquor traffic, so stirred his heart, he decided to give the rest of his life to the cause of his own people. He is a grand old man, and much above the average Indian, both in height and breadth. He wears the native dress, the flowing white garment of the Hindu instead of trousers, a long white flannel tunic, sandals on his feet and a bright pink turban twisted about his head with a grace that only these natives seem to know; long white beard and gold spectacles make a striking appearance on the platform. I wish he could go to America, and tell you, as he tells here, about the wrongs of his people.

We had crowded meetings; the first night he put a garland of jasmine about my neck, just as I rose to speak; this is done as a mark of special respect. Then followed one of the most enthusiastic meetings I have ever held, and during the mission several hundred signed the pledge. This old man traveled with me for ten days, in one place twenty-five hundred natives came out for temperance; he had with him a native gentleman as secretary and we had some alive times. As an outgrowth of the visit to Allahabad a native temperance paper was started, the only one in India, and I expect a copy of it this week.

The next visit was to Cawnpore where I held ten meetings in four days. The M. E. minister here and his wife are wide-awake Christians. While I was working among the English-speaking people the Mahant was holding forth in the market places; and the last night we had a meeting together among the natives. Many joined the society. A Band of Hope and a union were formed, forty members to begin with and a number of honorary members; it was a blessed time.

Cawnpore is very beautiful but at every turn one sees traces of the mutiny; going into one church I read: "Sacred to the memory of a thousand Christian people, men, women and children who were murdered in Cawnpore during the struggle." In one of the gardens is a sealed wall, into which some five hundred dead, dying and living were thrown. The queen has erected a monument over it to their memory; it is in the form of an angel with spread wings, holding palm branches. A recital of those awful days by some old veteran who suffered, is most stirring; one very old man tells how his wife and ten little innocent children were slaughtered.

My next place was Lucknow, where we have a good union, which has done much work. Some of the meetings were held in the grounds that belonged to the late king and in what was once his pleasure hall. The meetings were well attended, and the work strengthened. Lucknow is full of interest, with its ruined palaces, great tombs of the kings, large boys' and girls' schools, remains of the places laid waste during those same stormy, dark days, beautiful parks, long drives; one could well spend a week with it all. I visited many places of interest, including the zenana of the late king's daughter. I found her most intelligent, and she talked of the days of her father's reign, showing the paintings and photographs of her ancestors. The king, who lived in great splendor at Lucknow, with three hundred wives, was banished to a portion of an island near Calcutta, and he took two hundred of these wives with him.

Four o'clock in the morning, a day or two later, found me in Delhi. I was met at the depot, and driven to the Baptist Mission, while the Mahant went to his friends.

Delhi is a hard place for work, and it was next to impossible to do anything among the English-speaking people. There is a very strong feeling that "women should be at home," and one dear, good brother seemed very much worried because I was not there, and all agreed that I was quite out of my sphere. But the Lord was with us, and we had some grand meetings among the natives and a Sunday service with the English, which was well attended, and an after-meeting to pray that the Christians of the place might all join in this movement.

Delhi is one of the most noted cities of India, chiefly because it has fallen so many times and has risen again. It is completely surrounded with the remains of past glory, as well as the result of modern enterprise, the former of far greater interest.

I visited the fort where sixty thousand sepoys held possession for three months during the mutiny; the ancient palace is within its walls and stands in almost a perfect state of preservation as does the Pearl mosque. Both are built of pure white marble and the arched passages of the palaces are inlaid with agate, gum-stone and many other valuable stones; the palace was defaced during the struggle, but the government has restored it at great expense.

About fourteen miles out of town is one of the old Delhis. This presents a scene of desolation that would be difficult to describe. On a cold, frosty morning I started out about daylight; after the heat of the south and a touch of the fever, I was glad of this bracing morning. After an hour and a half's drive I reached the ruins and climbed to the top of the Kootul Minar—the largest shaft, the grandest pillar and the most costly column the world has ever seen. It is divided into sections around each of which extends an iron balcony reached by a flight of steps within; it is two hundred and fifty feet high, forty-eight feet at the base, and was erected in 1190 by the first Mohammedan king of Delhi, but looks as fresh as if but just completed; its endless carvings stand out as clearly as on the day they were cut. Scrolls or inscriptions, in that most tasteful looking of all writing, the Arabic character, appear at intervals, and the guide told us that the Koran is pretty well reproduced in stone lettering around this astonishing column.

On the way back to the city we visited the tombs of the kings. The carving in marble looks like heavy lace work; thousands of dollars were spent to mark the resting place of the early kings, now only cherished as a place of show to foreigners. Going up two marble steps I found myself in an enclosure as large as a good sized room; the floor was of diamond shaped marble mosaic, the whole enclosed by what might be called a marble fence about five feet high, pure white and deeply carved; as the sun shone through it seemed waxen in texture. Pointing to the flat stone in the center our guide said: "Here sleeps the noblest of our kings who died at thirty-six from strong drink."

One of the greatest mosques in the world is in the new city of Delhi built of red stone, with two minarets and the dome always found on Moslem places of prayer. A square of marble marks the place for each worshiper, who puts down his own mat, and with face toward Mecca prays to Allah. At one side is a small shelter where a man is stationed guarding a box within a shrine; this contains the footprint of Mohammed; it is the size of the foot of a large man, and looks just like a footprint in snow about an inch thick; the outline of each toe is perfect. As a native pressed his lips to it he said: "It is a miracle." He also showed one hair of the beard of Mohammed, and a shoe in a glass case said to be his.

Early in the morning I left for Umballa, a day's journey. This is one of the largest military stations in India, where several thousand troops are stationed. An old friend from Australia, now a chaplain, invited me there, and several hundred of the soldiers, who were Good Templars, gave me a welcome tea; about three hundred were seated at the table, and as I entered they rose and sang a song of greeting. There are about eighteen thousand abstainers in the army of seventy thousand; some belong to the I. O. G. T. and others to the T. A. A. We had very large meetings, and one afternoon all went out and were photographed. The last meeting was held in the old city among the natives; there are not more than half a dozen missionaries in the place, but the house was packed with natives, and I tried to tell them how deeply interested we are in them; while I was speaking a gentleman brought in a very large tray of marigold leaves; the flowers (a sacred blossom) had been picked to pieces, and he took the leaves in both hands and showered them upon me; it was so unexpected that it quite startled me.

At eleven o'clock that night I went on to Lahore, reaching there early next morning. Some Americans met me and took me to their home. There are a number of Americans in this place, whom it was so delightful to meet, and here we had one of the finest audiences I have found in India—many of them students of the Christian College. COLUMBIA'S EMBLEM.

BY EDNA DEAN PROCTOR.

THROUGHOUT the length and breadth of the land in these sunny days of May, thousands are busy turning up the mellow soil with the plow and planting the corn. They are planting it on the broad central prairies and plains where the fields reach as far as eye can see and every mechanical appliance is brought to bear upon its culture. They are planting it on the smaller farms of the Atlantic slope with a few acres devoted to the maize; and by the remote homesteads of the North and East, where the children drop the golden kernels into the hardly warm earth, while the father or brother laboriously covers them with the hoe. They are planting it in the far West, where the settler and the emigrant give the seed to the newly broken land with the hope that the cyclone and the grasshopper will spare the crop. And on the reservations, and around the pueblos of New Mexico and Arizona, the Indians are planting it with prayers and ceremonies which their race has practiced for unknown ages.

And what is this "corn" to whose planting the month of May is consecrate? Is it a grain the Spaniards or the English brought to the new world for their sustenance and pleasure? Was it known and valued in Europe? Nay, it astonished the first comers here and they called it the corn (grain) of the Indians; from whence our name, Indian corn. The books and letters of that period, the "Adventures" of Captain John Smith of Pocahontas fame, and the records of the New England Colonies abound in wondering references to its cultivation and use. The other cereals—wheat, rice, rye, barley, oats—are similar to each other in appearance; but the corn is as unlike them all as the majestic elm is unlike the alders and hazels growing at its foot. It is indigenous to the western continent and peculiar to it. The primitive inhabitants here had their fields and gardens of maize—its native name; and they tended the precious grain from the covered seed to the ripened ears, with petitions and thanksgivings to their gods. In our own civilization its culture is a vast industry, and its harvests nearly equal in value those of all the other cereals combined. There is no more eloquent description of the beauty of the corn than is given in this paragraph from Edward Everett:

"Drop a grain of California gold into the ground, and there it will lie unchanged to the end of time, the clods on which it falls not more cold and lifeless. Drop a grain of our gold, of our blessed gold, into the ground, and lo, a mystery. In a few days it softens, it swells, it shoots upwards; it is a living thing. It is yellow itself but it sends up a delicate spire which comes peeping, emerald green, through the soil; it expands to a vigorous stalk; revels in the air and sunshine; arrays itself more glorious than Solomon in its broad, fluttering, leafy robes, whose sound, as the west wind whispers through them, falls as pleasantly on the husbandman's ear as the rustle of his sweetheart's garment; still towers aloft, spins its verdant skeins of vegetable floss, displays its dancing tassels, surcharged with fertilizing dust, and at last ripens into two or three magnificent batons like this (an ear of Indian corn), each of which is studded with a hundred grains of gold, every one possessing the same wonderful properties as the parent grain; every one instinct with the same marvelous reproductive powers."

We have long been seeking a national floral emblem, and various blooms that we all love have been named as worthy of our choice. But let us leave to each state its favorite flower; and in this grand Columbian year, and to represent the wide republic, let us take the stately, unique, American grain, let us give our shield the dignity and wealth and beauty of the maize—the corn!

NINETEENTH CENTURY RULES FOR HOLY LIVING: WORK AS YOU PRAY.

BY MRS. C. F. WILDER.

"Can the crushed grape foresee the wine?
Can wheat between the mill-stones tell
All it will be?"

All the world is hunting for happiness; hunting for it with back turned toward it; rushing away pell-mell, in an entirely different direction from where it lies, waiting to be taken up and nestled in the human breast.

A few years ago Polly Winner, a burdened, weary, lonely woman saw duty. It was a cold, stormy New England Sunday, and duty's face was as forbidding, as depressing as the day, but Polly arose and followed her. She was happiness disguised; she was joy masked.

How? Ask the Great Chemist how it is that in seeking life we lose life. Eternal life is to know; to know duty, to know "Thee, the true God, and Jesus Christ, whom Thou hast sent." The great mass of humanity does not really want to know, so it sits down on the outermost edge of religion and pretends it must take its shoes from off its feet.

To know duty means self-denial; means self-sacrifice, self-abnegation; duty means devotion, martyrdom and religion; religion means to "bind fast." The world does not like duty, so it misses happiness. "Can the crushed grape foresee the wine?"

When Polly started to follow duty she followed with cheerfulness on the battlefield with her Lord, not knowing for what service the next duties were preparing her. She prayed for work to do for her Lord, and then she answered her own prayers as far as she was able.

When she was a girl in the common school, among the miscellaneous books given the children from that "district library," was a little book written and compiled by Hannah More; a quaint book to be in a school library, but Polly read and re-read it until it became a part of herself.

In the closing pages of the book were "Rules for Holy Living," and this young girl copied them, and for years used to test herself by the fifty questions there asked, trying to stretch her spiritual life, by much anxious thought, into the image of Christ. Though doubtless, she, with a vast multitude of other young, earnest, devout Christians, dealt in a most unspiritual manner with the simplest spiritual things, yet this manual of devotion read, and the complicated rules for living followed, were a help to her in all her after life. To be sure, her early struggles after Christian growth seemed only efforts and failures, and the daily life one of heart-break and humiliation, yet the manual and rules were conducive to thought and work in the right direction; and when she did learn of the mysteriousness and spontaneousness of growth, she grew all the faster because she was so well prepared to grow.

In her middle life—when she learned that Christ asks for a social conquest, and it must, as Frederick Maurice says, "begin with one and double with two"—she made for herself rules of holy living, that not only have helped her, but have gone out into all the world, helping other women who truly and honestly desire to live as they pray.

When she first went to her new home and saw how the drink habit cursed the land, she followed up her main desire to organize the children into a Loyal Legion. She met with them week after week, month after month and year after year. They sang gospel temperance songs; they learned the Scripture texts that were connected with the songs; they spoke the temperance pieces, and now and then had public meetings, where, as many as would, took a temperance pledge.

The bright, intellectual, earnest women of the neighboring towns—women who wished to so live that the world would be better because they had come into it—came to Mrs. Winner's help, as she at first planned. They organized a "Domestic Science Club," where, among the departments for work, domestic, scientific, art, education, literature, was one on temperance, and every week, when they met and the public came in to hear the papers and the discussions, these ladies could see, as the weeks went by, that public sentiment was changing, through the influence of these intellectual women and through the efforts of the children.

Polly found if she should answer her own prayers, as far as she was able, that she could not spend her time in rapturous ecstasy on the Mount of Transfiguration. Her time must be spent among the needy, thronging multitude at the foot of the mount. The Lord, who left in the hands of His followers the work of uplifting mankind, never comes and sits beside them on cushions of ease when they are able to go out into the heat, the cold, the storm or darkness. Yet, when their feet are planted where His feet have trod, they will always find that He carries the heavier end of the load and smiles on the self-denying one every step of the way.

The world might look upon Polly Winner and think that if, instead of the work she was doing, she led society and its follies; spent her time in fashion's giddy throng, filled her home with luxuries such as her husband's wealth might command, wore the raiment and jewels of the woman of wealth—if she did all these things, then the world might think her a happy woman.

Socrates, wise as he was, was puzzled in his age because the world had these same thoughts. He found one of the most difficult lessons he had to teach and impress upon his hearers was the fact that the prosperous, idle, pleasure-loving were not happy. The fact that dark discontent, like a worm in ripe fruit, is hidden from the world, still makes the unthinking believe that happiness is found where it is not.

Polly knew that the life of ease, of luxury, could never bring the peace, the perfect repose, the quietness of conscience, the harmony, tranquillity and perfect serenity of life that came from walking and talking with her Lord and obeying Him who had become her soul's most intimate Friend.

She had learned that the only way to have heaven enter the soul on earth was to stoop low.

"Everything within us rebels, but we must stoop low." This she did, day by day, as in His strength she followed her own

RULES FOR HOLY LIVING.

1. When about my work or riding alone, think, plan, pray.
2. In town, in passing a saloon where sin prevails, ask God to save sinners and to help His people to do all they can to hasten the coming of His kingdom. Then remember to work as I pray.
3. Never fail at twelve o'clock each day to pray for the workers and the work in God's vineyard all over the wide world.
4. Give half an hour each day to the study of God's word.
5. Every morning ask God to send me, that day, some soul I can help.
6. Watch for opportunities to do something whereby I can glorify my Lord.
7. In times of depression, go to God's Word for comfort; also pray for others.
8. Never go to sleep at night until sure it is all right between God and my own soul.

In following these nineteenth century rules, Polly followed duty—as is shown in the Sermon on the Mount, and, by following she gained a clue to the true meaning and business of life. In going after God and duty, happiness came unsought.

WHAT NEXT?

BY M. A. L.

What next in the work for God and home and humanity? The answer that presses for expression here has assumed many forms and phases, but always it is built upon the same foundation.

The great need of to-day, the next step in this great work is—that believers in it claim this world for God in everything, His power, His presence, His wisdom here; mankind as saved, redeemed, God's power as already in possession of His disciples. "Thine is the kingdom and the power." "It is finished." "As Thou hast sent me into the world, even so have I also sent them into the world." "Greater things than these shall ye do."

But, it will be said at once, we are doing this, we have been doing this for years. Are we? Have we? Read over with this thought in mind some issues of this, our invaluable organ of communication with one another and with the world, the editors powerless in some respects in our hands, and what do we find permeating everything? Acknowledgments and bewailments of the power of the saloon, over individuals, in politics, in government, in the visible church; the power of tobacco and opium and evil in every shape and form—the Amalekites and the Hittites and the Jebusites and the Amorites, the giants, the sons of Anak, which come of the giants and dwell here! These statements are not always boldly made, perhaps, but tucked away somewhere they are sure to be found.

Surely we do not need at this day to dwell on these things! Surely Jericho and Ai, the earth is ours. The Lord God Omnipotent reigneth; the living God is in the midst thereof. The belief grows with what it feeds upon. Why dwell upon the power of evil, the enemies in the land? Are these claims to power on a solid foundation if God is Omnipotent and Omnipresent, or are they in line with Satan's claims of power in the wilderness? Is it not still, "O ye of little faith"? Is not this belief in a power apart from God the "accursed thing" in the midst of God's people that must be taken away before His kingdom can be manifested to men? Was it not this that first closed the gates of Paradise? Why place for a moment the seen temporalities against the unseen eternal things of God? Jesus spent neither time nor power in contemplating the claims of Satan, but met each with assertions of truth, the truth that makes men free. Greater things than these shall ye do.

But, it will be said, "Look at our religious services, our prayer-meetings; we claim God's power; this world for Him there." Do we? Listen, with these thoughts in mind, to the prayers at the average prayer-meeting and in many church services; ponder carefully the hymns that are sung, dear though some of them be through use and association. Do all ring in harmony, with an intense, earnest, immovable belief in the Omnipotence, the Omnipresence, the Omniscience of God—the living God, the loving Heavenly Father, whom Christ revealed?

We are told that in pagan temples a bass-drum and a heavy bell are used to wake the god, or call his attention when worshipers are present. Is there nothing, at times, to remind one of this in the Christian's worship; nothing of an apparent attempt to conquer reluctance in God to be with His people and answer their prayers? Is He honored with our wailing prayers and songs over sin and failure and doubt and coldness; our pleadings for His presence and His help; our attitudes as prodigals and beggars, continually, this God who promises a pledge of all He has and is to those that believe? I have come to understand well of recent years why the Society of Friends did away with outward forms of worship, and it is my deliberate conviction that God would be honored and the growth of His people promoted by a thorough weeding from religious services of much prayer and song that now dishonor His character and name.

And, are we claiming God's presence and power and salvation, in the ranks of our so-called enemies? Are our thoughts towards them marked by that deep faith in the divine element in men that characterized Phillips Brooks and Frederick Robertson and made them such forces among men? Are we doing as we would be done by in thought towards them, our brothers, for whom Christ died? Is there nothing of the Pharisee in our hearts? Are we expecting God's power to be made manifest among them because of our prayers for the manifestation of His kingdom—these prayers in which the two or three that are agreed are multiplied indefinitely and to which wonderful answers are promised.

One said recently in these columns: "Something must come to us from somewhere, out of heaven, from Nazareth, from the east, or west, the north or south, for the tribes of the earth mourn." Was not this lament answered more than eighteen hundred years ago? But I say unto you that Elias is come already and they knew him not; likewise shall also the Son of Man suffer of them.

Is not the next step for believers in this work for God and home and humanity, the next "ground for the sole of their feet" the direct and faithful claiming of this world for God in everything and for every one, His power, His presence, His wisdom here, mankind already redeemed, God's power already theirs—and then preach this gospel to every creature?

THE LESSONS OF 1492 FOR US OF TO-DAY.

BY ABBY MORTON DIAZ.

Lesson 1.—Independence of thought, courage, persistent endeavor, faith, hope, earnestness, endurance, consecration to a high purpose.

Lesson 2.—A new idea or proposition has rights we are bound to respect; one of these is, that it should not be rejected or ridiculed until it has had a thoughtful investigation, regardless of opinions, our own included, or of any human authority, and regardless of existing conditions. The new and unaccustomed are not on that account to be rejected, neither the improbable, because of its improbability. In 1492, what seemed more improbable than all that came from the sailing forth of the three adventurous ships from their safe harbors?

And when the small boy, Watt, sat watching the tea-kettle cover, what could have seemed more improbable than all that was to come from a recognition of the power of steam to move solid bodies? In 1576 a Normandy scholar, who "made an invention" which "can make ships go over the ocean and carriages travel by land," "by the use of the steam of boiling water," was placed in a madhouse.

Lesson 3.—Do not fear to be called singular. People in general think they must generally do as people in general do. Strange this should be so, for the natural order of things is differentiation. No two faces are alike, no two forms, no two voices, no two dispositions, no two characters, though resemblances are everywhere. The same is true of the lower creation. A birch in company with trees of another kind is not afraid of being singular. Neither is a clover, blooming by itself among the grass, should a bee from the daisy grounds close by buzz to it—yellow and white are all the fashion; they don't wear pink much; the clover would reply in actions,—yes, they do—and array itself accordingly; while a listening dandelion would proceed to carry out its own preference and declare that they're going to wear plain yellow! So with the trees in their different growths and varied leaf shapes. Everywhere the universal law of life acts by individual expression; thus it is natural to be singular and law-enjoined; but people in general are unnatural, are outlaws, inasmuch as they aim at living out other people's patterns rather than their own.

Columbus was singular. People in general were not in agreement with him and this fact was of itself considered a valid argument against him. It was not customary, it was rank crankiness, to go lugging maps and charts about, and reeling off the kind of talk he did. A mere visionary sort of person. Such conceit, to take views so different from the views entertained by people of the highest standing! Such persistency, to refuse to accept their opinions! Was not the wisdom sanctioned by past ages good enough for this fellow? How irrational and visionary and how unheard-of, the idea of fitting out vessels and sailing away to unknown lands over unknown seas! What a singular person!

But we see that singularity is the world-plan as revealed in the outward, and in regard to the inner realm. "Why not judge ye of yourselves what is right?" is the Scriptural injunction; also, "Why is my liberty judged of another man's conscience?" And yet, we mortals, how we do grovel in the humbleness of self-abnegation, ever anxious to do as certain others do, to think and believe what certain others think and believe, to observe such forms as certain others observe, to wear what certain others wear, to accept ideas which certain others accept concerning God, heaven, futurity. Any marked deviation from the ordinary course of things brings censure and often contempt and derision. It is just a game of "Simon says, Wigwag, thumbs up, over, way up, down, way down, stop, wigwag." "Says Aaron to Moses, 'Let's cut off our noses.' Says Moses to Aaron, ''Tis the fashion to wear 'em.' "

Luckily, some impassable limits do exist which prevent absolute mutilation, though damage and disfigurement from compression are commonly looked upon with approval as necessary to elegance. But think of the loss to the world from this universal repression of individual tastes, preferences, ideas, opinions. How refreshing if we could have the outcome of all these alive with originality! And as to women, what a boon if the Juggernaut of fashion might roll itself away forever, leaving them free to put to higher uses the time and mind thus rescued! Numbers would now emancipate themselves from these bonds, and from the much more harmful ones which fetter mind, but for the dreaded word, singular. Oh, for a new Declaration of Independence! But who would sign in toto? And when the day shall arrive, who of this present age will be alive to ring the bells which shall ring out conformity and ring in liberty?

"Free space for every human doubt
That the whole soul may orb about."

Before that time, even, people in general may have come to see that a conscientious doubt is more divinely reverential than unquestioning acceptance. Also, that even in the matter of costuming there will be great gain when conformity shall give place to originality of design.

Lesson 4.—Disturb the prevailing satisfaction with present conditions, that is, with present acquirements, present aims, present standards, present methods of world betterment and with present boundary lines of human possibilities, mental, moral, spiritual, physical. But as generations pass, each recognizes its own advancement, looking complacently back, yet shrinking from further progress, as if to say, "Just about where this generation is, is just about right." Our gaze should not be thus turned backward. It should be fixed ever forward into the dim unknown, where humanity's vast future possessions lie.

How small our present conceptions of the wealth these may yield us!—wealth of ideas, wealth of appliances, wealth of inspiration, wealth of knowledge in various directions, wealth of human possibilities, which are now unrecognized. Note well this last, for with our belief in what the future has for us of power and blessedness must be joined the conviction that this is to result from the more and more complete unfolding of the human faculties, especially the higher ones, and above all from the recognition of the divinity working in and by humanity—man being the kingdom and habitation of the highest—and of all this implies of privilege and obligation. Visionary? But that term is not a stigma. The vision or conception of glories in store for us here is of itself a prophecy of fulfillment. First the ideal, then its realization.

Thus it is comforting to know that many, yes, very many, have even now a conception of the world of mankind living as "members one of another," all one family; of the time when it shall be seen that the good of the whole does actually demand the good of each and that the good of each makes the good of the whole; that the commercial and political rule of selfhood will have to be discarded on account of its impracticability in building up a nation, self-interest pulling from the center being disintegrating, while the interest of each in and for all working toward the center, integrates, makes whole. We must extend and perfect our vision so as to foresee the reign of selfishness giving way to the higher Rule of Love, just as hand work and material implements have given way to the more immaterial forces of steam and electricity. We must see that this higher Rule of Love will really be the "fulfilling of the law," making other laws needless, and will thus become a true political economy.

And this vision-promised Land of Hope, with its vast expanse, its wealth, its opportunities for gain, its grandeur, its loveliness, its singing birds and blooming flowers, is—our possible self, fulfilling its divine possibilities. "It doth not yet appear what we shall be," but let us get ready our maps and charts and lay our course, and steer for the undiscovered country.

And we desire that every one of you do show the same diligence to the full assurance of hope unto the end: That ye be not slothful, but followers of them who through faith and patience inherit the promises.—Heb. 6: 11, 12.

Our friends must be very patient with us during these stormy times. We have been diverted in a measure from reporting in this column the gifts to the Temple. They will all, however, appear in our financial secretary's report.

Miss Cornelia M. Dow, daughter of the venerated Neal Dow, of Portland, Me., writes: "Enclosed is a check for $24.32, the first installment on a pledge of $100, from the Portland W. C. T. U. for the Temple. We don't want our name left out of the roll of honor." The Tidioute, Pa., W. C. T. U. sends $50; this completes its $100 gift. "We are glad," the treasurer writes, "that we have it to send just now." Mrs. Henrietta C. Pharr sends $60, which completes a $100 gift from the Morgan City, La., W. C. T. U. The money was accompanied by a beautiful letter from Mrs. Pharr. The following is an extract from it: "We, the white-ribbon women of Morgan City, La., will rally around you and help you by our prayers as well as with material things." The West Toledo, O., W. C. T. U. sends $21.50, which completes the $100 pledge for Monroe county. Windsor, Ill., W. C. T. U. sends $25, which completes a $100 pledge. From Niagara County, N. Y., comes $9.70, which completes its pledge. The W. C. T. U. of Lake, Ill., sends $32.50, which completes its pledge. There has just come $29.50 from the Jordan, Ill., W. C. T. U. completing a $100 pledge, and $38.10 from the W. C. T. U. of Strasburg, Pa., which completes its pledge. The Newark, O., W. C. T. U. has honored itself in honoring its noble president by naming the union after her, Evelyn Graham, and $35 has been received from this union as a last installment on a $100 pledge. Most of this money has been raised through the efforts of Mrs. Graham. The Temple has no warmer friend than she, this making $400 she has secured for it. The Rising City, Neb., W. C. T. U. sends $10, which completes a $100 pledge.

The following unions have sent the amounts credited to them on $100 pledges: New Windsor, Ill., $35.70; New Alexandria, Pa., $14; Belmond, Ia., $10.95; Fall River, Mass., $27; Rising, Neb., $65; Hygiene, Col., $25; North Side Central union, Columbus, O., $30; Athens, O., $25; Des Moines, Ia., $25; Winfield, Kan., $18; Blue Rapids, Kan., $15, to be credited to Marshall county pledge; Ellendale, N. Dak., $23.57; Frances E. Willard W. C. T. U., Helena, Mont., $15; Black River, N. Y., $18.25; Center Moreland, Pa., toward the Wyoming county pledge, $10.20; Payson, Ill., $10; Y's of Norfolk City, Va., $10; from two friends, to be credited to Cadiz, O., W. C. T. U., $7.40; Dunellen, N. J., $14.60. From the above showing it does not look as though the attempt to stampede the fund of the Temple has been very successful. Mrs. Annie P. Westgate, Boston, Mass., in sending some money for a friend, says: "What I read these days about the opposition but makes me more eager to help along the Temple, and I only wish I could send a generous sum to show my sympathy, interest and confidence. If I live and am prospered you shall receive $100 from me." This is the sentiment expressed in hundreds of letters. Mrs. Emma Clift, secretary of the W. C. T. U. of Rapid City, S. Dak., writes: "Since such a war of words has been waged against our Temple builder we feel especially gratified to contribute $10 to the Temple fund." Mrs. Nettie Kelly, Huntingdale, Mo., lives ten miles from any union. She encloses the contents of her mite-box and writes: "I expect to keep my mite-box on my sitting-room table until the Temple is all paid for, even if 'it takes twenty years,' as Mr. Hobbs says."

Miss Anna Williams, Chicago, sends $25 as an Easter offering. Mrs. J. Beatson, Rockford, Ill., sends $15 on her $100 pledge. J. S. Pingery, Cherokee, Ia., sends $25, making $60 he has sent on a $100 pledge; this money he has secured through Demorest contests. Mrs. L. M. Young, Denison, Tex., sends $26.50, the balance due on the tablet in honor of that noble woman, Mrs. Sara Achison, who has done so much for the W. C. T. U. in that state. The W. C. T. U. of the eighth district of Iowa sends $5, and the eleventh district Iowa W. C. T. U. sends $10 for a tablet in honor of Mrs. Henrietta Skelton, and $10 comes from Iowa unions for Mrs. Dunham's tablet; also $17 from Nebraska unions for a tablet in honor of Mrs. Caroline M. Woodward, the loved and revered vice-president of Nebraska. The following sums are for the Elizabeth Tobey tablet: $5 from the W. C. T. U. of Great Barrington, Mass.; $3.65 from the W. C. T. U. of North Adams, Mass., and $1 from Mrs. C. H. Baxter, West Dennis, Mass.

From the Bolivar, Mo., W. C. T. U. comes $20 for the Miss Ellen Morris tablet, and $10.50 from Texas unions for Mrs. Stoddard's tablet; also $10 from the W. C. T. U. of St. Mary's, W. Va., towards the West Virginia tablet; $13 from the W. C. T. U. of Sugar Grove, Pa., for the Whittier clock; $1 from C. Allen, Middleport, N. Y., and $1 from Anna Patten, Charles City, Ia., for Whittier clock.

A two-cent stamp sent to Mrs. Matilda B. Carse, the Temple, Chicago, will secure a mite-box. Remember any one placing in the box $2.50 from May 1, 1893, to May 1, 1894, will receive the lovely Columbian souvenir made of aluminum, with a cut of the Temple on one side and on the reverse the face of Miss Willard and the founder of the Temple, with suitable inscriptions. All money orders should be made out in the name of the treasurer, William D. Preston, and sent to our financial secretary, Miss Sara Johnson, the Temple, Chicago, Ill.

COLUMBIAN EXPOSITION OPENED.

The long-awaited event arrived with the first day of May, according to promise. So long had access been granted to the grounds and so glorious was the dedication last October that it did not seem possible to carry out a formal opening with the freshness that is the chief charm of all new things. But we were happily disappointed. Three powerful attractions were added to these unique May-day exercises—the President of the United States, the Duke of Veragua (lineal descendant of Columbus) and the dear old Liberty bell, of Philadelphia.

Despite the unseasonable atmosphere, a magnificent company of four hundred thousand people attended the exercises, which were held in the open air. The parade that escorted President Cleveland and the Duke of Veragua to the grounds was one not soon forgotten, with its gorgeous retinue and enthusiastic reception all along the seven-mile march.

Arriving at the grounds, the distinguished guests found their immense audience in waiting. The exercises were brief, opened fittingly by orchestral music and prayer by Dr. Milburn, the blind chaplain of Congress. Then followed the reading of W. A. Croffut's ode, "The Prophecy," by Miss Jessie Couthoui. The noble tone of this fine production may be inferred by these three lines:

"He (Columbus) saw an empire, radiant as the day,
Harnessed to law, but under freedom's sway,
Proudly arise, resplendent in array."

Director-General Davis' address was so replete with Exposition history that we here quote a few paragraphs:

This Exposition is not the conception of any single mind; it is not the result of any single effort, but it is the grandest conception of all the minds and the best attainable result of all the efforts put forth by all the people who have in any manner contributed to its creation.

The great commanding agencies through which the government has authorized this work to proceed are: The National Commission, consisting of one hundred and eight men and their alternates—selected from the various states and territories—presided over by the Hon. Thomas W. Palmer, of Michigan; the corporation of the state of Illinois, known as the World's Columbian Exposition, consisting of forty-five directors, presided over by Mr. H. N. Higinbotham, of Chicago, and the Board of Lady Managers, consisting of one hundred and fifteen women and their alternates—selected from the several states—presided over by Mrs. Potter Palmer, of Chicago. To these great agencies, wisely selected by Congress, each performing its special function, the gratitude of the people of this country and the cordial recognition of all these friendly foreign representatives are due.

To perfect from these agencies an efficient organization was our first duty and it was successfully accomplished at the outset through committees, subsequently by great executive departments, and through these departments the systematic, vigorous and effective work has progressed. Through the department of administration, the department of finance, the department of works and the great exhibit departments, the plan and scope of a grand international Exposition have been worked out.

The department of finance, composed of members of the Illinois corporation, has, with a disinterestedness remarkable, with courage undaunted, successfully financiered the Exposition and has provided for the great work upward of twenty million dollars. The department of works and its many bureaus of artists, architects, engineers and builders have transformed these grounds, which, twenty-one months ago were an unsightly, uninviting and unoccupied stretch of landscape into the beauty and splendor of to-day. They have conspicuously performed their functions, and these grand avenues, these Venetian waterways, the finished landscape, the fountain and sculptures and colonnades and these grand palaces stand out as a monument to their genius and their skill, supplemented by the labor of that great army of skilled artisans and workmen, all citizens of this republic.

The chiefs of the great departments who have exploited this mighty enterprise and gathered here the exhibits forming the picture that is set in this magnificent frame have confirmed the wisdom of their selection. No state or territory in the Union has escaped their voice; no land on the globe that has a language but has been visited and the invitation of the President of the United States personally presented. Fortunately, at the inception of this enterprise our government was and still is at peace with the whole world. Commissioners were sent to Europe, to Asia, to Australia, British North America and to the islands of the seas, so that to-day the whole world knows and is familiar with the significance of the great peace festival we are about to inaugurate upon this campus and all the nations join in celebrating the event which it commemorates.

President Cleveland's speech was brief but pointed. Here are a few representative sentences: "We stand to-day in the presence of the oldest nations of the world and point to the great achievements we here exhibit, asking no allowance on the score of youth.

"It is an exalted mission in which we and our guests from other lands are engaged, as we coöperate in the inauguration of an enterprise devoted to human enlightenment; and in the undertaking we here enter upon we exemplify in the noblest sense the brotherhood of nations.

"Let us hold fast to the meaning that underlies this ceremony and let us not lose the impressiveness of this moment. As by a touch the machinery that gives life to this vast Exposition is now set in motion, so at the same instant let our hopes and aspirations awaken forces which in all time to come shall influence the welfare, the dignity and the freedom of mankind."

The applause that greeted the President's remarks was tremendous, but subsided as quickly as it began when the crowd realized the import of the next order of exercises—the touching of the electric button. By pressing this gold and ivory button an electric current was transmitted which set in operation the wheels of the great World's Fair. A solemn hush, almost as of death, prevailed for a moment. Then enraptured human voices joined the din and clamor of booming cannon, shrieking whistle, leaping fountain and roaring machinery. Simultaneously the flags of every nation were swung from the poles and flung to the breeze, the stars and stripes fittingly overriding all, while the great audience heartily sang "America." The Exposition was opened and at work. The great event was handsomely commemorated.

THE DEDICATION OF THE WOMAN'S BUILDING.

The twentieth century dawned at two p. m., May 1. It had to dawn, for the swift movement of woman had outstripped the laggard years and set forward the hand on the dial-plate. The light gavel of Mrs. Bertha Honoré Palmer tapped the first hour of the new century as she opened the dedication ceremonies of the Woman's Building at the World's Columbian Exposition.

The noble women of all lands must have felt an electric thrill of sympathy with these representative women of the world who assisted to register an event in history as new as the creation—the consecration of a building, planned and decorated by women, to the arts, industries and literature of women; and, greater still, to chronicle the first setting of its women by a government, in a great national and international enterprise, in a position independent of and coördinate with the men of the nation.

The platform was gaily ruffled in yellow and red on background of cream white. The American flag twine with the Spanish colors, orange and red, guarded eac side of the speaker's stand, and above it, in the rea floated the brilliant standards of Germany, Russia, Spai and Italy. Theodore Thomas' matchless orchestra occu pied the extensive rostrum on the north, and all the in terims and interstices of the occasion were symphonie of sound and color and perfume of flowers.

Near Mrs. Palmer on the grand stand were our guests the Duchess de Veragua, of Spain, Lady Aberdeen, representing Scotland and Ireland, Princess Mary A Schahovskoy, of Russia, Madame Mariotti, of Italy, Mrs Bedford Fenwick, of England, and Frau Professorin Kasetowsky, of Germany; and close at hand was a pretty littl Syrian woman, Mrs. Korany, representing the press o her country. To the inquiry, Who are the distinguished ladies on the platform? some one replied: They all look distinguished; and so any one would have said who turned the eye upon the well-known American women on the stand, the one hundred lady managers who occupied the front seats, the dense crowd of handsome faces which filled the body of the building and the arched peristyle on four sides overhanging the whole. White-ribboners missed the best known and best loved face in America—our chieftain's—not often wanting where noble women gather this side the water.

The exercises opened with a most eloquent and suitable prayer by Miss Ida Hultin, and after an Ode rendered by Miss Florence Wilkinson, Mrs. Palmer amid enthusiastic applause rose to speak on behalf of the lady managers. She spoke with marked ease, tact and judgment, dwelling chiefly on the industrial and economic problems of women. She said with much else that was fine:

Of all existing forms of injustice there is none so cruel and inconsistent as is the position in which women are placed with regard to self-maintenance; the calm ignoring of their rights and responsibilities which has gone on for centuries.

"Would you have women step down from their pedestals?" some men ask. Yes, if we can find any women mounted on pedestals, let them step down. Freedom and justice for all are infinitely better than pedestals for a few. I always suspect the motives of any one advancing the pedestal theory. It is not the natural and fine relation between husband and wife, or between friends. They should stand side by side, the fine qualities of each supplementing and assisting those of the other.

The women of to-day have no desire to be helpless and dependent. Having the full use of their faculties, they rejoice in exercising them. Ignorance is too expensive and wasteful to be tolerated. We cannot afford to lose a reserve power of any individual.

An impressive part of the ceremonies was the presentation, by Mr. George S. Knapp, to the Board of Lady Managers, of the standard flag of America and the World's Columbian Exposition. This flag was carried at the head of the dedicatory procession, October 12, 1892, and escorted the Liberty Bell of Philadelphia, April 29, 1893. The silk for this flag was spun by "lady" American silkworms in twenty-five states, was woven of the best quality of silk by the Woman's Silk Union of America, and was made every stitch by women. Mrs. Palmer received it for the Board, saying: "Though we shall carry it to bloodless victories we honor it none the less."

It would be very pleasant to touch upon the magnificent lace, of just the dark cream color that labels it properly "old," which covered the flowered silk that enveloped the stately form of the handsome Duchess de Veragua who speaks very little English; to mention in full the sensible address of charming Mrs. Bedford Fenwick who, in noting English women and the industries and achievements which have made them famous, spoke especially of the extensive and skillful training of English women as scientific nurses and the elevation of this occupation to the rank of a profession. Mrs. Fenwick is herself a trained nurse.

Frau Professorin Kasetowsky spoke for her countrywomen with an honest German homeliness and heart that were especially attractive. Lady Aberdeen dwelt mainly upon the value of home industries which shall make the peasant women useful and independent citizens; Madame Mariotti interestingly called for Italy's recognition in the place of Countess de Brazza, neé Slocum of New Orleans, who was kept from the dedication by a sick child. Nothing could have been more winsome than the manner in which the Princess May Schahovskoy told of Russia's peasant women and the efforts of Russian women of rank for their elevation.

The closing act of the day was the driving of the far-famed "last nail"—more famous than any since Jael's—made from all the precious metals of Montana, and presented to Mrs. Palmer, who "drove" it with an equally famous hammer made in Nevada, and—if she mashed her finger she made no sign according to the ways of women.

Never before has the world gathered a body of women so representative of its best in mind, manners and morals, or prophetic of so much for the coming race in a true brotherhood of social, industrial and universal equality. In this light every woman should check off on her calendar the dedication of the Woman's Building as the birthday of her independence.

COLUMBIAN DOLLAR-GETTING.

There are seven thousand and fifty-three licensed, saloons in Chicago, and behind them, as staying power, fifty-one breweries, three distilleries and one hundred rectifiers. Behind this local strength rises the national associations, and be it always remembered that however much temperance people may differ and quibble, the rum power has always one mind.

About the first thing the Columbian Directory corporation did after securing their site was to give the rum power a hearing, and take into consideration its immense faculty for dollar-getting. Congress had provided by act that "the United States shall not in any manner nor under any circumstances be liable for any of the acts, doings, proceedings or representations of the said corporation organized under the laws of the state of Illinois," but advisory power was given the National Commission later, in Section 7, as follows: "That after the plans of said Exposition shall be prepared by said Commission, the rules and regulations of said corporation governing rules for entrance and admission fees or otherwise affecting the rights, privileges, or interests of the exhibitors or of the public shall be fixed or established by said corporation, subject, however, to such modification, if any, as may be imposed by a majority of said Commissioners."

The specification against liquor had been dropped out of the Sunday closing act, and with the twinkle of dollars afore their eyes and the tinkle of dollars in their ears the Directory straightway began granting concessions involving the sale of "stimulating beverages." "Not spirituous liquors," said one in authority, "but beers, wines and after-dinner liquors, including brandy. I do not think the word spirituous is in the contracts." Not only were these concessions granted for the limits of Jackson Park, but for the Midway Plaisance, a strip of land six hundred feet wide, seven-eighths of a mile long, and containing eighty acres, unquestionably within the "dry district" of Hyde Park. These transactions had a dubious side to some eyes belonging to the National Commission, and the newspapers report hot debate when a year ago the Directory conferred with the Commission "for the adoption of rules for the administration of the Exposition," and the crowning and final argument urged in behalf of the liquor privileges was, "They have already been granted."

We quote Commissioner Massey's resolution:

WHEREAS, This Commission has already taken action as authorized by section 7 of the act of Congress, touching rules and regulations governing rates for entrance and admission fees, and otherwise affecting the rights, privileges or interests of the exhibitors or the public; and whereas, while none of the said rules and regulations relative to the sale of intoxicating liquors within the Exposition grounds have been submitted, it is known to be the policy of the Directory that intoxicants shall be sold within said grounds in connection with, and as a part of restaurant privileges, and not by means of saloons or open bars and that in all concessions for such privileges appropriate restrictions in this behalf have invariably been incorporated in the contract granting the same, so that any declarative action on this subject would apparently involve an unjust and unwarranted reflection upon the bona fides of said Directory; therefore,

Resolved, That in view of these circumstances and conditions stated in the preamble, this Commission does not deem it either judicious or expedient at this time to make any deliverance on this question, nor to assume any responsibility touching the same, otherwise than to declare it to be the sense of this Commission that no intoxicating liquors should be sold at saloons or open bars within said grounds.

"It is too late," argued Commissioners St. Clair and Massey, "to overturn the Directory's rules," and this resolution, which, in effect, if it means anything, means "Go ahead and do what you please and can, but we wash our hands of responsibility," was passed, after much higgling by some Commissioners who probably felt that "intoxicating liquors" do not become innocuous by being sold under a restaurant license.

In May of last year the Directory had another set of rapids to run. Their attorney, W. H. Carlisle, submitted his carefully prepared opinion of their rights under the laws of the state of Illinois, and it was not all that hearts inclined toward the rewards of granting restaurant privileges could wish. They had not asked his opinion because they cared a farthing for the temperance sentiment of the country or for that sentiment close to the hearts of all good citizens, viz.: that defiance of law strikes at the very life of our republic. No, our Directory wanted to know if having granted concessions involving the sale of liquor, they would be financially responsible to the grantees, if they (the grantees) were prevented by law from carrying out such sale. The laws feared were, the prohibition ordinances of Hyde Park, and the state law regarding fairs, the latter of which is as follows: (Revised Statutes of Illinois of 1883.)

CHAP. V, Sec. 12.—Whoever shall keep any shop, booth, tent, wagon, vessel, boat or other place for the sale of spirituous liquors, or expose for sale, or sell, or give away, or otherwise dispose of any spirituous liquors . . . at, or within, two miles of the place where any agricultural, horticultural, or mechanical fair is being held, shall for each offense be fined not less than five, nor more than one hundred dollars. Provided this section shall not affect tavern-keepers, distillers or others exercising their calling at their usual place of business.

SEC. 13 gives penalties for the above.

SEC. 14, Meaning of the word fair.—Wherever the word fair occurs in this act, it shall be held to mean a bona fide exhibition of the principal classes of live stock, together with general agricultural and horticultural products and mechanical arts.

Mr. Carlisle's opinion is given in the Times of May 7, 1892, as follows: "In obedience to the resolution of the committee on ways and means requesting an opinion as to the effect of the prohibition ordinance of the village of Hyde Park upon the sale of liquor in Jackson Park and the Midway Plaisance, I submit the following [here follows provision 21, of the municipal code of Hyde Park, revision of 1887, which forbids the issuance of licenses within limits specified]. The territory here described includes Midway Plaisance, but does not include Jackson Park. . . The statutes of Illinois, Chap. 43, Par. 1, contains the following definition of a dram-shop: SEC. 1. That a dram-shop is a place where spirituous, or vinous, or malt liquors are retailed by less quantity than one gallon, and intoxicating liquors shall be deemed to include all such liquors within the meaning of this act." (We quote this to show that the sale of liquors in connection with food would not prevent the place where the sale is made from being classed as a dram-shop.) After a résumé of the legal reasons why the claims of Hyde Park would be paramount over Midway Plaisance, he sums up, "I therefore conclude that no license can be obtained for a dram-shop to be kept on the Midway Plaisance so long as the prohibition ordinances ARE ENFORCED."

He then gives in part the state law we have given in full, and adds, "Those members of the committee who were present at the time will remember that before the concession for the German village or the Moorish palace (concessions on the Midway Plaisance), were given, I called the attention of the committee to the law on the statute book, and stated my opinion to be, that this law, if enforced, would prevent the sale of liquor in Jackson Park or Midway Plaisance. I am still of this opinion. The prohibition ordinances of the village of Hyde Park, so far as the Plaisance is concerned, go a step further, and would prevent the issue of a license."

In conclusion, this Mephistophelian counselor says, "I do not think the two mile limit law will interfere with liquor selling in the park proper. But the law is on the books and may be appealed to by some of the more ardent Prohibitionists!" Plain people must read this counsel as, "Here is the law, but I believe you can break it with impunity."

We copy the following from a paper of later date: "The Fair directors have determined to have a bill presented at the next session of the legislature in January, asking that the Exposition company be given full control of Jackson Park and Midway Plaisance during the period of the Fair. C. B. Schmidt, representing Dr. Jahn, who secured the concession for a German village on the Midway Plaisance, where he desired to sell beer and Rhine wines, was told yesterday by the committee on grounds and buildings to go on perfecting his scheme and the board of directors would do the rest. This they will do by appealing to the state legislature for a temporary enactment covering the case."

Relying upon the slowness of movement in our Republic, and the personal and aggregate importance they have acquired as a corporation running "the biggest show on earth," they with brazen effrontery defy the law as expounded by their own attorney, and the national prohibition sentiment expressed in the 264,066 votes cast for Bidwell.

Outside the ranks of the Prohibition party is a great army of total abstainers who will feel that the sale of "beers, wines, and after-dinner liquors, including brandy" at the Exposition is an affront to every tradition Americans of the best stamp hold dear. If this affront were given according to law it would be bad enough, but in defiance of law it is worse. Though they on occasion glibly affirm they are a private corporation, from one point of view the Columbian Exposition Company certainly represent the whole country, and that they with deliberate intention will break the laws of Illinois under which they are incorporated, relying with supreme insolence upon the might of the rum dollars behind them is a public disgrace. "Were proceedings begun to-morrow," said one legal Worldly Wiseman, "I doubt," and he smiled cynically, "if a judge could be found who would be able to arrive at an opinion until long after the Fair is closed."

"The highest form of education is required to create that virtue which is love of country and its laws," says Montesquieu. And again, "Virtue is the vital principle of a republic." For our part, we believe virtue is a burning force in these United States. It is the first step that counts. Who will call, "Halt!" to these notable law-defiers, the Columbian Exposition Company, that this year of self-gratulation shall not establish the precedent that neither Congress nor state assemblies make laws for citizens rich enough in place and pelf-power to make their own?

"On Duty" at the Exposition.

"Seven hundred women doctors in Russia," one of the most conservative countries of the globe! "A new link has been woven between you and us," said Princess Schahovskoy, of the Russian committee, referring to the donations from our country during the Russian famine of last year. She gave many incidents of the advancement of women in Russia, which illustrate anew the physical law that "water will find its level."

For highest scenic effect and beauty, the great basin fronting the Administration Building is deserving of warmest praise. Our own "Liberty bell," which has just rung the emancipation of two thousand opium smokers in Japan, being cast from the metal of their discarded pipes, has received the English inscription on the blank left for that purpose by the Japanese donors. This is the inscription: "This bell, cast in the city of Tokyo, December 10, 1892, by Tsuda Sen, is made from the metal of tobacco pipes of more than a thousand men, once slaves, now freemen." This bell will be a magnet to visitors at the World's W. C. T. U. exhibit in the Woman's Building. When struck with a piece of metal it gives forth a deep-toned toll, charming to the ear.

Among the familiar faces upon the benches reserved for the Board of Lady Managers, I noticed our staunch friend and the indefatigable worker for woman's advance, Susan B. Anthony, whose intent expression and glistening eyes were signs of the joy which the occasion, as a landmark of woman's progress, afforded her. Mrs. R. S. Felton, our Georgia white-ribboner, was also an interested listener.

Mrs. Bertha Palmer is a type of what the educated American woman with her native wit, tact and common sense can accomplish. She made an excellent and charming presiding officer, gave an address replete with vigorous and liberal thought, showing a complete comprehension of woman's situation and relation to society, and setting it forth with touches of alternate wit and pathos. Mrs. Palmer was deservedly and repeatedly applauded by the representative women whose sentiments she was voicing so admirably. Mrs. Palmer and the Board of Lady Managers have blazed a broad path toward the much talked-of "discovery of woman."

The welcome sign, "Smoking Prohibited," was among the first to greet the eyes on entering that cosmopolitan avenue, or boulevard of "sideshows," which occupies the Midway Plaisance, a strip of land covering an area of eighty acres, and connecting Jackson Park with Washington Park. A faithful guard espies a violator of the ordinance, who is straightway urged to extinguish the air-defiling combustible. We breathe freely, and congratulate ourselves that there is at least one public spot on earth where the pure air of God can be inhaled without nicotine tainted concomitants. The ordinance being so very new and novel, there were not enough guards, however, to look after the numerous smokers who persisted in violating the regulation on opening day.

WEST INDIES.

GREAT AND GROWING INTEREST.

It cannot be denied that there is a great and growing interest in the temperance cause, not only in Kingston, but throughout the Island of Jamaica, especially since our union was started. A little over a month ago we rented a room in a central locality, where we have been holding gospel temperance meetings twice a week. As we greatly need more helpers and besides wish to add a mothers' meeting and perhaps something else, we are making a special appeal this week through the press and pulpit which, we trust, will have more effect than those made at each of our public meetings. I have sent for the Petition four hundred and thirty-seven names. Mr. Hopkins gave some help in the matter. He is a good man and a warm friend of temperance. The Methodists had a great temperance demonstration recently in a large hall of their own, to which they invited all the ladies of our union and asked me as president to take a seat on the platform and make a short address, which I did. The speeches were all excellent.

WEST AUSTRALIA.

We cannot tell you how grieved we were to learn, only last night, that one of our dearest workers, Miss Mary Allen West (we say "our" because we realize that it is not a West Australian union, or an American union that we belong to, but a World's union) had passed away. Although we have never beheld her, yet her writings had endeared her to us considerably.

We feel so thankful for having had Miss Ackermann in our land, and that we have been led to take part in such a grand and noble organization. It seems as if the work had taken a very firm root in West Australia, and the Sailors' Rest which our union organized has already been productive of much good. There are several departments of work we are interested in, and our prison work has also been successful. When Miss Ackermann left us, and we began to work, we hardly knew which way to turn, for we were all novices, but God gives us the wisdom as we require it.

One of us went for a trip to the eastern colonies and seized the opportunity to learn as much about the work as possible. The exceedingly energetic South Australian colonial president, Mrs. Nicholls, and the secretary, Miss George, spared neither pains nor time to make the visit as profitable as possible. In Victoria they are doing a splendid work also.

It does so lift one up to think that our union encircles the globe, and that we all meet at one mercy seat. May many of us in Western Australia and other lands be led to renew our consecration vows.

FROM THE PRESIDENT OF DENMARK W. C. T. U.

Some weeks ago I received Miss Willard's Christmas letter and immediately I translated it and sent it to the Danish temperance papers and the organ of the Methodists, which has already once printed the World's Petition. Last year I sent one thousand six hundred signatures. I have since that time received a large number, and I hope that my last effort will bring some more also from Germany and Switzerland where I have sent the Petition through my Good Templar friends. Unhappily illness has prevented me from going out lecturing both last winter and this winter, but I hope that God will permit me to take up my work within half a year.

I shall, unhappily, be prevented from going to the World's convention in June. I have also been elected representative for the Danish society for the enfranchisement of women, and from all my heart, I regret this changing of plans which were all laid for going to the U. S. A., in 1893, to learn from my American sisters in reform work.

Though the Danish branch of the World's W. C. T. U. is so very small, and of course has only very small results, I see the necessity of awakening the Danish women and moderate drinking men as well as the drunkards to reform, and I see that my poor native country will go to ruin from drink, impurity and infidelity, if God does not help us to introduce temperance, purity and faith.

If the Alcohol Congress, which was lost last September on account of cholera, will be held this year, I hope to be there.

CHILE.

TEMPERANCE NEWS.

A letter from Mrs. Leavitt, saying that she could not now think of taking the trip to South America, has been received since my last word to you. We are disappointed but must wait, believing that Chile is not yet prepared for such a reform as she would hope to inaugurate. Truly, I believe temperance work and workers are nowhere held in lighter esteem than in this country, while there can nowhere be greater need of such work.

Our W. C. T. U. proper, I am quite sure, can be reorganized at our next meeting. Our members are almost entirely from our mission. Every merchant here sells liquor and nearly every family serves it at table. I have not yet much hope of reaching those outside, but we do not wish to lose our own connection with the world's band of white-ribbon women. We are already overtaxed with the work of the mission. Some one fresh, bright and rested could do something more than we have done, I am sure. Our leading daily promised us space for a weekly article. That was months ago and the article was duly sent but has never appeared. We shall try again.

The new temperance law, of which I wrote you, is in actual operation and it does prove a great restraint. In country places this is most apparent. We rejoice, because any law concerning the matter is a step in the right direction. I am to have charge of our girls' college the coming year (D. V.) and I am quite sure I can do something with them in the line of temperance instruction. I will report to you later. I have done all with the Petition that I could and the list of names has been forwarded. I think at other points there are now ladies at work. A native worker of whom I wrote you some time ago, Dr. J. Count de Bon, has come to labor in Concepcion this year. I was privileged to explain to him concerning our society four years ago. He readily donned the white ribbon which he asked me to untie from my own dress for him and he is quite proud of it.

I will mail to Miss Willard a photograph of our first Chilean honorary member. It may be of interest in her collection of photographs.

Remember us in your prayers and we in turn will ask the loving Father's blessings on all our loyal white-ribboners in whatever land or of whatever tongue.

GROWTH AND PROSPECTS.

Gospel temperance is growing in our country. We have now forty local unions. Most are weak, by the unwillingness of the better class and the ladies to join us, but where ladies are fellow-workers the cause is gaining power. My peculiar mission work from the beginning, on the do-all principle, is ever before, and in a most flourishing condition. In our infant and other schools we have two thousand four hundred children, and our union in Amsterdam and the port, Ijmuiden, numbers between six and seven hundred members. We are building a new school for four hundred of our children, and this spring we will begin to build the Sailors' Rest, at Ijmuiden. Now sailors and fishermen meet at the house of one of the pilots.

WORLD'S WAVE CRESTS.

THE New Zealand W. C. T. U. convention met at Napier, in March.

THE latest contribution to the Great Petition is a list of names from Kusaie, Micronesian Islands, sent by American missionaries there.

MISS SMEDLEY, an earnest and accomplished Christian worker in Paris, has been appointed organizer of the World's W. C. T. U. for France.

MADAME ANDERSSON-MEIJERHELM is no longer president of the W. C. T. U. of Sweden, nor connected with Woman's Christian Temperance Union work.

MRS. A. J. SCHNACKENBERG, of Auckland, president New Zealand W. C. T. U., was reëlected president of the Auckland union at its recent annual meeting.

A PACKAGE, containing a copy of the World's Petition, with two thousand, three hundred and nine signatures, has been received from Mrs. Eliza Arbo, honorable vice-secretary of the Norwegian W. C. T. U. Miss Charlotte A. Gray had previously collected nearly a thousand names in Norway.

AN instalment of one hundred and fifty-nine signatures to the World's Petition is received from Spain, and the Petition is still in circulation. Mrs. Alice Gordon Gulick, who forwards the names, writes: "In this land we go slowly, and these new ideas must be explained and argued and impressed upon people."

MRS. ANNIE RIDDELL, of Napier, has been reëlected corresponding secretary of New Zealand W. C. T. U., and also has been elected to the same office for the World's W. C. T. U. Dues to the World's W. C. T. U. by vote of the late New Zealand convention have been fixed at the uniform rate of one penny per member.

MRS. HULDAH S. ROCKWELL, of Kingston, Canada, Dominion superintendent of petition work, has just sent in a list of two thousand, two hundred and seventy-four names. Mrs. Rockwell has been at the head of this work in her country for about eight years, and in that time has forwarded about sixty thousand signatures.

THE annual meeting of the Tokio, Japan, Temperance society was held March 11, and the officers reëlected, Mr. Taro Ando, president, and Mr. Sho Nemoto, vice-president. Five councillors were elected and other officers were appointed by the president. The society now numbers 1,200 and is in very good condition.

INVITATIONS were sent out by the Tokio W. C. T. U. to other unions for a meeting April 1, 2 and 3, to organize a National W. C. T. U. in Japan. "This act is simply caused by the loving work of Miss West. This little beginning will, I hope, grow into the power to move the mountains of drunkards into the fertile lands," says Sho Nemoto, the faithful worker.

"THE impression given by Mrs. Andrew and Dr. Kate Bushnell of our white-ribboners in Australia is that they bid fair to lead the van, for they have the 'grit, grace and gumption' of which dear Mary Allen West was wont to speak, in a measure not exceeded by any other group that can be found upon the footstool," says Miss Willard in a recent letter.

MRS. EDITH J. ARCHIBALD, of Cape Breton, N. S., president Maritime W. C. T. U., is a World's Fair commissioner for that locality, and will attend the great Exposition in June. She has recently prepared an article on the Dominion W. C. T. U., for the Dominion Illustrated Magazine, and is always ready with her pen and voice to defend the cause of women.

THERE are at present five round-the-world W. C. T. U. missionaries: Mrs. Mary Clement Leavitt, for seven years in foreign lands, now in California; Miss Jessie A. Ackermann, for nearly six years in Japan, China, India and Australia, now in San Francisco for a few months' rest; Mrs. Elizabeth Wheeler Andrew and Dr. Kate C. Bushnell, over two years in Africa, India and Australia, now in London, and Miss Alice Palmer, who went to South Africa nearly a year ago. Miss Mary Allen West was the sixth missionary. Her field was Japan, and from that eastern land she went to Heaven. There is a loud cry from that country for some one to take up Miss West's work, which is now ripe for the harvest. Who will be the gleaner?

THE Woman's Christian Temperance Union of Pietermaritzburg, Natal, have long felt that their work would be more effectually carried on if they had a home which could be utilized for the many good works it is in their hearts to do, as: Gospel temperance meetings, Loyal Temperance Legion drills, mothers' meetings, social meetings, and Bible classes. It is also proposed to have bed-rooms for women and girls who for various reasons may need the protection of a Christian home, such a home is a pressing need in the city. The members of the union have collected nearly one hundred pounds, but much more will be needed and donations will be thankfully received by Mrs. S. M. Varley, 20 Prince Street, Pietermaritzburg.

THE following earnest words are from Mrs. Harrison Lee, an organizer in Australia: "I am visiting the eastern colonies and helping the W. C. T. T. branches in each place. With tongue and pen am trying to bring about prohibition for the new century. When the colonies federate, and form United Australia, we women are praying that a prohibition plank may be in the national platform. I had intended to go round the world, starting last year, but my country needed me here. I trust the day may come when England, America and Australia shall stand together against a common foe. And may we then, who belong to, and represent the temperance women of these lands, love much, work much, and pray much, that our Father may be glorified, and His kingdom brought to earth."

MRS. ELIZABETH WHEELER ANDREW and Dr. Kate Bushnell, our third and fourth round-the-world missionaries, will return to the United States in time to attend the congresses and conventions connected with the Columbian Exposition in Chicago. Mrs. Andrew is a well-known journalist having been connected with THE UNION SIGNAL and the publications of the Woman's Temperance Publishing Ass'n for many years. Dr. Kate Bushnell is a thoroughly well-educated physician and successful worker in the cause of social purity. Both ladies are earnest and instructive speakers. On their embassy of the white ribbon they have been absent something over two years, in which time they have traveled eighty-seven thousand miles, making sixteen sea voyages on twenty-six different bodies of water, and crossing the equator four times. During this period they have given six hundred and seventy addresses to forty-five thousand people, speaking in England, Wales, Cape Colony, Natal, Orange Free State, The Transvaal, India, Ceylon, Victoria, South Australia, Queensland, New South Wales, New Zealand, Tasmania, Egypt and Palestine.

News from the Field.

NEW YORK STATE NEWS.

Dutchess County W. C. T. U. held their annual meeting in Poughkeepsie recently. Our beloved state president was with them the first day, the guest of Mrs. Homer A. Nelson, and my correspondent tells me "her very presence was an inspiration, while her bright, encouraging words helped and cheered all hearts." The annual address of the county president, Mrs. Nelson, was full of thought and power, and delivered with the earnestness which characterizes all of her utterances. At the close of the address, Miss Barmore, in behalf of the twenty-three unions in the county, presented Mrs. Nelson with a beautiful album containing the photographs of the county officers, superintendents and presidents of the local unions. On the front cover is a silver plate, bearing a suitable inscription. Mrs. Nelson responded in a feeling and touching manner.

A tender memorial service was held in which all the dear ones who have crossed the river, were remembered, Mrs. Burt speaking in remembrance of Mary Allen West. All departments of work are prospering; evangelistic work has been pushed, many meetings held, and souls saved for the Master; $167.37 has been expended in temperance literature; fair work brought in a profit of $417.98, besides doing much good in other ways. No branch of the Lord's work is neglected in this county, and much is reported, which I have not space for. Rev. Dr. Burrill delivered a fine address at the evening meeting.

Cattaraugus county workers met at Gowanda. Fifty-six delegates were present and great interest manifested. Miss Lillian Phelps addressed the convention the first evening, and Miss A. E. Hufstader, a for mer worker in this county, gave an interesting talk on Y evening. Several visitors from Erie county were present, and the clergy of Gowanda took an active part. This county is rapidly advancing in white-ribbon work. They recently made their corresponding secretary, Mrs. Darte, a life member of the state W. C. T. U.

The mid-winter convention of Orleans county was held in the Baptist church at Holley, the home of the county president, Mrs. J. H. Ruggles, who faithfully watches over the interests of her flock. Mrs. Anna E. Rice, of Batavia, state superintendent of mothers' meetings and social purity, conducted a most helpful consecration service, and later on read a grand paper on her department work, relating, among other things, some very pathetic and interesting incidents of work in the Florence Night mission in New York City.

A memorial service was conducted by Mrs. E. A. Bowen, the record showing that seven beloved sisters had passed from death to life. "Blessed are the dead who die in the Lord."

The "Congress of Nations" was a beautiful portrayal by ten young ladies, representing the Goddess of Prohibition, a representative from China, India, Persia, Egypt, Greece, Rome, Germany, England and the United States, each telling their needs to the beautiful goddess, clothed in white seated on her throne, and to each she presented the white ribbon from the bolt of ribbon in her hand until they had formed a circle around the fair goddess belted by the white ribbon, while the solo, "There are Bands of Ribbon White," was beautifully sung by Mrs. Housel.

Mrs. Metcalf, of Brockport, spoke for a few moments on juvenile work of which she is state superintendent. Mrs. Hewitt read an interesting paper on parliamentary practice. This was followed by an interesting workers' conference at which time the gentlemen were allowed to speak. At the evening meeting, after devotional exercises, and some choice music by the choir, Mrs. Mary H. Hunt, of Boston, was introduced and gave such an address as she alone can give. She also opened the question-box and the hour spent in this exercise was most helpful.

Niagara county held its quarterly convention about the same time as Orleans, which is "next door neighbor," so Niagara also enjoyed the privilege of hearing Mrs. Mary H. Hunt. This meeting was held at Sanborn, where everything that could be done for the success of such a gathering, was done. Mrs. Hunt was fully up to the expectations of all, and renewed interest in scientific temperance instruction was the result, of course. The convention was well attended and the reports and papers were gratifying in the extreme. This county has held a series of conferences during the winter, which have been wonderfully effective. They only last one day—no evening session, but during that one day an interchange of thoughts, plans and methods is effected which brings new enthusiasm into the work, and each union represented gets the benefit. Four or five unions unite in each conference, meeting at the most convenient point, and the latent talent is developing grandly in these meetings. One held at Pekin was reported some time ago. Since then two more have been held, one at Ransomville and one at Wright's Corners. The county president, Mrs. Frost, is always in attendance and presides over the conference, which she says, "is just as good as any convention so far as it goes."

Clinton county met at Morrisonville and reports a splendid meeting. Mrs. Mary J. Weaver, of Batavia, was with them and her Bible reading was an inspiration to every heart; it will long be remembered. Mrs. Rist gave an excellent article on "High License," and a paper on "Our Boys," by Mrs. Andrew Williams, contained much that will not soon be forgotten. Reports of different departments and committees contained much interesting matter. Miss Kingsley, who is school commissioner, gave some stirring words, and the new law which gives women the right to vote for school commissioners was discussed.

Action was taken in regard to leaflets for teachers, in reference to the scientific temperance instruction law, and the convention unanimously voted that Mrs. Mary H. Hunt's "Scientific Temperance Advices" should be sent to every teacher in Clinton county, the expense to be met by county funds, and this has already been done. This county deserves credit for this action, and I trust other counties will follow suit. Previous to the convention, Plattsburgh union, of which the county president, Mrs. Frances D. Hall, is a member, had voted to send this monthly of Mrs. Hunt's to all the Plattsburgh teachers, and at the convention they took the entire county.

At the evening meeting Mrs. Weaver addressed a large audience, taking for the theme of her address the ten commandments, arraigning the liquor traffic as leading to a violation of each one. Mrs. Weaver brings to her work a consecrated life and conscientious devotion to total abstinence principles. She spoke in a strong and convincing manner. The next convention is to be held at Saranac Lake in June.

Ulster county held a most profitable and interesting semi-annual meeting at High Falls, with fifty-nine delegates present. Mrs. Burgess, the county president, with timely wit and wisdom, kept all matters well in hand, and everything moved harmoniously. A workers' conference, conducted by Mrs. Low, of Kingston, was most helpful. Grand work is being done in the departments. Mrs. Lathrap has done some efficient work in the county, the beneficent effects of which are far reaching. The Y's, too, have been active, and the results are seen in the Loyal Temperance Legion work.

The local L. T. L., a large band of sturdy boys and girls, were an inspiration to the older workers as they marched in, singing "Onward we are marching, Alcohol to fight." Miss E. U. Yates, of Maine, addressed the children, cautioning them against the use of beer and cider in words earnest and true, and which even the youngest child could understand. She also conducted a parliamentary drill, and delivered a fine address at the evening meeting, her subject being, "What we are coming to." Two poems, by Mrs. Lucy H. Washington, president of Orange county, contributed to the pleasure of the audience, as did the excellent music by local talent. Reports were heard, petitions signed, and other important work done, and the convention closed to meet again in September.

Fulton county reports a good meeting at Johnstown, held in temperance hall and presided over by the county president, Mrs. Frances G. Bentley, who, though in ill health, still faithfully performs her part. Forty-seven delegates and a number of visitors were present. Reports of officers were very satisfactory, that of the treasurer showing a balance of $59.61. Each superintendent presented a paper on her department work which was followed by a discussion. Two of the papers, by vote of the convention, will be published.

Among the visitors were the captain and lieutenant of the Salvation Army of Gloversville, who gave short but stirring speeches. Mrs. Goodwin, of Stratford, also addressed the meeting briefly, and Mrs. Werner, of Johnstown, conducted a parliamentary drill. In the evening an address was given by the pastor of the M. E. church of Johnstown, Rev. W. H. Washburn, and in addition to this a fine program, consisting of recitations and music, was listened to with pleasure. A quartette from the Prohibition club gave some especially fine music. Mrs. George Clark, vice president, occupied the chair during the evening.

A handsome souvenir program of Seneca county convention has been sent me. The meeting was held at Seneca Falls, with Mrs. Blonda B. Colborn as speaker. A school of methods was held in connection with it. Genesee county held its semi-annual convention at Byron Center, all but two of the unions being represented by delegates. Notwithstanding a severe storm, nearly two hundred delegates and members were present and were royally provided for by the good people of Byron. Discussions of unusual interest were carried on, and the business of the convention was carefully guided by the county president, Mrs. Anna E. Rice.

Mrs. Williams, of Le Roy, presented a very able paper on "Inebriety as a Disease," and Mrs. Whitney, of Pavilion, read an interesting paper entitled, "The Relation of the W. C. T. U. to Society, Wine and Beer Drinking." They also have a very ably edited county paper styled The Palladium, its motto, "According to your faith be it unto you." Mabel R. Winter and Nettie B. McKercher, editors.

In the evening Dr. Sarah Morris, of Buffalo, delivered a telling address which received the most marked attention. Her subject was, "Woman's Power in Forming Public Opinion." The convention closed with regret, all wishing to stay longer, and feeling that much good had been done.

The semi-annual convention of Cayuga county was made doubly interesting by the holding of a school of methods in connection with it, conducted by Mrs. Ella A. Boole, our state vice-president. The meeting was held at Moravia, and was presided over by Mrs. P. J. Adams, their newly-elected president, who filled the position most acceptably. The county was well represented, and this proved to be one of the most helpful and instructive gatherings in the history of the organization. Several excellent papers were presented and two parliamentary drills given. Mrs. Hutchinson, of Owego, addressed the L. T. L. and rendered valuable assistance during the session. Mrs. Boole delivered an address at the close on "The Drink Traffic, the Arch Deceiver."

WYOMING.

BEREFT.

Our state has lost one of its very best workers in the temperance cause, our beloved state president, Miss L. Annette Northup, who died at Saratoga, April 5, after an illness of only four days. Messages were immediately sent to her relatives in the east, and to the state officers of the W. C. T. U. Miss Ege, the recording secretary, started immediately by stage to Saratoga, where she arrived just in time to attend the funeral services, which were conducted by the Episcopal minister, Rev. Porter C. McDonald.

The sermon was very impressive, and deep sorrow was shown by all. As there were no relatives present, the casket was followed by Miss Ege and Mrs. Jennings, the superintendent of scientific instruction, who went over in the stage from Rawlins. Next followed Miss Northup's Sunday-school class of girls, dressed in white, with crape on their arms, and then a long line of townspeople. The public schools were dismissed for the time.

The songs sung were "Safe in the arms of Jesus" and "Rock of Ages." The church was crowded and even those who have bitterly opposed our work showed her the deepest respect and were heard to say: "She was a very good woman." The casket was covered with flowers, Miss Ege presenting a handsome bunch tied with white ribbon, and another dear sister made a cross on which the letters W. C. T. U. and the word "president" were traced with small white flowers.

Our departed sister although she had no idea of dying so soon, was prepared for death, being one of the most practical Christians I have ever known. Her troubles and those of her friends who confided in her were always taken to Jesus and she had faith that He would help. Our state will feel her loss in the temperance work, and we pray that the hands of the remaining officers may be upheld.

The unions in the state have been requested to hold memorial services for our president some time this month.

The Saratoga Daily says, "Miss Northup was much esteemed here, and her death will be a shock to the community. She was kind-hearted, generous and faithful. No needy person ever sought her aid in vain, and she never missed an opportunity to say a kind work or do a kind deed. But her life's work is done; the book is complete, and all that was mortal of our friend has passed from our sight and out of our lives forever. While the body clung to life and longed to live, who shall say that for the spirit, death was not a glad and welcome deliverance from bondage."

EXCELLENT photographs of Miss Jennie Casseday can be procured of Miss Jennie C. Benedict, 1327 3d avenue, Louisville, Ky. The management there is about to make an addition to the Jennie Casseday free infirmary for women which affords a splendid opportunity for white-ribboners to contribute a memorial or assist the work in some practical way. Address Miss Benedict for particulars.

FORWARD MOVEMENTS.

The W. C. T. U. work in Ohio moves steadily forward. The midyear meeting of the state executive board was held at Hamilton, in March. Mrs. Henrietta L. Monroe, our state president, presided. The four general officers and eighteen other members were in attendance. It was a meeting of unusual profit. A large amount of business was rapidly dispatched, and from the beginning to the close great spiritual power was manifest. Three public evening meetings were held. The program of the first consisted of five minute speeches by the state superintendents and a talk on parliamentary usage. Rev. Henrietta G. Moore gave an able address the second evening, and the address of the third evening was given by Miss Frances H. Ensign, of Madison, the state superintendent of the Y Branch. Each meeting was instructive and interesting. Bible readings of great power were given each day from eleven to twelve o'clock and were open to the public. At the close of the reading the second day, Rev. Henrietta G. Moore offered the noontide prayer, which lifted all present up to the top of the mountain of spiritual exaltation.

Since our last executive meeting the state union has received five hundred dollars by the will of Mrs. Katharine Vinal, of East Toledo; a share in the Proctor & Gamble Co., of Cincinnati, which with its premium amounted to one hundred and six dollars, the gift of Miss S. M. Sturges, of Mansfield; and has been tendered the W. C. T. U. cottage at Lakeside, valued at three thousand dollars, and a farm in Ashtabula county on which to establish an industrial school for girls. Five hundred dollars of a former bequest has also been paid.

Our state evangelist, Mrs. R. J. Trego, who is also a National evangelist, has met with marked success in her work. She recently held a series of meetings at Good Hope, during which, in a little over two weeks, there were eighty conversions and accessions to the church. Some of these persons had been long addicted to drink. In her meetings at Oxford a goodly number were converted. At West Elkton the union had arranged for three evening and two day services. The interest was so great that the church was filled in the afternoons and literally packed in the evenings. Her work at Rawson was greatly blessed of the Lord, many souls finding Christ. She will give three weeks to Pennsylvania in April, and goes to Iowa for work in May.

A delightful reception was given in the interest of scientific temperance instruction by the union of Rushsylvania, recently, at the home of their district president, Mrs. J. R. Day. Invitations written on dainty white cards, tied with white ribbon, were sent to each teacher and member of the school board and their wives, also to the ministers and their wives. The ladies of the union served a nice lunch, after which Mrs. Day spoke briefly of the object of the meeting and read our state law requiring this teaching in the public schools. The local superintendent of the department read an excellent paper on the duties of the school board and teachers toward the children. Brief speeches were made by some members of the board and the ministers. Music was a charming feature of the program. A most profitable hour was thus spent, and all present expressed their enjoyment of the occasion.

The glad news comes from Toledo that they are doing more work for the cause this spring than ever before in the same length of time. Mrs. S. E. Bartlett, of this city, our state superintendent of narcotics, has just issued a most practical and helpful leaflet upon the enforcement of our state law regarding the sale of tobacco to minors.

The W. C. T. U. of Delaware will entertain the state woman's suffrage association, May 9 to 11.

Ross county union held a successful annual convention a few days since. Many interesting features marked the program, which concluded with one of Col. George W. Bain's stirring lectures.

Physical education is receiving much attention in our state this spring. Mrs. Bertha Morris Smith, of Elmira, N. Y., will meet eight or ten engagements in Ohio, in May, giving her illustrated lecture.

Mrs. Lydia A. Irons, National organizer of the mercy department, has been doing effective work in that line in Clinton, Greene and Allen counties, having made a tour of the unions of those counties in its interests, holding mothers' and children's meetings and giving an evening address in each place.

A NOON REST.

A Noon Rest for working girls and women is open at 210 Market street, Akron, under the auspices of the W. C. T. U. A donation party was held in its interest not long since which brought the union two hundred and thirty-six dollars in cash, a large supply of provisions and a pleasant time. After remembering the state union liberally and the department of scientific temperance instruction, they arranged for a class in physical culture for the working girls of the "Rest," engaged Dr. Mary Wood Allen for a lecture on social purity, and sent to all Akron teachers Mrs. Hunt's "Monthly Advices." Akron union celebrated its nineteenth crusade anniversary, by a meeting of great interest. It was a representative assembly of the town's best citizens. Mrs. G. C. Berry, their president, presided. After a fine organ voluntary, "Give to the winds thy fears" was sung, a fervent prayer was offered, a beautiful solo sung, the Crusade psalm (the 146th) was read, and was followed by the singing of "How firm a foundation." Mrs. Berry spoke briefly of the character and results of the Crusade, and then introduced Rev. H. W. Bennett, D. D., pastor of the First M. E. church, who gave a masterly discourse fairly bristling with facts and statistics, in regard to the temperance question. Abundant seed thoughts were sown which must in time bring forth a rich harvest.

NEWS IN A NUTSHELL.

THE eleventh annual convention of the eleventh district, Iowa W. C. T. U., was held at Rock Valley, April 19 and 20, Mrs. J. B. Shesler, of Spencer, district president, in the chair. An excellent program was carried out.

SUBSCRIBERS to the Oak and Ivy Leaf and The Young Crusader, who wish to pass on their copies after reading, can have them placed where they will do much good by sending them to Miss L. A. Coles, East Windsor, N. Y.

THE Central W. C. T. U. of Nashville, Tenn., at their meeting April 12, passed stirring resolutions indorsing the Temple, commending the zeal and perseverance of Mrs. Carse and voicing their faith and confidence in her and the Temple project.

MRS. ANNA M. PALMER has just closed a three months' series of evangelistic meetings in Illinois, largely in the tenth district under the supervision of Mrs. E. G. Hibben, district president. The meetings have been fruitful of much good. Mrs. Palmer left for the Black Hills, April 20, to remain from four to six weeks.

UPON invitation of a number of temperance citizens of Washburn, Ill., Mr. J. M. Dunn, of Milwaukee, Wis., conducted a series of ten temperance meetings there during the early spring. As a result, a surprisingly large majority was given to temperance candidates at the spring election, and now, as the majority of the village board are temperance men, "saloons must go."

MRS. E. N. LAW, of Michigan, one of our National organizers, has the fortunate ability to sing as well as to speak to "edification." She has now been hard at work all the winter, and has not fewer than six months' calls ahead. She holds schools of method in Minnesota, in May and June, and goes to Manitoba in June to address the provincial W. C. T. U. meetings there.

REV. V. K. F. ELDRIDGE who passed from labor to reward during last winter at the allotted age of human life, had been a Christian worker from early childhood. In later years she became an evangelist, and organizer of church and temperance societies, being ordained to the ministry in Oct., 1890. At her funeral which was held at her home in Needham, Mass., the W. C. T. U. attended in a body.

"TEMPERANCE WIDEAWAKES" is the local name of the Shoshone, Idaho, company of the Loyal Temperance Legion, and right well do they deserve the title with their splendid corps of officers, teachers and "privates." Their first public entertainment, given recently, was received with marked favor, the program consisting of a march, songs, recitations, dialogues and the presentation of the "Prohibition Shoe." Twenty dollars in the collection boxes testified to the appreciation of the audience.

A CORRESPONDENT at Adrian, Mich., tells of the admirable way in which gospel temperance and social work are conducted by their W. C. T. U. To carry on the gospel temperance meetings in the opera-house, the churches take turns in providing the preacher, choir, ushers and collectors. One church remains open, all the others uniting in the opera-house meeting. In this way many are reached who would not enter a church, and pledge signers are secured. The churches also take turns in conducting the socials, to which an admission fee of ten cents is charged. A pleasant program of song and recitations with light refreshments and a conversazione are provided. The Adrian W. C. T. U. Band is composed of twenty young men who wear the white ribbon.

WHEN Mississippi's new dramshop law was enacted there were forty-one dry and thirty-four wet counties in the state. Since the law went into effect, six counties have held elections and voted dry; two others, Lauderdale and Lowndes, have gone dry through the fact that the petition feature of the law was utilized in Meridian and Columbus, which places are not quite dry but will be as soon as existing licenses expire. Only one county in Mississippi (Wilkinson) has voted for license since the new constitution.

FOR years the W. C. T. U. at Port Deposit, Md., has had the subject of starting a reading room for the young people before them, hoping by this means to counteract the bad influence of the saloons. This hope is now realized. They started on faith, securing an old church which they had remodeled and made tenable by suitable furniture. At the opening, recently, some of the principal men of the town made speeches, and an enjoyable time was had. All indications bespeak success for the good work thus started.

MANY Bible students, young and old, in W. C. T. U. ranks have been profiting by the suggestive outlines on the Scripture covered by this year's Sunday-school lessons published monthly in the Oak and Ivy Leaf. These studies have been furnished by the American Institute of Sacred Literature of which Prof. Wm. R. Harper, the well-known Biblicist, is president. To reap the best results, students should enroll for the examination by writing to the institute, at its address, Hyde Park, Chicago, Ill., enclosing fifty cents.

IT is the custom of the Moorestown, New Jersey, W. C. T. U. to conduct each year a W. C. T. U. lecture course. The second speaker failing them this year, they were face to face with the necessity of filling the vacancy at short notice. Fortunately they wrote to the Woman's Lecture Bureau in care of Miss Lucy Anthony, Somerton, Philadelphia, who supplied the appointment for them most promptly and satisfactorily. Unions desiring eloquent and able speakers would do well to consult Miss Anthony, who is both business-like and reliable.

THREE counties of California, San Benito, Monterey and Santa Cruz have sent a beautiful piece of woodwork to the W. C. T. U. exhibit at the World's Fair. It is a large panel made from twelve varieties of California wood, in a mosaic of one hundred and twenty-six pieces. In the center are painted representative views from each of the three counties. On it are painted two knots of ribbon, the white one bears the letters W. C. T. U., the yellow one the names of the counties. The design reflects great credit on the artist, Mrs. E. J. Cone, of Hollister.

WORD has reached us through Mrs. Sallie Chapin, South Carolina's W. C. T. U. president, of the death of Mrs. Sarah Amelia Gause, April 13, at her home in Aiken, S. C. Mrs. Gause was a veteran temperance worker, her name being among those appended to the call for the first National W. C. T. U. Convention (that at Cleveland, Ohio, in 1874). She has been a faithful worker, both at the North and in the Southland, where failing health took her a few years ago. Mrs. Gause's noble Christian character won for her the love of all. The unfortunate and sinning did not fear to go to her for sympathy and assistance. Her life work was "Not to build for ambition or power;

Sainted and blest, she lived but to fill
Her mission of love, unobtrusive and still."

ANNOUNCEMENTS.

The state executive committee meets May 26, at 10 a. m. A full attendance is desired. We trust this convention will be full of rejoicing and praise to God, because in His mercy since our last state convention enough money ($25,000) has been pledged to free our beautiful Temple of its burden of debt. May God bless temperance work and temperance workers in Southern California more abundantly in the future than ever before.

IMPORTANT TO PARENTS.

We, the members of the societies of Chicago, interested in the welfare of women, who are in a position to know the dangers here threatening young, inexperienced or thoughtless girls, give this warning to mothers and guardians of such young persons as may visit Chicago during the World's Fair.

Care should be taken lest the young visitor be exposed to evil influences. The worst as well as the best of man and womankind will be in Chicago during the next six months. Unfortunately it is true that the worst often are more active than the best. The moralist walks the streets quietly and passively, the procurer, the seducer, the fast man and the intriguing woman are aggressive. Like Satan, they continually are "going about seeking whom they may devour." There is no doubt that thousands of girls are seduced yearly in Chicago. We are making an effort to prevent, so far as possible, an appalling increase in the number and urge upon parents the following suggestions for their daughters:

1. If possible accompany your daughters on their visit to the World's Fair, but under no consideration permit them to leave home without the escort and supervision of a trustworthy person of mature age and experience.

2. If you have no relatives or friends with whom you can stay while in the city, or if you are unable to put up at a first-class hotel, be careful in your selection of a boarding house. Beware of the "nice, quiet resort for ladies" recommended by some dashing stranger. Some of these places are in fact assignation houses. If you are without acquaintances in Chicago, address the Woman's and Children's Protective Agency, Room 828, Opera House building, Chicago, Ill., who will refer you to some person who has decent rooms to rent. If you should arrive in the city after business hours alone and friendless it would be wise to ask information from the janitress in the ladies' waiting-room at any depot and to remain under her protection during the remaining hours of the night.

3. Make no hasty acquaintances on the cars. A friendly acquaintance may be a procurer who has taken a train out of the city an hour before to reach the incoming trains and gather in a few evidently inexperienced girls. Girls should accept no invitation from a stranger to visit theaters or concerts and should especially beware of late suppers in so-called restaurants which really are wine rooms in which young girls are excited by music and intoxicants to their ultimate ruin.

4. The newspapers will be full of advertisements of "light work and good wages for young girls." Agents are going through the country districts with the same suggestions. Accept no offer until after thorough investigation of the nature of the work and of the character of the persons advertising.

We send this note of warning because of rumors continually coming to our ears founded on authority we cannot disregard that thousands of young girls are wanted for the brothels during the Fair period and that public schools, lying-in-hospitals, employment agencies, workshops, boarding-houses, the ranks of domestic service and even seminaries are canvassed for new recruits to take the places of the invalids, the suicides, the diseased, the dying and the dead.

Your young, healthy, beautiful daughters may be decoyed to supply and stimulate the expected demand for a means of indulgence in vice which the votaries hope will be less dangerous to themselves than indulgence with those who are "worn out" by previous lives of vice. Who has daughters to spare for such a purpose?

We will redouble our energies in the home field, but it lies with you to prevent the importation of a new supply. Help us—help yourselves.

PETITION OF THE

WORLD'S WOMAN'S CHRISTIAN TEMPERANCE UNION

FOR THE

PROTECTION OF THE HOME

Addressed to the Governments of the World.

Honored Rulers, Representatives and Brothers:

We, your Petitioners, although belonging to the physically weaker sex, are strong of heart to love our homes, our native land, and the world's family of nations.

We know that clear brains and pure hearts make honest lives and happy homes, and that by these the nations prosper, and the time is brought nearer when the world shall be at peace.

We know that indulgence in Alcohol and Opium, and in other vices which disgrace our social life, makes misery for all the world, and most of all for us and for our children.

We know that stimulants and opiates are sold under legal guarantees which make the Governments partners in the traffic, by accepting as revenue a portion of the profits, and we know with shame that they are often forced by treaty upon populations, either ignorant or unwilling.

We know that the law might do much, now left undone, to raise the moral tone of society and render vice difficult.

We have no power to prevent these great iniquities beneath which the whole world groans, but you have power to redeem the honor of the nations from an indefensible complicity.

We therefore come to you with the united voices of representative women of every land, beseeching you to raise the standard of the law to that of Christian morals, to strip away the safeguards and sanctions of the state from the drink traffic and the opium trade, and to protect our homes by the total prohibition of these curses of civilization throughout all the territory over which your Government extends.

Our Library Table.

TEETOTALER AND TRAVELER is an English publication detailing the interesting life and journeyings of the late John Ripley, a most earnest temperance worker. Edited by his wife, M. A. Paull Ripley. Published by the National Temperance Publication Depot, 33 Paternoster Row, London.

IDEALS OF LIFE. HUMAN PERFECTION. HOW TO ATTAIN IT. A SYMPOSIUM ON THE COMING MAN. Edited by Wallace Wood, M. D. This is a cumbersome book, but the great mass of reading it contains has in it much that is rich in thought and valuable for reference. Copies of a circular letter were sent to distinguished men and women—clergymen, poets, novelists, anthropologists, philosophers, psychologists, reform leaders—embodying the question, "What is your ideal of human perfection, and how may it be obtained?" A large number of responses are given, and the known opinions and life-ideals of many who have long since passed away, with the addition of photographs, biographical data of writers, brief extracts from writings, with mottoes and maxims, held in esteem by them. Among the well-known persons quoted are Archdeacon Farrar, Taine and Ruskin, Julian Hawthorne, Theo. L. Cuyler, T. DeWitt Talmage, J. Russell Lowell, George Wm. Curtis, Henry Drummond, C. H. Spurgeon, O. W. Holmes, Björnstjerne Björnson, Edward Everett Hale, Chauncey M. Depew, Frances E. Willard, Julia Ward Howe, Elizabeth Cady Stanton, etc.

Edited by Wallace Wood, M. D., professor of History of Art, University of the City of New York. Published by E. B. Treat, 5 Cooper Union, New York City.

SOME PASSAGES IN THE PRACTICE OF DR. MARTHA SCARBOROUGH. Many of the readers of Our Library Table are familiar with this story from the masterful pen of Helen Campbell, as its first appearance was in the form of a serial in THE UNION SIGNAL. It is distinctively a temperance story, dealing more particularly with the redemptive phase of the question. Dr. Martha Scarborough is a winsome little maid, who, being motherless, grows up under the care of her doctor-father, driving about with him on the long jaunts of his country practice, learning lessons in "reading, 'riting and 'rithmetic" in her low seat in her father's buggy, while he, within doors, listens to and prescribes for the ills of his patients. She is her father's confidante and "partner," and with an intelligence beyond her years—she is only "going on nine" when the story opens—gathers from her father's conversations, which are often more his "thoughts aloud" than words directed especially to her, a store of wisdom touching the use and abuse of the body. In his "rounds" Doctor Martha's father becomes aroused over the condition of those suffering from the ills of inebriety, yet anxious to escape therefrom, and the outgrowth of it all is a home—not spelled with a capital and not a "cure"—but a beautiful home, where diseased bodies made more miserable by agonized souls, find rest,—pure, healthful helpful surroundings. In all this Dr. Martha plays a sweet part. Mrs. Campbell has put into the dress of a beautiful story a whole gospel of means for the redemption of the drink-enslaved and drink-cursed. The book is published in attractive form by Roberts Brothers of Boston.

SCENES FROM EVERY LAND. This elegant volume, edited by Thomas Lowell Knox, contains over five hundred photographic views, in size 8 by 10 inches. These views which are perfect in mechanical finish, embrace the most beautiful and famous palaces, cathedrals, churches, monuments and statues of the Old World; feudal castles, heathen temples and the classic ruins of Italy, Egypt, Sinai and the Holy Land, together with the masterpieces of sculpture and painting in the art galleries of Europe, also representations of the most famous scenes and objects of interest in our own home land. Lew Wallace has written an enthusiastic introduction to this valuable work, closing with these words in regard to the pictorial method of "seeing the whole world": "It has advantages to be taken into account. See what you escape by accepting it—the discomforts of a passage of the ocean, not to speak of its perils, seasickness, confinement in cabins which are little more than exaggerated coffins, head-winds, storms and soulless stewards. . . . . In view of all which I say unto you, verily, verily, there is no labor like the labor of travel." Accompanying each portrait is a brief but comprehensive description of the subject thereof, making the book a veritable encyclopedia of reliable information as well as a source of well-nigh inexhaustible pleasure, for the range embraced by the photographs is so wide as to include that which will meet the liking of all classes of examiners.

AT THE WORLD'S FAIR.

BY ADA M. MELVILLE.

"Well, here we are at last," and Mother Bell heaved a deep sigh that was half a laugh, as she wheeled about to see if all her family were safe. There were so many of them that if she had lost a few on the way there would still have been a good number left to love and care for.

Father Bell stood beside his wife and together they overlooked the little regiment of young folks. There was the baby and five year old Edna with Puggles, the very tiniest of all tiny pug dogs held tightly in her arms. Next came Rosalie and Lillian, twins so much alike that even their mother had to be very careful or she made mistakes as to which was which. Blue-eyed Bradford followed them, a brave, merry-hearted little fellow. Just a year older than Bradford was Bessie, better known as Sunshine. Then came Maurice, the lame lad, who could not walk a step without crutches. Edwin was the oldest of all; he was Mother Bell's "right hand," and Father Bell's "junior partner."

"All here?" said Mother Bell.

"All here!" answered Edna, dropping Puggles in her anxiety to look several ways at once, for this great White City by the Lake was very different from the quiet country town surrounded by hills where she had lived all her little life.

"Now where shall we go first?" asked Edwin looking to his father and mother for direction. Edwin was to be the guide, subject to the direction of his parents. Expressions of opinion were called for, but as each one of the nine wanted to see something different "right straight off" it was very plain that eight would have to be very generous and give up to one.

"I move," said Mother Bell, "that as it is Maurice's birthday, we all do as he would like." Every one thought that would be just the thing.

"Where to, then, Maurice?"

"I believe I want to see Willard Fountain first. We all helped in that, you know."

"Course we did!" cried the twins, who were jumping lightly up and down, holding on to each other for fear something might separate them for a minute. "We every one of us put a dime into it and it's—ours!"

Edwin knew the guide-book pretty well, and it did not take long to find their way to the Children's Building in front of which the fountain stood.

"There it is! There it is! Oh, you little darling!" So saying the twins dashed forward toward the little girl who held out her overflowing cup of clear water to the people.

It was a very merry party that a minute later thronged about the fountain, all talking at once, very much to the amusement of a boy of some fifteen years, who was watching them. He held a half-smoked cigar between his fingers, and had altogether the air of a city boy—a boy who would be an old man before he had lived all the years of a young one. He did not seem to have any one else with him, so addressing himself to Maurice, who was the quietest of the group, he asked what there was about this fountain which interested them all so particularly.

"It is the Willard Fountain and ——"

"We helped pay for it," chimed in the twins.

The young man stared at them. "Two of a kind, eh?" he said. "How can you tell yourselves apart? Excuse me" (to Maurice), "your sisters?"

"Yes; we have a special interest in Willard Fountain because we all belong to the L. T. L., and each one of us subscribed ten cents toward it; not much to give, but it makes the children feel as if they had a share in it, as they have."

"I should say so. Do you live in the city?"

"Chicago? Oh, no! We are what you call country folk."

"Well, you are posted on one thing I had never even heard of," responded the stranger. Just at this point Edna attracted attention to herself by her evident desire to say something. She was a well-behaved lassie and waited her turn to speak.

"Well, missie, did you help to put this young lady here, too? What is your name? Mine is George Saunders."

"I'm Edna Danforth Bell. Please, could you throw that away?" pointing to the cigar held all this time lightly between his fingers.

"Why, Edna!" gasped Bradford, who had had some hopes of impressing this young man that if they did not live in Chicago they at least knew how to behave as well as he did.

"Pardon our little girl," said Mr. Bell, lifting his hat, "she is a radical Prohibitionist along some lines, and very outspoken."

"So I see. It is all right. Why should I throw away my cigar, Miss Edna? I like reasons for doing such a rash deed."

They all waited breathlessly for her reply.

"'Cause—'cause—why, it's bad, and gentlemen don't smoke, do they, papa?" Papa had said this to his children so often that she felt sure he would support her. It was a bit embarrassing, but Puggles came to the rescue in a very novel way. He had been lapping the water at the base of the fountain, but now came up to the young man with the cigar, and sniffing a minute in the air began barking as hard as he could.

"Hullo, Atom, what's the matter with you? Do you object to cigars also?"

"Yes, he does," said Edna, and stooping down she called the dog to her. "See, Puggles! go get it!"

The little fellow made a dash at the hand of the young man, and before he could be stopped had possession of the objectionable cigar. With a great many wrinkles on his small black nose, and a great deal of growl in his small throat, as if he were worrying an enemy, he carried the cigar off to a bit of soft ground and quickly proceeded to bury it in the earth. Then he returned, took a long drink of clean water, and going to Edna whimpered to be taken up in her arms. Every one laughed, and George patted the little fellow approvingly.

"Who did you say built this fountain?" he asked, turning to Mrs. Bell, and very glad to change the subject.

WILLARD FOUNTAIN.

"The children of the Loyal Temperance Legion—the children's department of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union."

"Oh, I see; that accounts for the name 'Willard.' Are all these your children, and all as radical as Miss Edna and the pug?"

"Indeed we are," spoke up Edward for the first time. "Don't you think King Alcohol ought to tremble at sight of us?"

"'King Alcohol'? I had a little brother about his size"—pointing to Bradford—"who used to talk a great deal about King Alcohol not long before he was taken sick. He used to wear a badge, and he was so fond of it that we left it on him when we buried him."

"Was it like this?" asked Bessie, pointing to the Maltese cross she wore.

"Why, yes, I believe it was. Now, isn't that queer? I knew he belonged to some society or other, but we none of us paid much attention to it. It must have been the same as this. What did you call it?"

"The L. T. L.—Loyal Temperance Legion," answered the twins in concert.

(Concluded next week.)

PRAISE to the cup of refreshing, sparkling and bright as the sun;
Richer than trophy or jewel, ever by conqueror won,
Water! cold water! we quaff thee! Tuning our lips to thy praise,
Pledging our lives to thy service, shunning the drink that slays.

—From Marching Songs for Young Crusaders.

DEAR BOYS AND GIRLS:—Before this paper reaches any of you, the great Columbian Exposition, which has been talked about so much, will have been formally opened to the world. You are all interested in this important event because you are temperance boys and girls, who are proud of living in such a land as ours and are anxious for its honor and glory.

I wish I could tell you that the prohibition laws of the district on which the World's Fair is built were not to be broken, and that liquor would not be sold within the grounds or in the vicinity. Although the regular "saloon" will not be there, it is pretty certain that alcoholic drinks will be on sale in many of the restaurants unless something is done to prevent the violation of the law. When the Loyal Temperance Legion comes out to battle in the world, it will enforce the prohibition laws, will it not?

You will be glad to know that smoking is prohibited within the buildings. True, it is on account of the danger from fire, but we know many other good reasons why people should not smoke, do we not?

Another fact which rejoices all good people and those who observe the Lord's day is that the Fair gates will be closed on Sunday.

In your letters to the Cozy Corner tell me what you think of these things.

Yours affectionately,

Aunt Jane

COZY CORNER LETTERS.

Mamma was reading the Cozy Corner letters and when I heard William Noe had sent ten cents to the Children's Fountain I wanted to send a dime. I'm a little temperance boy, too, not quite five years old.

GUY BERVIG.

Hillsboro, N. D.

The boys and girls are sending in their dimes rapidly, and you'll always be glad that you have "stock" in the beautiful fountain, Guy. How do you like the picture?

I would like very much to join the Cozy Corner. Is there enough room for me? I belong to the L. T. L. and will do all I can for temperance. I will send ten cents to Miss Gordon for the Willard Fountain. I have written to you two or three times before, but I am afraid you did not get the letters, as I did not see them in print. With love to the Cozy Corner.

HELEN MOODY.

Springfield, Ill.

You are very welcome in our Corner, Helen, dear. Your letters have been among those which have been "crowded out" from week to week, but have been much appreciated by Aunt Jane.

Mamma takes THE UNION SIGNAL and I like to read it. I will send ten cents to the Children's Fountain. I earned it by packing eggs for papa. I am going to be one of the self-denial girls. I will do without ice cream and send fifteen cents to the self-denial fund. I would like to join the Cozy Corner.

A RATHER unusual freak of journalistic generosity was exhibited in the Christian at Work for April 13. This paper has long been noted for its fearless position on any subject it chooses to discuss. Its temperance editorials ring the most musical of Prohibition bells, and whatever its editor, Joseph Newton Hallock, wishes to say, he says. In the issue referred to, Mr. Hallock contributes, gratuitously, an illustrated article on the Sterlingworth Sanitarium at Lakewood, N. Y., which seems to possess a sensible as well as a renowned cure for consumption. Mr. Hallock writes in the interests of humanity, and is willing to give many references for the statements he makes. Copies of the paper can be had upon application to Sanitarium office. We also publish their advertisement on second cover page of this issue.

What the Doctors Themselves Take.

It is the most natural thing in the world that a physician should be slow and reluctant to prescribe an excl sive remedy like Compound Oxygen, of which he has, perhaps, little knowledge and less interest. To do this, always means to him a loss of more or less patronage and a corresponding reduction of his income. This natural feeling of self interest is one of the constant forces of opposition against which Drs. Starkey & Palen's Compound Oxygen has to contend; but this very fact makes the indorsement and recommendation of Compound Oxygen by good physicians, all the more valuable when received. In the more than 23 years in which Compound Oxygen has been making its wonderful record in the cure of such diseases as Consumption, Catarrh, Asthma, Neuralgia, Dyspepsia and Nervous Prostration, more than 1,000 physicians have been led to see its great value, prescribe it for their patients or families, or use it themselves. An interesting history of the discovery of Compound Oxygen, its mode of action, and the record of many surprising cures, will be sent free to any one interested, by Drs. Starkey & Palen, 1529 Arch St., Philadelphia, or Chicago, San Francisco, New York, and Toronto, Ont

SINCE OUR LAST ISSUE.

The river floods in the Mississippi and Ohio Valleys have receded.

The betrothal of the Princess May to the Duke of York is announced.

Seventy-two students graduated from McCormick Theological Seminary (Presbyterian) last Thursday.

A panic in Wall street last Friday caused a decline in stocks and much excitement among that class of financiers.

A dispatch, May 4, announces the triumph of the government troops, under General Vasquez, over the revolutionists in Honduras.

The big reservoir at Lewiston, O., gave way, letting the water out in a stream three miles wide and ten feet deep, doing much damage to life and property.

Mrs. Chauncey M. Depew, of New York, president of the woman's auxiliary for the Hahnemann Hospital and noted for her work in many charities, died May 7.

The famous army bill, for five months under discussion, was finally rejected in the German Reichstag Saturday, by an overwhelming vote and followed by the dissolution of that body on order of the Emperor.

Through the failure of the air-brakes to work, an engine jumped the track at Lafayette, Ind., Saturday night, and crashed into the depot, killing and injuring waiting passengers and employés at the depot and on the train.

"No admission," was the edict at the gates of the Columbian Exposition last Sunday, the National Commission and local Directory thus fulfilling the condition of the Congressional gift, that the Fair be closed on the Sabbath.

The semi-annual meeting of the board of bishops of the M. E. church was in session at Evanston, Ill., May 3–7, with fifteen in attendance, the absent members being Bishop John P. Newman, who is now in South America making a tour of the mission stations there; Bishop William Taylor, who is stationed in Africa; and Bishop Thoburn, whose post is in India.

THE appropriations of the fifty-five foreign nations and colonies exhibiting at the Fair amount to $6,589,779. The total amount raised in the United States is $20,000,000.

MISS JESSIE ACKERMANN, our second self-sacrificing round-the-world missionary, who arrived in San Francisco recently, will remain in California during the summer. She will visit Chicago and the World's Columbian Exposition in the fall, and attend the conventions of the World's and National W. C. T. U. in October, where she will be a highly honored and inspiring participant.

THE Board of Lady Managers which has done so much to represent women at the Fair is composed of eight members nominated by the commissioners-at-large; of two women from each state and territory, and the District of Columbia, nominated by the World's Columbian commission and of eight women residents of Chicago, appointed by the president of the World's Columbian Commission.

THE following ladies have been chosen by the National Woman's Christian Temperance Union to represent our organization at a joint conference of all the National temperance associations in the United States: Mrs. Woodbridge, Mrs. Stevens, Mrs. Fessenden, Mrs. Hoffman and Mrs. Lathrap. It is expected that a preliminary meeting of this conference will be held at the time of the International Temperance Congress in Chicago, June 5–9.

OUR note of exultation last week over the prohibition of smoking at the World's Fair grounds was premature. We saw the signs with our own eyes and heard the guards enforcing the order on opening day, but one week's test was sufficient to persuade the money-making directory that a few half dollars might be lost because of the "discomfort that the prohibition would occasion those gentlemen who were accustomed to smoke their cigars during a large part of the day." No thought, apparently, is given that large class of clean men who object to cigar smoke in their faces as much as the majority of women do. Well, we must look elsewhere for the millennial sign, "Smoking prohibited."

A GREAT victory for purity in the art exhibit at the Columbian Exposition has been gained. Dr. Selina H. Peabody, chief of one of the departments of liberal arts and one of the managers of the Exposition, has issued an order excluding all nude studies from the art galleries which he controls. The superintendent of the department of purity in literature and art in the National W. C. T. U., Mrs. Emilie D. Martin, has been for two years and a half actively engaged in arousing public sentiment for a pure art exhibit at the Exposition. The Protestant church, the Roman Catholic church, the Y. M. C. A. and the Christian Endeavor organizations have stood shoulder to shoulder with the W. C. T. U. in this commendable effort, and now the crown of victory appears, in part, at least. Morality has won.

"LADY HENRY SOMERSET victorious" were the words of a welcome cablegram from Miss Willard last Thursday. Then we knew that the important election in the annual convention, or council, of the British Women's Temperance Association had resulted in the retention of Lady Henry Somerset as president. As our readers know, Lady Henry has had opposers in her ranks this past year, because of her liberal generalship. The conservative element wished to confine the association to the narrow policy of one plank, temperance, throwing out all correlated interests, such as suffrage, labor, etc., even refusing to pass resolutions of sympathy with such reforms, thus showing their dislike to the "do-everything policy of the American union." Hence the reëlection of Lady Henry Somerset means not only a personal victory for a gifted and magnetic leader, but the focusing of many aggressive reforms by the British Women's Temperance Association, of which temperance, of course, will ever be the goal.

THE underhanded attempt to wreck the Total Abstinence Life Association, of which our honored friend, Gen. Singleton, is president, is happily proving to be a failure. A Chicago paper, a few weeks ago, published a purported interview with the Illinois state's attorney, in which he was represented as making grave charges against this association. This gentleman has authorized Gen. Singleton to state that he had never been interviewed by any reporter on the subject and had not indorsed the charges made in the Chicago newspaper. Of course the whole force of the attack is removed when the attorney general's statement is thus made public. There stand at the head of this insurance association, names long known and highly respected in Chicago's business and philanthropic circles as well as in the National Prohibition party, and that they are made a target for this persecution is in keeping with the history of all reform movements. According to the statements of the officers, whose word we respect, the association is in a prosperous condition, the assets being eighty-four thousand, four hundred dollars in excess of liabilities.

IT is with keen regret that we announce a necessary change in Miss Willard's plans for the summer. She had fully expected to return in May in time for the Woman's Congresses and to take part in many other important congresses connected with the Columbian Exposition. Miss Willard writes concerning this: "In the sense of an opportunity for expression and influence, this is the greatest disappointment of my life, but in another sense I believe that great good will come of the totality of my efforts from this period of enforced quiet. I shall expect to be with you in good time for our World's and National conventions in October, meanwhile you may think of me as keeping so far as possible in quiet country places, dictating, if I am able, a part of every day and spending much time in the open air. With God's blessing on these efforts of recuperation, I hope to return to you as well as usual." As is well known, Miss Willard's health has not been up to grade for a year or more, but the exaggerated accounts of her present condition as found in some of the daily papers should not for a moment be credited. It is time that we gave our great leader a rest, and it delights her associates in office to know that Lady Henry Somerset and Miss Gordon will accompany her to the Engadine in Switzerland where the warmest summer months will be passed. The National union has twice voted her a year's vacation; let us see that she has half of it now and send her no letters except an occasional note of loving good-will. Absolutely necessary business letters should be addressed to Mrs. Hannah Whitall Smith or Miss Anna Gordon, 57 Gordon Square, London, N. W., England. With hope strong in our hearts and words of cheer on our lips, let us go forward believing that our beloved chieftain will be spared to us many years.

ON another page will be found an arousing article by Mrs. Elizabeth Wheeler Andrew, one of our best known round-the-world missionaries. Our readers have followed her work in connection with that of Dr. Kate Bushnell with keen interest, doubtless desiring much more information than her necessarily infrequent letters and the delicate character of her mission afforded. These two consecrated workers went to India nearly two years ago, commissioned by Parliament with the very important and secret task of investigating the enforcement of the English purity laws in the British cantonments. They have recently been recalled to England to testify before a Parliamentary committee as to the social condition of these military stations. While awaiting more particulars we extract a few sentences from Mrs. Andrew's last letter: "The Lord wonderfully helped me all the three days of witnessing before the committee from Parliament. I cannot praise God sufficiently for all His manifested presence and power in my soul during these days. We have had a vast mass of evidence to go through, but none too much to conquer this stupendous system of iniquity (C. D. Acts.)" Mrs. Andrew's article was written many months ago, but it was found to be necessary for the success of the undertaking to withhold the publication until now. This is undoubtedly one of the most important and unique Christian commissions ever granted to man or woman, and we do not wonder that Mrs. Andrew exclaims: "It all seems like a dream that little I could have been so honored of the Lord as to have been one of the two agents in this work for Him," and that William T. Stead commands, "Go forth, nothing doubting, rejoice exceedingly that this honor has fallen to your share." THE UNION SIGNAL is proud to claim Mrs. Andrew as one of its old-time and highly-prized editors, and Dr. Bushnell as a frequent contributor. May the God of all peace and strength be with them.

MEASUREMENTS.

BY LUCY H. WASHINGTON.

Were distance measured by the heart,
Then chasms long and wide
May hold ten thousand miles apart,
Those living side by side;

While sundered far, by land and sea,
Still, loving hearts draw near;
Desolate, quite, they cannot be
Who hold each other dear.

If time is measured by delight,
They live a thousand years
Who ne'er have known a weary night—
Told prayers on beads of tears.

While those who toil through ceaseless pain,
May ne'er be said to live—
Our length of days shall be made plain,
When we life's record give.

If friendship's measure is by word,
And not proclaiming deed,
Loudest professions may be heard
When there is least of need.

If wealth is measured by its use,
Oft so-called rich are poor;
The widow with unfailing cruse,
Possessed a boundless store.

By leagues at sea, by miles on land
We measure earth, yet say
Heaven, which no human rule hath spanned,
Cannot be far away.

If space is compassed by our thought,
Then let us onward press;
Then earth and sea and sky are nought,
But kingdoms to possess.

THE TRUTH OF IT.

BY HELEN CAMPBELL.

That is to say such portion of the truth as one woman's brain could seize upon and assimilate, said brain owning to its own streaks of obtuseness, well-rooted prejudices, warranted to interfere with the growth of the most promising truth, and empty corners unoccupied from the beginning, but on the whole claiming there was honest material in the makeup of which its owner had always sought to make the most.

It was the country aunt who, as one means of entertainment, had been taken to a studio reception, and whose face in the midst of it had worn its most inscrutable expression. And when I say "country aunt," it does not include any of the invidiousness attached to that title. This aunt had known cities, and though she regarded them as in most points unfit for the habitation of rational beings, still came to them at intervals for that stir of thought and change of routine that she knew as one of the essentials of healthy living. This pretty niece had grown up under her wing, and married one of the boys, who had come next door to it, since he had spent half his time with the small and adoring playmate, still small and still adoring, and with excellent reason. "Young John," called so to distinguish him from a series of other Johns in the way of uncles and grandfathers, had studied medicine, and was a rising physician in the city of his choice, wedded to its newest hospital, of which Mrs. John pronounced herself profoundly jealous, and of which she was certainly profoundly proud. Aunt Ruth loved art in her quiet way, and from her childhood Mrs. John had been taught some of its meanings and studied photographs and fine engravings and etchings, waiting for the day when great galleries might be nearer and give at last the enchantment of color.

It was natural then that with the new life, into which came at once, as household friends, two or three artists, known to Dr. John in his student days, Mrs. John should revel in the new possibilities, and never lose a "studio day." This land of Bohemia, in which the younger ones lived in strange ways unknown to decorous New England households, had unending charm, though her own dainty housekeeping kept to the old ways, in which Aunt Ruth had trained her and in which Dr. John found entire content.

Into the pretty house near the river on an up-town street, Aunt Ruth had come for her first visit, and as the highest reward for leaving her own nest behind, found herself in the midst of a crowd of people, who all said the same things, and then hastened on to say them somewhere else. Here and there as they had made their round through the great building given over to artists chiefly, she had seen a room or two of almost monastic bareness, the easel and its picture the only point of color, but the crowd paused longest in one where a charming mother and two daughters, all three artists, had brought together the collected treasures of long life abroad, from Spanish leather hangings down to Chinese dragons and a mass of bric-a-brac, before each and all of which the guests said, "How charming!" and "How lovely!" and then departed to duplicate these emotions at another shrine.

Aunt Ruth, a little bewildered, seated herself at last, and while Mrs. John talked gave herself to observation. She faced a corner cupboard filled with airy porcelain and bits of Venetian glass, but aside from these saw nothing that indicated everyday living, though it was true these articles might be pressed into service at an impromptu lunch. The broad divan on which she sat had its pile of cushions, and in a mere cubby-hole of a room at the back of the great one used as a studio and divided into two by a tall screen, was a very small and knobby lounge supposed to be invisible to the public. They lived here, she had been told, this mother and her two tall and blonde daughters, dressed picturesquely and making part of the general effect. How did they live? where did they live, for the carved sideboard was big but not big enough for habitation; the cabinets were out of the question, and even the great Norwegian chest, black with age and covered with carving, could not well hold more than one. Perhaps that was the solution, for the divan was broad and could easily hold two, but though this might settle the sleeping question, there was another no less vital phase of living—eating. Not one hint of the inevitable pots and pans appeared, nor was it certain as her eyes again searched every corner, that room remained for a loaf of bread, much less its usual accompaniments.

Aunt Ruth drew a long breath. Perhaps Mrs. John would make things plain, and as this thought came she looked up to find the eyes of the younger daughter full upon her and in them a queer look; a look—yes—of comprehension at which Aunt Ruth first blushed a fiery red, and then at the dawning smile in the girl's eyes burst into a laugh in which Mrs. John instantly joined.

"I don't know what it is about," she said, as she hastily crossed the room, "but I have laughed all my life whenever you did, Aunt Ruth, just because every note of it is so infectious. But why you laugh too, Eleanor, unless for the same reason, I do not see."

"Because we are detected, tried and convicted as frauds and this is the judge, jury and executioner," Eleanor answered, pausing by them and looking half relieved, half apologetic. "She wonders how we can endure it. So do I. I have always wondered. We sit up nights to produce effects. We are all, they say, so ideal, so unconventional, so picturesque, so—in short, artistic. We are sacrificed to effects. We can't afford a studio and a home too. New York doesn't allow anybody homes but the rich and the poor. The great in-betweenity has to manage as it can. And we do. I will reveal the whole. You shall see that there is a streak of honesty left in the family. In that sideboard is an oil stove and its most sacred niches hold paper bags of groceries, taken out as required. In that cabinet is the washing apparatus, for our water is in the hall only, and I was in terror lest that prying Miss Anderson should turn the key and disclose the mysteries. Coal has to be bought by the barrel, and where do you suppose we keep it?"

Aunt Ruth looked helplessly about.

"It can't be in one of the cabinets," she said, "and you surely wouldn't cover it with an India shawl, though, really,—"

"Go on," Eleanor said. "You are ready to believe even that. We don't exactly and yet we do. It's in the chest under it, and every time we take out enough for the grate fire I have to devote myself to getting the thing back into just those folds. It's part of the background, you know."

"Wouldn't you rather," said Aunt Ruth mildly, "have a little less background and a little more of the ordinary kind of foreground?"

"Impossible under the present system," returned Eleanor gravely. "This is all part of our capital, you see, and we are the victims of capital. Now I am a Philistine. I admit it boldly. I love the common and the comfortable and would like to knock all this into a cocked hat,—at minutes, you know. I hate a fusty divan and blankets smelling of old wood and paint and immortal mustiness. I am tired to death of coffee in a mug and tea in a tumbler. I want a dining-room and dishes. I want a regular bedroom and a dear white bed and pillows. I am sick of everything being something else, and nothing what I want it to be. But I suppose it is a question of the kind of slavery you choose. Artists are bond slaves to effects, and the good housekeeper is to things, and if you try to live in your studio you must take the consequences. But if I were more comfortable instead of being only 'deliciously decorative,' I am certain I should paint a better picture, and some of these days I shall try it."

"You'll soon have the chance," Mrs. John said with a laugh as she turned away. "Aunt Ruth always did in some way compel everybody to tell the truth, and I should never have known your real mind if she had not come today."

"What I think is," said Aunt Ruth as they made their way toward home, "that it must be demoralizing to always pretend. And then the wear and tear of it! Are there others like them?"

The question answered itself not only that day but on others in which Mrs. John led the investigator into the dark corners of many a studio given over also to "effects," and indifferent as to who knew it. But when another year the visit was repeated and Aunt Ruth asked with interest how her first acquaintances fared, Mrs. John laughed.

"There are some makeshifts yet," she said, "but Eleanor has painted, in a wreath of her loveliest flowers, 'Things are not what they seem,' just over the coal box which was her wedding dowry. I wrote you, you know, that she had married the young marine painter who had the studio opposite theirs, but he is very prosperous, relatively, and they have two big rooms and with screens you can make as many as you like. But his last picture sold for so much they will soon have a house, or certainly a flat."

"A flat is only another means for the abolition of homes," said Aunt Ruth seriously, "for nobody ever has any privacy in one, and Howells is right when he says that a moral human being cannot grow up in one. Give me an old-fashioned New England country house. The best things in this republic have come out of just such houses. Shams kill honesty, and a flat is a sham, or at any rate a partial one."

"Wait till I have shown you an ideal one," said Mrs. John, but Aunt Ruth shook her head.

"The one want of this generation is honest living," she said, "and while I admit that a flat may hold honest people, I consider the system that necessitates them a false one, and I protest."

"You are a Socialist," said Mrs. John, "and I shall tell John," and here the talk ended till Dr. John appeared, announced himself as entirely of Aunt Ruth's opinion, and then by way of tonic, carried her off to look at some "improved dwellings" in a remote street, in which honesty was said to have ruled from foundation up to the last sheet of tin.

A WINTER'S PURITY CAMPAIGN IN INDIA.

BY ELIZABETH WHEELER ANDREW.

We landed in Calcutta December 21, 1891, and called the same afternoon on Mr. Madge, to whom we had been directed by Mrs. Josephine Butler, Mr. Stansfeld, Professor Stewart and other purity workers in England as a trusted adviser and friend of our cause. We found him loyal, kind and helpful to the last degree during the heavy strain of the months that followed.

God had so guided our ways that we came into port on a vessel so small that no passenger list was published. Dr. Bushnell and I were the only passengers and therefore we arrived unannounced, which was just what we desired, as we were obliged to make our inquiries in the most careful manner in order to get at the truth of the accusation that India was secretly acting in defiance of the home government by maintaining a system of laws in military cantonments for the regulation of vice.

Christmas Day was spent in Calcutta, amid the strange scenes of this truly oriental city. Much of the day we were on our knees, crying to God for help in our great undertaking. A few days later we started northward strangers in a strange land. We felt indeed that God had called on the "worm" to "thresh the mountains," but He comforted and strengthened our hearts by His mighty promises, and by the constant presence of the Holy Spirit. We were led, providentially, to an American friend, to whom we gave our full confidence, and through whom we obtained our interpreter, a consecrated woman, who proved to be the very gift of God to us in the difficult work that followed. To no others did we reveal our undertaking, save to a noble missionary in the far north, until our task was finished and our report forwarded to England.

The following general statement will give some idea of the work accomplished: (Dhai means the nurse in a Lock Hospital; mahaldarni, the woman in charge of the degraded women in the military chakla, or brothel; Lock Hospital, in this connection, means the place where the women go for inspection, and in which they are compelled to remain for treatment, if diseased.)

Number of miles traveled in India, 3,697; military stations visited, 10; (five visited the second time, on return journey); studied cases of degraded women in cantonment stations, 637; interviewed personally, 395; interviewed hospital dhais, 11; interviewed mahaldarnis, 18; interviewed native physicians of Lock Hospitals, 6; interviewed patients in Lock Hospitals, 34; interviewed law pleaders, 2; interviewed various other persons.

In these Lock Hospitals we studied the annual reports for 1891, and books and records as far as possible, taking careful notes of everything important in interviews, records, etc., and drawing plans of several government houses of shame and Lock Hospitals.

We worked incessantly for four months; toward the last as the dreaded hot season came on apace, often traveling at night, and out all day under the burning sun, holding meetings with the women and gathering evidence. What scenes pass before my mind and thrill my heart as I recall any one of the military stations visited! I can reproduce only a few of these for the great host of UNION SIGNAL readers, but these will be typical of the whole. Come with me into these scenes, and I pray as I write that the loving Father of us all may fill the soul of every white-ribboner with yearning sympathy toward these, her sisters in India, and with burning indignation against the cruelty and oppression under which they groan to-day—heathen women enslaved by so-called Christians!

We pass through the gateway of a mud wall into a court-yard, around which are the rooms for the inmates of this chakla, set apart for the artillery regiment of this large cantonment. We were here yesterday, and the women eagerly received our news of a Redeemer for them, and entreated us to come again, saying that they would invite all the women in the neighborhood; so we find a large group on entering.

Let me describe their strange costumes, as they sit on the light native beds which they have drawn up close to us, or oftener still on the ground, and I think you will see what a motley scene they present. (These notes of their dress I penciled as they sat around us). One near me wears a bright yellow chaddar over her head and shoulders, red jacket and full white pyjamas or trousers; another, a dark blue jacket over a thin, long yellow garment with yellow sleeves, full red skirt and pale pink pyjamas; a girl with intense face and burning dark eyes, who hangs on every word we utter, has thrown over her smooth, black hair a deep pink chaddar, tinsel-edged and wears a purple jacket trimmed heavily in gold-lace embroidery, green pyjamas, many silver and gold ornaments, necklace, ear-rings hanging around the complete rim of both ears and weighing them down, nose jewels, bracelets, anklets and silver thumb-rings with tiny mirrors set within. This list of ornaments might be added as accessory to nearly every woman's dress, with slight variations as to value and number. The bare feet are thrust into embroidered sandals turned up at the toes! A very pretty girl, extremely young, is all in white save a changeable silk jacket of red and purple, thin white chaddar edged with silver tinsel; another, with black chaddar, embroidered in gay colors, red jacket, full white trousers; another, deep crimson chaddar, edged with gold tinsel, yellow silk pyjamas, and jacket of the same; another with pale yellow chaddar, white jacket, and black silk pyjamas.

This was a representative scene. At first the strangeness of our surroundings and the barbaric appearance of the degraded women distracted our attention to a degree, but we soon became so accustomed to all these things and so intensely absorbed in our sacred work and in the histories, thoughts and feelings of these poor enslaved creatures that we moved as freely and unconsciously among them as if in our own native land. Our interpreter was gifted with a wondrously sweet voice, and she usually began our meetings, either in the chaklas or Lock Hospitals, after cordial greetings on our part, and equally cordial welcomes on theirs, by singing a plaintive hymn in their own language. Many times they were sobbing before the strain was finished. Then how they would pour out their pitiful stories! and we would weep and talk and pray with them. Usually, they followed us to the carriage, or to the gateway, if patients in the Lock Hospital, blessing us and showering their tender gratitude upon us for coming to them and caring for them. I well remember how, on one occasion, the women ran from room to room of the Lock Hospital, waving their hands to us through the bars, as we walked along the street outside, after saying good-bye, and begging us to come again.

At the close of the meeting which I began to describe a paragraph or two farther back, a woman who had formerly been a dhai in the Lock Hospital, and who spoke fair English, broke out into a vehement denunciation of the governmental regulation of vice. She exclaimed: "Oh, what a shame that the government does these things!" She pictured vividly the degrading scene in the examination room, stamping her foot as she spoke, her whole delicate frame quivering with indignation against the wrongs of her countrywomen. We asked: "And do the other women hate these things also?" They all joined as one voice in expressions of loathing against the system that enslaved them. The first woman exclaimed again bitterly: "Oh, shame! Very shame! It is very disgusting. The commander-in-chief, the colonel and all of them all the way down—your Christian men—they all favor these things. The Queen does not countenance it, for she has daughters, and she cares for her daughters in India also; it is the commander-in-chief." The girl with the burning dark eyes said earnestly: "I would go with you anywhere if I might but have my food and clothing, that I might be saved from this exposure."

They pleaded with us to do what we could to have these hated inspections done away with. Then they put their hands together and looked upward, praying God to bless us and help us to help them in this matter. One of the degraded women present at this meeting was so moved that she placed her two little children—the father a sergeant gone home to England—in a mission to be brought up as Christians. We saw many children of tender years being reared in these dreadful surroundings; a large proportion of these with fair Anglo-Saxon features. Is not this a harvest of woe?

Another scene comes vividly to my mind. Away up on the Northwestern frontier, in one of the regimental chaklas, we sat far into the deepening darkness, talking with the old mahaldarni and five women, in a little room to which one of the girls had invited us on entering the court-yard. They said there were so few women here because they were afraid; there had been so much ill-usage; the men of the regiment were very bad, and often being drunk, beat them and robbed them, not only refusing the few pice they claimed, but even taking away their cotton quilts, and selling these to their own cooks to get more money with which to buy the drink. They described one woman, who was beaten terribly and cut in her arms and breast; after this, several ran away to another regiment. They told us these things in a quiet, hopeless way, stretching their thin fingers by turns over a wretched charcoal fire, the only warmth they had, though the winter wind swept in unhindered through the opening—for door there was none—piercing through the cotton garments in which they shivered. By and by one of the number lighted the rude lamp, a bit of wick in an earthen dish of oil, and set in a niche in the mud wall; its flickering flame served only to deepen the gloom.

Our hearts bled for them. What could we do? They were in the power of a relentless system. Registered, compelled to go on and on regularly as ordered, or be expelled from the cantonment, which literally meant beggary and starvation; for there is scarcely an industrial opening for respectable women in India, much less for those who have become outcasts; their friends would never take them back; their caste is broken, and they are regarded as social pariahs.

Still farther north, near the gateway of India, through which marched the conquering armies of Alexander the Great, we found a large bazar, into which all the women of the cantonment were gathered. Their houses were twice numbered; one, in small figures, was the house number, while the huge figures on a circular piece of tin, fifteen inches in diameter, represented the registered number of the girl, and corresponded to the number enrolled in the cantonment magistrate's office. As we entered the street a woman called to us, warning us not to come there, that none but wicked women lived in that street. But when we answered that we were missionaries and were seeking them, she invited us into her house, and ran to call others. Six women came. A mother and two daughters lived here. The women spoke with deep disgust of the examinations. They said if they did not obey the regulations they would be expelled from the cantonment. We asked, "Is that a hardship?" They answered, "It is great hardship—starvation! No one would give us work."

MY IDEAL MAN.

[Some notable women herein draw their picture of the man "that wert never matched of earthly knight's hand, the fairest person and the goodliest of any" that ride in the world's press for place and power. It is evident the old image of Sir Launcelot is not dimmed in the modern woman's vision—"the truest friend to thy sworn brother of any that ever bestrode horse, most courteous and gentle of all that sat in hall among dames, and sternest knight to thy sworn foe that ever laid spear in rest." But it is worth notice that the matchless man of the old crusades is transmuted and translated by the spiritual forces which wage battle to-day for dominion of the earth, the release of the oppressed and the cause of the weak. Some day soon the brother knight will be asked to picture "the saint of his deepest devotions" in the fair dames who ought to grace the world he walks. Au revoir!—EDS.]

"I want to help you to grow as beautiful as God meant you to be when He thought of you first."

My ideal man is the man Christ Jesus and any other man that unites the two natures of man and woman as the man Christ Jesus did. MARGARET BOTTOME.

My ideal man is the one whose life best embodies and illustrates: "Whatsoever things are true, whatsoever things are honest, whatsoever things are just, whatsoever things are pure, whatsoever things are lovely, whatsoever things are of good report."—Phil. 4:8.

MARY LOWE DICKINSON.

New York City.

As to the ideal man, I know of no human words that better describe him than the line of the old song, "Douglas, tender and true," for to be "tender" is to be loving and sympathetic, and to be "true," in the best sense, is to be loyal and courageous and unselfish, ready to sacrifice the less for the greater and to seek always the noblest things—in a word, to exemplify Christian manhood.

EDNA DEAN PROCTOR.

Framingham, Mass.

My ideal man is as pure in word, thought and deed as he expects me to be. He is as strong as an angel in the cause of truth, and as tender as a mother in his treatment of the weak and the erring. He has the courage of his own convictions, and never hides behind a mere expedient. In short, he is a Christian, which means a Christ-man, and that means a man like Jesus Christ—bold to denounce wrong in highest places, but swift to forgive the wrong-doer; one who, like the apostle, "counts not his life dear unto himself," and who, like the Master, "came not to be ministered unto, but to minister." There are such men. In the days to come there shall be many more.

KATHARINE LENTE STEVENSON.

Boston, Mass.

My ideal man is not of so perfect a type as to be discouraging; he may evolute from finite humanity. He belongs to no particular type, race or nation. He may be blonde or brunette, Caucasian or Ethiopian; he may be "five feet eleven, or eleven feet five," as the Irishman dubiously described himself; he may be muscular and ponderous, or small and lithe with muscles quickly responsive; but one thing is a sine qua non, and that is a sound constitution by inheritance and good health maintained by right living. He will therefore be neither glutton nor epicure. His tastes will be simple and natural and he will indulge neither in stimulants nor narcotics. He will take pride in being the master of his body and will create for himself no false necessities. In him "good digestion will wait on appetite." He will be a man of nerve, but not of nerves, and he will have no consciousness of the body except in the very joy of living.

He will be a competent business man whether statesman, scientist, clergyman, merchant or artisan. He will be a philanthropist, that is, a lover of his kind, and will thus have a general interest in the affairs of all nations and a particular, helpful interest in the needs of his own country and more minutely of his immediate neighborhood. Another man's necessity will never be his opportunity for self-aggrandizement; he will be too proud to elevate himself on the prostrate body of friend or foe.

My ideal will be self-reliant, but not self-confident. He will accept no standard that lessens the dignity of manhood or accounts man weaker in self-governing power than woman. He will have a reverential nature and believe that obedience to the great Jehovah is more dignified and manly than obedience to the desires of the flesh. He will follow in the footsteps of the Master and pattern his life after that of the spotless One.

MARY WOOD ALLEN, M. D.

Toledo, O.

My ideal man cannot be done in three or four lines; he is too varied and delightful for that—may his numbers increase!

"My ideal man" is the flower of humanity, and a sufficient end in himself for the existence of this toiling, moiling planet. He has both physical and moral courage. He is honorable, truthful, reverent, pure, generous, kind. But he is more than the sum of these virtues. He has other and adorable qualities and graces.

He has health and the sense to guard it well. He is good to look upon, for a chivalrous soul shines through his face, and he has that most excellent beauty which comes from a fastidious care of the body and its apparel.

He has a cultured mind and is not so enslaved by business or professional cares as to be out of sympathy with what is best and highest in the world of letters, of music and of art. These are his recreation and his delight, and he is ten times more interesting because of the broader outlook they give him.

Religion and philanthropy are of deep, personal interest to him, not alone for the uplift they give his own soul, but that they seem to point the way to an uplift for all humanity.

My ideal man is masterful. He knows his own mind, what he wants and how to get it, and he generally succeeds in getting what he wants. His affairs run smoothly because well planned. He is strong and quiet and always to be depended upon. But he is possessed of a delightfu humility which is irresistible, and with all his strength he is full of tenderness, and of delicate feeling for others. Hence he has fascinating manners and might have been the man of whom Shakespeare wrote: "In action, how like an angel."

He has time for friendship, and his friendship is above all price. A peculiar grace attunes his life to his environment. He is, indeed, a man with a soul, and he does not keep it under lock and key for fear some one may discern it.

EMMA WINNES ROGERS.

Evanston, Ill.

Happy the man that woman trusts and little children praise! The ideal man is a "Brother of Girls," as the choice Arab proverb phrases it. He must be as pure and true as he requires woman to be. He must help on the age of brotherhood, that shall kill out this age of gold, prophesied in the increasing community of thought and works between the world's manhood and its womanhood.

FRANCES E. WILLARD.

MY IDEAL MAN?

No hero formed of wisdom and of power,
Endowed with virtues boundless and untold;
But one whose love can sweeten every hour,
And turn the clods of common earth to gold.

No visionary sage whose will unerring
Can guide my own in rapturous trust intense;
But one, by turns deferred to and deferring,
Who simply follows honest, common sense.

No dreamer vowed to theory and beauty,
With aims so glorious, none their heights may ken;
But one who faithfully just does his duty,
And fears no man amongst his fellowmen.

No lordly leader I must follow after,
In meek devotion pampering every whim;
But one who, hand in hand, come tears, come laughter,
Is all to me as I am all to him.

With faults may be—faults fall to all things human—
But one who, leading an unspotted life,
Holds first the sex equality of woman,
And next—all women sacred as his wife.

. . . . . .

Ideal, did I say? Nay, that's all over!
My dream has stood rough wedlock's sternest test,
And since my husband took the place of lover,
"Ideal" is a portrait at the best.

MRS. WARNER SNOAD.

London, Eng.

My ideal man, you ask for? It is at least a comfort to know that there are women in these latter days who feel that they may demand the existence of such beings. and who also feel that they themselves may possess the penetration that will enable them to distinguish the ideal man when he shall appear.

All definitions and descriptions have two sides—the positive and negative. I fancy it is more important to state what the ideal man is not, than what he is. First, the man who to my mind seems worthy of this epithet "ideal" is not to his own consciousness a lord of creation, but in his own esteem is simply an equal heir to creation with the woman who stands at his side. In spite of all the efforts made by theology, by political discriminations, by society, to enable him to hold himself as superior by his birthright of sex to his sister, my ideal man is not thus arrogant.

He must, I fancy, be a combination of qualities apparently contradictory, but really not contradictory, only complementary. He must be modest and yet confident. He must hold himself willingly, nay gladly, with a secret joy rather than open boastfulness, to the same standard of personal purity to which he would hold his daughter or his wife. He must possess in high degree the "three I's," which have been called the constituents of the successful ego, namely, Industry, Intelligence and Industry. He must be gentle, and this is to say, he must be strong, for only the strong man can afford to be gentle; a weakling fears to be gentle, lest gentleness be interpreted weakness.

My ideal man scorns the world's custom of claiming for man superior advantages for education, superior payment for service, superior freedom for the development and the expression of his own individuality. My ideal man exacts from himself all that he demands for himself. My ideal man should be successful, even by the world's measures of success. He should possess competence and influence, and should possess them as the natural fruit of his own abilities keyed to high endeavor; but he should hold it the highest privilege of success that it enables him to bear the burdens of the weak. This implies that all the other qualities of my ideal man are mixed by the solvent of that human sympathy which puts him in touch with the human being at every age, in every condition and under all circumstances: so that he unconsciously carries warmth, light, gladness and power wherever he goes. In him capacity of heart and brain are held in perfect equipoise, so that one who feels for him affection, must give an equal measure of respect. In him health is fundamental, the result of moral cleanliness. Purity is the atmosphere which, emanating from his own spirit, protects him from vulgarity and baseness.

My ideal man is willing to follow truth to its issue; not fearing that as a result of its pursuit he must lose something more precious than itself, because to him truth is precious above all other possible possessions. He discriminates between liberty and license, between progress and precipitancy, between courage and aggressiveness.

My ideal man is a patriot, yielding a loyal love to his country, whatever that country may be; but he realizes always that, as his country, however large, is smaller than the world, so patriotism is a sentiment inferior to the sentiment of humanity.

My ideal man is open-minded, and he has no fear for the world's bugaboo, consistency. Being open-minded, his opinions may change as his intelligence grows, as light pours in upon the subjects of his contemplation, and as circumstances and his own advancement shift his point of view. He has the courage of to-day's opinions; he dares to say that to-day has thrown new light upon the problems of yesterday; and dares to anticipate that to-morrow may reverse the decisions of to-day. Dominated by this aspiration after truth, and that teachableness of spirit which alone will make it possible to find it, his manners are marked by a high and gentle courtesy; and, as the ideal woman must be mentally what the world, in its poor, inadequate language calls "masculine" (a very different thing from mannish), so the ideal man is in marked degree feminine, but in nothing effeminate.

Not only is man molded by his mother's teachings in his infancy, but throughout life he grows in the direction of the expectations and the demands that society puts upon him; and society is molded by the thought of women not less than by the thought of men. So the ideal man will become the real man, our everyday acquaintance in the home, in the school, in the church, in the busy marts of trade, at the ballot-box and in legislative halls so soon as the expectations, the demands of womanhood shall compel him to the culture and the manifestation of ideal qualities.

COLUMBIAN CRUMBS.

BY B. V. CUSHMAN, M. D.

An event of deep and wide significance has occurred since my last basket of Exposition fragments was gathered. I refer to the journey of the old Liberty Bell from its secure place in Independence Hall to the Pennsylvania Building in Jackson Park. Ex-President Harrison happily termed it in his welcoming speech at Indianapolis

A RENAISSANCE OF PATRIOTISM.

There is genuine brotherly love for their Western sister, and keen interest in the great Exposition on the part of Philadelphians or they would not have consented to loan this priceless relic of American history. An escort of prominent citizens, headed by the mayor, accompanied it; four policemen, every one a son of American born parents, and every one above six feet in stature, constitute the permanent guard undertaking to see Old Liberty finally restored to its glass case in Independence Hall. The journey was a triumphal procession. It was a difficult matter to get it through the Keystone state. School children carrying flags thronged the stations. The good people really felt that it was going on a mission. Governor Pattison who welcomed it at Harrisburg gave his opinion that it "was a wise and patriotic thing to exhibit the bell in the West as a needed stimulus." To the astonishment of the escorting committee, Indiana spread her mantle in the way with as much enthusiasm as Pennsylvania. Reaching Chicago late in the evening, and in the rain, at a depot surrounded by slums, there was still a great crowd awaiting its arrival. Members of the committee frankly acknowledge that the journey has opened their eyes to the grand spirit of nationality which possesses the West as fully as the East. Chairman Smithers says: "The sight of the bell seems to stir the spark of patriotism which is in the breast of every American into a flame." It has proved a touchstone of national feeling, and its reverent guardians hope that its influence may be extended even farther: "It may inspire the people of other countries, not so blessed as ours, to work for enlarged privileges of national life," said Mr. Smithers.

The children have claimed it as their very own, turning out by thousands to cheer it on its way. Every schoolhouse in sight of a railroad crossing where the train passed furnished its quota. At the few points where stops were made they loaded the special car with flowers. They sang around it; they climbed up and touched it, some even sat upon it, and the good-natured committee-men were sore in the shoulders when they reached Chicago from lifting babies to a point of contact with the sacred relic. Most touching of all was the coming of the pupils from the institute for the blind in Indianapolis, to "see" the bell. They were assisted upon the car and allowed to pass their hands over it. May the reverence awakened in all these young hearts at sight of the symbol, deepen and broaden and tower at thought of the freedom it stands for, and may they infuse into the blessed word higher meanings than the framers of the Declaration of Independence knew. As the fathers of these children decreed in voice of their cannon, from henceforth freedom should mean every man's ownership of his own person, so may they—in peaceful tones—God grant—proclaim moral freedom and man's right to the best conditions of moral and spiritual unfoldment.

All this, and much more than THE UNION SIGNAL will let me tell, I felt as I sat by my window and watched the crowd gathered at the corner of Michigan avenue and Thirty-fifth street, patiently waiting for two hours in the indiscriminating drizzle of rain—men, women and children—to see the bell pass on its way to the Fair grounds. Finally it appeared upon a triumphal car, with framework hidden by flowers, and drawn by eight coal-black horses, in gold trappings and flags. I read on the frame from which it was suspended: "Proclaim Liberty Throughout the Land." Faithfully and forcefully did the now silent trumpeter fulfill its mission. May the echoes of its clarion voice reverberate and swel till the whole human race shall rise into the full liberty wherewith Christ sets men free.

OPENING DAY CAKE.

Of course, to our notion, the real bride's loaf was cut, not in the Administration Building, by President Cleveland, but in the Woman's Building, by Mrs. Palmer. Things did seem a bit mixed, though, considering that he performed his chef d'ouvre with his thumb and a button, while her part was done with a nail and hammer. Strange things happen every day now, and we must not be surprised by anything we see at the Fair. A member of my party declared that she turned the hammer sidewise for the finishing blow, but I didn't see her do so and I don't believe everything I hear, particularly when a man is telling how a woman drives a nail.

Her address drove the nail straight home to the vital issues of the hour, showing how earnestly she has striven to put herself in the place of wage-earning women. She has come near enough to them to understand their difficulties, at all events. Her position for two and a half years past has been sightly, and her vision has proved equal to the width of the horizon. From that outlook she sees "the people of all civilized lands studying the same problems," and realizes "the unity of human interests, notwithstanding differences of race and external conditions." She also recognizes the supremacy of social and industrial questions, and stoutly demands equal rights in the realm of industry for the three-fourths of womandom who are obliged to be entirely, or to some degree, self-supporting.

Mrs. Palmer is a remarkable leader, in that she seems to have kept the attention of her colleagues off herself and riveted upon their common task. Notwithstanding her great beauty, she is a singularly unobtrusive personality, and as a speaker, manages to be forgotten, while her subject gains heartiest hearing. In no way does she invite notice of her own part of the work, and a fine reserve and delicacy of manner warns her most enthusiastic admirer that she is not pleased to have any one else do so.

The foreign women have come among us with an air that says: "We understand that all American women are of royal blood." It rests with us to confirm their opinion, and one of the ways of doing so is to meet them cordially as comrades, and with the least possible notice of their "rank." I pray earnestly—as for myself—that we be enlarged in our borders to recognize brain when it exists under a gold laced hat, and heart when it beats behind "orders."

I am consumed with curiosity to know how—for example—the "duke" of some province smaller than an ante bellum sugar plantation feels, in his glory of uniform and decorations, when he shakes hands with the ruler of this great country in a plain black coat. The Duke of Veragua, however, is excusable for all the pride and pomp he can possibly assume. That was a great "find" of Gran-'ther Columbo's, and not so very long ago, either.

For general reasons the Russian lady was especially interesting, her country being farthest removed from us, both geographically and politically. A rare type comes from the land of the Czar. Grace and humor, amiability and intellectuality blend in the delicate face of the slender woman introduced as Princess Mary Schahowskoy. Her dress was of green velvet, and her mantle—no one knows how ancient and costly—was of white and pale gold. But her bonnet was surely an American creation, making her look as if she really and truly belongs to us. Getting that dainty little spring bonnet on these shores is a touch of nature showing kinship that no title has power to cancel. She told in excellent English, that charity had always been the Russian woman's sphere, but in 1872 medical colleges were opened to her, and now "seven hundred women doctors are doing their loving mission," as showing the great need of it she cited the seven and a half millions of Mohammedan women in the empire who are dependent upon their sex for medical advice. She closed her sparkling little speech, in which she had not forgotten to speak of our relief ships sent to them in time of famine, with a Russian proverb: "Woman must be queen to her husband, queen to her lover, queen"—here she hesitated, finally saying: "The rest of it I cannot remember, and there is no one here to tell me," and she retreated under cover of hearty applause.

PRAYERS FOR THE EXPOSITION.

It was most fitting that Dr. Milburn, the blind chaplain of the United States Senate, should invoke Divine presence at the opening. In his prayer he gave thanks that "woman, the shackles falling from her hands and estate, throbbing with the pulse of a new time, joyously treading the paths of larger freedom, responsibility and self-help opening before her; woman, nearer to God by the intuitions of the heart and the grandeur of her self-sacrifice, brings the inspiration of her genius, the product of her hand, brain, and sensibility to shed a grace and loveliness upon the place, thus making the house beautiful." Rev. Ida Hultin in the opening prayer at the Woman's Building made deep offering of devotion and consecration in the name of women, recognizing that "Thy Spirit through all creation thrilleth to larger and finer issues," and that the material surroundings are "but symbols and outer manifestations of the inner spirit that shall be more apparent in years to come." No remotest allusion was made to the president of the Board or to the magnificence of the structure.

THE ATLANTIC CABLE; THE TEMPLE.

BY CLARA C. HOFFMAN.

God inspired Cyrus W. Field to lay the Atlantic cable. He knew neither rest nor comfort until the thought that burned within his brain and the desire that filled his heart could materialize into tangible form.

In 1853 the first company, consisting of Peter Cooper and other rich men, was organized with a capital of $1,500,000. Then commenced the Herculean task of telegraph line and road through four hundred miles of Newfoundland wilderness, climbing mountains, bridging chasms, fording swamps and streams, around and across deep inlets and over rocky headlands—a task demanding a genius that could have handled an immense army.

This preliminary work cost all the money advanced by these rich men. Mr. Field then went to England for aid. He asked for $1,750,000. Both England and the United States furnished money and each gave a ship for the work. Laying the cable began but almost immediately it parted. Machinery was found inadequate. Friends who had aided abandoned the project.

Mr. Field could not give up, because still the fire burned within. Another effort and the cable was completed. Messages began to fly; when all at once the current refused to work. Public journals and reputable men wondered if the messages received were not all forgeries. Mr. Field was reviled and denounced. He was accused of dishonesty and mismanagement, and misappropriation of funds. He was charged with an unholy ambition, and the whole scheme was denominated a vain-glorious effort to perpetuate his own name and fame.

Human nature does not materially change as the years come and go! Mr. Field had this work laid on his heart and he bent every energy to its fulfillment. He thought and dreamed and talked "cable" until his wife in a burst of impatience said: "I wish that old cable was at the bottom of the sea!" "I would God it were," replied her husband.

The Civil War intervened and not until 1864 was another attempt made. A new company was formed, and $3,000,000 subscribed. New cable and new machinery were ordered and the Great Eastern was given the company to carry the coil and lay the electric pathway under the sea.

Again the cable parted! Again the croakers croaked! Again Mr. Field ran the whole gauntlet of criticism, misrepresentation and calumny! Again three million dollars were subscribed. Again the coil was made ready, and the Great Eastern steamed out for another attempt, and in July of 1866 a shout of victory went up from her decks. Since then civilization has worn many-leagued boots, and nations have talked one with another, as neighbors over the garden fence.

Stupendous undertaking! Beside it, viewed from one point only, the building of the Temple may seem small; viewed from another, it stands above and beyond Mr. Field's magnificent work. To the Atlantic cable Mr. Field brought genius, time, strength, faith, hope, determination, but all these had not availed but for the millions upon millions put into his hand wherewith he made his dream a splendid reality, after thirteen long years of anxious struggle.

Mrs. Carse brought to the Temple genius, time, strength, faith, hope, determination, but no rich syndicates stood ready to place within her hands millions upon millions to make her dream a splendid reality. With a faith that has few parallels, she asked only the confidence and coöperation of women, known not by wealth possessed, but by good works performed.

Like Mr. Field, Mrs. Carse has run the whole gauntlet of criticism and calumny. Whispered mistrust laid the foundation whereon was reared a giant structure of doubt and misrepresentation. Mr. Field invested life and fortune in the Atlantic cable. If it failed, he lost all. If it succeeded, he won fame and fortune. Mrs. Carse invested as much in the Temple. If it fails, she loses all. If it succeeds, she secures to the National W. C. T. U. a fine revenue, and to each state pro rata as it has contributed, but personally, she profits not one penny.

The Atlantic cable and the Temple afford parallel and contrast.

MISS ACKERMANN IN INDIA.

DEAR UNION SIGNAL:—India is a great country, and it is very like trying to organize the United States to try to start our work here, and it is far more difficult; but I pressed on toward the north, stopping at Rawlapinda. My letter had miscarried, and there was no one to meet me. I could not get a carriage, but some one who could speak English directed my coolie to a place; he took me to a dak bungalow, where no one could speak a word of English; I had an awful time trying to make him understand I wanted to remain all night, and after all failed, I had to start out to find some one who could comprehend me. It was late, places very far apart, and I wandered around through the dark with only a coolie, who might have been a dummy as far as power of speech went, but after an hour I found some one who directed me to the hotel. Tired, hungry, cold, completely covered with dust, too sick at heart to eat, there was but one thing to do—go to a cold, cheerless room, for it was bitterly cold, throw myself on the bed, and weep dismally. I had shed a few tears on several occasions, but this was "a good cry," just the kind a woman must have when driven to the last extremity. But I was doomed not even to enjoy a good cry in peace. A knock at the door at that late hour brought me to my feet. I asked through the door what was wanted, and learned that some one, hearing of my arrival, had searched every lodging in the city, but here I remained for the night, and after being assured of the regrets on hand, I went back and finished my cry. It was only a part of the "all things" that go to make up this tramping life, and the people who afterward took me home were so kind, such good W. C. T. U. women, that I forgot my heartaches in their care; we had a meeting, too, so it was not so bad as it might have been.

I had heard that in the most northerly city, Pershawer, there was no temperance work, so I started there; it was a long, cold journey, but I was repaid for the fatigue by the glimpses of the snow-capped mountains that can be seen for some hundreds of miles. Pershawer is just on the frontier of Afghanistan and a very curious old place: the city, in the middle of a great plain, is surrounded by a high wall with sixteen gates; these are closed every night and no one is admitted without giving a countersign. The plain is surrounded by ranges of hills and snow-capped mountains with only one natural pass in the range which forms the highway of trade between Afghan and India. The city is very unlike in appearance any other city of India; here I saw the hill tribes, Afghans, Kishimirs and numerous other tribes of people.

I took a trip into Kyber Pass and it was necessary to go under protection of troops. I suppose the highway "from Jerusalem to Jericho" was never more thoroughly infested with outlaws and robbers than is this pass, even the caravans must be thus protected. The men look very wild and live in caverns in the rocks and holes in the earth. There seems to be a feeling of unrest and everything is in readiness for an outbreak; telegraph poles are planted, railway ties and rails are stacked and thousands of troops are stationed on and near the frontier.

In this old city of Pershawer I stopped with four lady missionaries who live by themselves, trying to do the Master's work; their house is surrounded by a wall forty feet high and the entrance is guarded day and night by sepoy soldiers. When the ladies walk or ride out they always take men servants with them.

I have been to many places which did not believe in women speaking, but this is the only time I have not been allowed to speak. The Church of England chaplain refused to let me have the prayer room, the only building where a meeting could be held. It was such a pity, for there were so many troops among whom a fever was raging, though it was so cold. Fifty had just died in one regiment and seventy were taken to the hospital the day of my arrival, and yet with all the pressing needs of Christian work, I was not allowed to open my mouth to tell of a Saviour's love, after going that great distance, so I left for Sialkot on the borders of Kashimir.

At this place I found the first and only Y in India. They were union girls at home and were able to organize themselves. They had a fine opportunity, while studying in the hills, to work in the army and made the young men honorary members and have done grand work. Most of them are young and new in the field; one of them is a sister to our own Narcissa White Kinney.

It seems to me it would be a good thing for some of the home Y to write to these girls and express their sympathy and send any helps for Y work they may have. I am very proud of our young sisters, holding up our banner in this distant place, away on the very borders of Kashimir, such a strange wild place, purely Oriental, where people take their beds on the house-tops to rest in the cool of the evening, and women have their spinning wheels whirring while they chat. Address Miss Parks, Sialkot, India, and I hope one Y will write them a line of cheer—it will be a sort of a "life line" to those shut-off sisters.

From Sialkot I went to Jumma, the winter capital of Kashimir. We went by train part way and at the depot took a two-wheeled conveyance called an ekka. It was very small and two of us beside the driver had to ride in it. This was never intended for any one but the natives; the seat is like an elevated floor and the only way to ride is to sit tailor fashion. It did not make so much difference to Miss Young, but I am so very long it took considerable "folding up" before I was able to adjust myself to the limits of that small floor seat; but off we started, and I assure you it was worse than riding on a wheelbarrow in China.

Kashimir is a native province under British protection, ruled by a rajah and a representative of the English government. The people are a shade or two lighter than Indians in complexion, and their dress is very different. At this time of the year it is intensely cold and these people wear cone-shaped fur caps with the fur side in; the edge of the fur hangs down like "bangs." The coats are made also of skins and worn with fur inside; these are long and loose, tied in at the waist with a knitted scarf; the boots are very large with wide tops and bag about the ankles, and on the whole these men look more like Icelanders than Indians.

Returning over the same road I stopped at another large military station, the headquarters of the I. O. G. T. where we also have a union. The members of both societies met me and we had one of the best missions held in India; it was a time of special power, and a number of additions were made to the union. After leaving Mereut I hastened to Bombay to attend the Decennial Conference of Missionaries. My stop at Agra was just long enough to see that wonder of wonders, the Taj Mahal; I did as hundreds have done before me—sat speechless before such wondrous beauty. This was built in memory of the favorite wife of Shah Jehan, whose dying request was that her tomb should surpass in beauty anything ever built. It is a fact worthy of note that the two greatest palaces in the world are the abiding-places of two women—the great palace occupied by a living queen and a palace tomb where sleeps in peace a queen of a great past.

I held one meeting among the soldiers, and left by train for Jeypore, the most interesting, by far, of any of the cities of India. I went by invitation of the natives, and first, with a native Bible woman, visited a large number of zenanas, where I spoke to the women; some of them were Christians, and some were not.

This is a native province, with coins, and, I believe, stamps of its own, ruled by a maharajah, who lives in great state. He was away, but I visited his palace, where he lives with seven queens. These wives were going home to see their fathers; they went one at a time, the chief queen leaving first. She always goes out in great state. The palace is furnished in foreign style; the billiard rooms where the prince entertains foreigners is very handsome. I noted the side room was the only place in the palace where the decanter and wine-glass graced (?) the board. The grounds are spacious, including a banana grove and cocoanut grove. I noticed a fine monument, much more beautiful than anything usually seen in our cemeteries. I asked who was buried there, and the guide read the inscription; it was the tomb of his favorite dog. I went through the counting house, where I saw fifteen treasurers counting the maharajah's money and keeping his accounts. As I came out another of the queens was just leaving; she went forth in like manner as the first, only she was carried in a palanquin, instead of driving.

LEAVE THE WOMEN ALONE.

Respectfully submitted to the opponents of the Woman's Temple at Chicago.]

BY REV. J. P. HUTCHINSON.

It seems pretty hard when the women are trying To do all they can for the right and the true,
That any one should in a rage be found flying,
And the best of their efforts should try to undo;
Far better 'twould be—even if they are wrong—
To be gentle and quiet until it is shown,
And if you can't help the good women along,
For pity's sake, let the good women alone.

Temples abound in the city of revel—
Temples of trade, fair, lofty and broad;
Temples devoted to sin and the devil,
One surely may rise for the women and God.
Come, let us help them—we that are strong—
A spirit of gallantry grandly be shown;
But if we can't help the good women along
At least let us leave the good women alone.

Come, brothers, come, help our sisters and wives
Their dream of the general weal to fulfill,
Uprear the fair temple for beautiful lives,
Let there arise from Chicago, "I WILL."
And her tone will rouse echoes, rich, varied and strong,
And our women will have the fair home as their own;
Yes, brothers, we'll help the good women along,
We never can leave the good women alone.

BAKED TIPSYFY.

BY MABEL GIFFORD.

A pretty picture Mrs. Allston made, with her fresh face and neat gown, standing by the kitchen table, holding a pie in the palm of her hand and deftly "trimming" it, but the woman sitting by the kitchen window watched her with troubled eyes.

"I always let my mince stand over night," said Mrs. Allston, still trimming, "and touch it up in the morning."

"Pamelia," said the woman by the window, "don't you feel a little doubtful about using brandy in your pies?"

Mrs. Allston replied smiling, and still trimming, "Oh, not in the least. There's no tipsyfy left in a pie after it's baked. Baked brandy never harmed any one." She set the pie aside and began filling more plates.

"Fred is so fond of mince pies—and my mince pies, he says they can't be beat."

"I use vinegar and grape jell in my pies," said the visitor, "and Charles and the children seem to relish them as well as when I used spirits and cider."

"I tried it that time there was such an excitement over Mrs. R——'s temperance lectures," said Mrs. Allston with a shrug of her plump shoulders. "Fred called them 'flat'; the children found no fault. Children have such appetites!"

"Was your husband one of those who signed the pledge at that time?"

"No. Fred does not need a pledge; he is not one of the weak kind; he has a will of his own. But he is a strict temperance man, he even gave up beer and cider after those lectures."

"Of course," said the visitor thoughtfully, "the brandy pies could not 'tipsyfy,' as you call it, but are you not afraid the flavor and the smell might arouse the old appetite?"

"Nonsense!" was all the answer, and the visitor departed with the troubled look still in her eyes.

. . . . . .

At noon there is a sound of childish voices and hurrying feet, and then a rush of cold air and cries of "mince pies, oh!" as two rosy-cheeked children eagerly enter the pleasant kitchen. Then firmer steps are heard.

"Here we are, mother; grand day! Ah, mince pies," and Mr. Allston pauses midway of the room to throw back his head and draw a long breath of satisfaction.

Mrs. Allston had an unusual realization of her blessings on this day. Later, when the children had rushed off again, she repeated the conversation of the morning, with many smiles and exclamations at the absurdity of it.

"I do not believe my pies would harm any one, and certainly not a man like you," she said, proudly, resting a hand on his shoulder and looking into her husband's face with confidence.

She could not see how he shrank from that look or know that at that very moment he was fighting his old enemy. This was the first day, and there would be mince pies all winter.

How could he tell her that he was just such a weak man as could be thrown into torment by the aroma of her "harmless" pies? He would not own it, even to himself; he despised the thought; nevertheless, the battle had begun, and every day waxed hotter, and it was not long before the enemy conquered.

His wife did not know. She knew that he often went to the city for a few days on "business"; she knew that he left the firm where he had expected to one day become a partner, because he could not "get on" with them; she knew that he did not keep any place long after that; she knew that they grew poorer every day and that it was hard work to keep the interest on the mortgage on their little home paid. She did not wonder that in the face of all this misfortune her husband lost his bright, hearty manner, and became morose and irritable.

Two young men came home with Mr. Allston to dinner one day. Mrs. Allston knew they had been recently saved from the saloons and welcomed into the white-ribbon ranks. Many tears had been shed for them, many prayers sent up, many a battle fought.

"Don't refuse to try my mince pie," said Mrs. Allston, "nobody ever refuses my mince pie."

A moment later one young man with an abrupt "Excuse me, I am not feeling well," hastily left the table and the house.

"He looked very pale," said Mrs. Allston.

The other young man so far from looking pale was much flushed. He ate the pie with great relish and praised it, and did not refuse the second piece.

The first young man went from his friend's table to his own chamber and locked himself in. Perhaps if Mrs. Allston had seen the struggle that went on there against the fierce enemy that had roused up at her table, she would never again have called her pies "harmless."

The other young man left the house to go by a back entrance into another house where the old enemy was kept bottled, and came out with a small package in his coat pocket. Mrs. Allston would have gone down on her knees to that young man and prayed him to destroy that package, and yet her hand had undone the work of weeks and months, and cast this soul into toils, dire danger and darkest despair. But she did not know. She only knew that neither of her husband's friends ever came to the house again.

Fred Allston came home very slowly one day. His head dropped, his face was dark. He lingered at the door. He had lost another situation, he had lost their little home, he had lost everything, even the furniture, and he had come to tell her.

He had not thought to tell her what a weak man he was; that the drink appetite scents alcohol as the war-horse scents battle smoke, when it is so faint no one else can name it; he had not meant to upbraid her as his tempter, but when he entered the kitchen Mrs. Allston was just coming from the oven with a newly-baked pie in her hand. She knew how pleased he would be; she held it out to him, smiling, and he struck it from her hand.

Then she knew, and it was such a terrible revelation that she dropped to the floor as heavily as if he had struck her.

The Allstons moved to the city. He could get work there, he said, and she tried to reclaim him. But all her pleadings and tears and prayers could not undo the evil she had wrought. The one chance he had, was a life in the country amid wholesome and cheerful surroundings, and she had wrecked his one chance. Here in the city the enemy met him at every step, leered at him from every window, breathed out its poisonous fumes from every doorway.

And here we find them at last in a wretched tenement house attic. It is cold there, so cold. The two children have crept close to each other, and hold each other's hands for warmth and comfort, and the mother, bowed with sorrow and remorse, tries to sew by the poor light, and vaguely wonders when they will have anything to eat again. The boy has a sprained ankle, so his small earnings have ceased.

She glances from time to time toward an indistinct form stretched on a heap of rags in the corner of the room, from whence come indistinct mutterings.

There came a knock at the door and an old woman hobbled in, bearing in her hand—a pie.

"Mrs. Voce, bless her, sent me a basket to-day. I can't eat all the stuff nohow, and I thought maybe you'd like to try some of her cooking. It's mince, I know by the smell."

Just as Fred Allston had struck the plate from his wife's hand on that darkest day of her life, so now she struck this poor offering, while the dazed soul looked on aghast, and nearly lost her equilibrium at the unexpected onset. The fire that blazed up in Mrs. Allston's eyes died out as quickly as it had kindled.

"Sit down," she said, "and hear me tell you how I ruined my husband. To begin with, when I went to housekeeping Mrs. Voce gave me her recipes. I know what she puts in her mince pies."

"I will tell her," said the old woman after the sad story had been told; "she will not do that any more."

"She will say it is nonsense, and keep right on, just as I did," said Mrs. Allston.

. . . . . .

The Allstons do not live in the tenement house attic now, and the boy has a situation in Mr. Voce's office, the mother has all the sewing she can do, the father has been placed in an asylum, the daughter goes to school.

Perhaps a poor old soul who went on an errand of mercy one cold winter night could tell how it came about. Mrs. Voce has a new recipe for mince pies.

"It seems absurd," she says, "that there is any harm in the old recipe, but for my conscience's sake I prefer to be on the safe side."

THE GOSPEL THE BASIS OF THE TEMPERANCE REFORM.

[From an address by Frances E. Willard.]

I ask you to look with me upon two scenes, in two great amphitheatres, widely separated by time and space. The first is the Colosseum of ancient Rome; eighty thousand men and women are seated within this vast enclosure; they are ranged in great circles, tier upon tier. Below, next the huge sand-sprinkled arena, sit the sturdy plebeians; next them, gazing haughtily down, are the patricians; higher up, the Vestal virgins; opposite the entrance is the emperor seated in purple robes upon his golden throne. In this vast auditorium are gathered senators, poets, philosophers, beautiful women and brave men—the flower of the most magnificent empire of antiquity. Theirs by inheritance the age of Pericles and of Augustus; theirs the poetry of Homer and of Virgil; theirs the philosophy of Aristotle and of Plato, the statesmanship of Solon and of Cincinnatus, the statues of Phidias, the oratory of Demosthenes and of Cicero. All that art yields and nature can decree have been lavished on their lives, but the question, "What think ye of Christ?" they have answered with curses and scoffs.

But listen! There is growling of wild beasts in the dungeons under the amphitheatre! Look! From his noisome prison slaves have brought forth a victim, who in a moment will be "butchered, to make a Roman holiday." Gaze on that group in the arena; every eye of all that immeasurable host is fixed upon its central figure. A calm, benignant, gray-haired man stands there between his jailers; it is Saint Ignatius, the disciple of St. John, the friend of Polycarp, a man of such sweet soul that it is said the angels deigned to talk with him. He looks around and murmurs these memorable words: "I am as grain of God, but it must first be ground by teeth of lions that I may become bread meet for His table." Scowls distort the faces of cultured man and lady fair. "Bring on the lions," is their angry cry. We turn our heads away, we cannot look upon that scene, as with deep growls the hungry brutes leap into the circle where the dear saint stands alone, but stately Roman matrons and sweet-singing poets bend their dark brows to watch the lions as they glut their fury in the martyr's blood.

Look now upon another scene in the great amphitheatre. It is the Moody Tabernacle in Chicago, and nine thousand men are gathered there on Sunday night, men whose ancestors had nothing classic back of them, men whose more immediate progenitors knew little of the schools and still less of the fine arts, men who did not themselves belong to the New World's "best society," to say nothing of the old. Listen to the deep, earnest voice in which they sing a favorite hymn of the reformed men:

"The mistakes of my life have been many,
The sins of my heart have been more,
I scarce can see for weeping,
But I will enter the open door."

See their heads humbly bowed in prayer and note the burly figure that stands forward on the platform with a well-worn Bible in his hand. It is Dwight L. Moody, who knows little of the classic languages but is well versed in the language of Canaan. Listen to the sermon full of tender invitations from a man who would not be admitted to the freshmen's class of a Freshwater University, but whose wisdom well replaces the knowledge of the schools. See these marred faces brighten as in an earnest voice Mr. Moody announces his favorite text, "God so loved the world."

You may have settled the question of miracles in the four gospels to your satisfaction, dear doubting friend, but will you explain to me the contrast between these scenes in the Roman Colosseum and the Chicago Tabernacle on any other basis than that the gospel is divine? Out of these gospels the temperance reform has had its birth and being, this Bible is the medicine chest of our prescriptions, the arsenal of our weapons, the man of our council. The temperance reform radiates from the heart of Christ as beams of light shine from the sun. Christianity must reign in the customs of society and the laws of the land. His kingdom must come, His will be done on earth, and His will was never yet done in distillery, brewery, or dram-shop. His will was never done in gambling-house or haunt of shame.

AT THE WORLD'S FAIR.

BY ADA M. MELVILLE.

(Concluded.)

All this time people had been coming and going, but the Bell family and their new friend had practically taken possession of Willard Fountain.

"Well, you youngsters have a pretty nice fountain; what are you going to do with it after the Fair?"

"It's going to be in Chicago somewhere and the little girl will always be giving people clean water to drink when they are thirsty, instead of nasty old poison," said Edna.

"What do you L. T. L's call poison?" asked George, looking round him into the earnest faces.

"Beer." "And whisky." "And cider." "And gin." "And wine."

"Wine?" George drank wine at his father's table, and this was the first time he had ever heard it called poison. "What do you know about wine being poison, Miss Edna?" he asked, to whom he had taken a great fancy.

"I can say my pledge," and letting Puggles drop to the ground she folded her dimpled hands, and looking up steadily into his face repeated slowly:

"'Trusting in God's help, I solemnly promise to abstain from the use of alcoholic drinks, including wine, beer and cider; from the use of tobacco in any form and from profanity. Edna Danforth Bell.'"

As she finished, George impulsively bent down and kissed her white forehead, and then turned to leave them, but Mrs. Bell put out her hand and detained him.

"Will you not join our party, if you are alone? We would like to have you. I assure you this temperance meeting has been unpremeditated. Do not be offended."

"Offended? No, indeed. I wish there were more of your sort in the world. Yes, I'll come with you, gladly. I have been about the Exposition and may be of some help."

They then arranged to move on. "Two by two!" commanded Edwin. "There are ten of us now, unless you count the pug. But we'll throw him in as a bargain."

Bradford quickly took his stand by Bessie. Of course the twins could not be separated. George was standing beside Maurice and glancing up, said: "Will you put up with the stranger?"

"Gladly," was the reply, "if you will walk beside my crutches." Edna seized her father's hand and Mrs. Bell led off with Edwin.

"Carried these long?" asked George, touching one of the crutches which his companion guided so skillfully.

"Ever since I was ten years old."

"How was it?"

"Run over by a drunken teamster."

"Ah!" The reply seemed to touch George in some way and his face saddened for a few minutes.

"How long are you going to stay?"

"In Chicago? Oh, three or four weeks. Father says we will learn more here, if we use our eyes well, than we would at home in two months. There's the machinery and the animals and plants and all this statuary and exhibits from everywhere."

"What are you going to do to-morrow?"

"To-morrow's Sunday, isn't it? Why, go to church—three or four times if we can."

"I'll take you driving over the city. It will be my only day off for some weeks."

"Thanks, but it's Sunday."

"Well, what of that?"

Maurice shot a quick glance into his new friend's face. He was not used to the carelessness of many city people regarding God's rest day.

"What of it? Why, we keep Sunday."

They walked along in silence a little way and then George said, "You're a new kind of a fellow to me. You don't believe in smoking nor drinking and you seem to be—religious. Are you?"

"Yes, sir!" The answer was most emphatic.

"My little brother," George continued, "was lame like you. That's what made me take a notion to you at first. And what's queer about it is, it was a drunken servant who caused it—let him fall out of his carriage when he was little. So we always petted him and let him do as he pleased. He went to Sunday-school and I told you about his badge and all that. I have no other brothers or sisters and I miss the little chap. I wish—"

"You'll have to follow him, that's all," said Maurice, in a gentle voice.

"Follow him?"

"Yes. Be good and go where he is now."

"Oh, as to that—"

"Maurice!" It was his father who called, for the two boys in their earnest talk had unconsciously stopped and thus fallen behind the others. "Are you tired?"

"A little, sir, not much."

"Edna is tired and your mother is going to take her to the Children's Building. How would you like to go with them? She will not be fretting if you are near."

"Go along, George?" asked Maurice.

"Yes, I'd just as soon. I like to watch children and they've got everything fixed up splendid at the crèche in the Children's Building. They'll think Edna and her temperance pug quite an acquisition."

So it was arranged and as the child was very tired she consented to be carried in George's strong arms, while she clung faithfully to Puggles.

Once fairly inside the Children's Palace, Edna forgot her weariness at the sight of other tots like herself playing about, safe and happy, and it was not very long before she had made friends with the others.

"She's happy," said George, after they had rested a while; "suppose we step over to the Horticultural Building and see the flowers? We'll come back before the others turn up."

Kissing Edna good-bye the two boys went off together. As they were admiring some curiosities in the plant-world a cry of dismay attracted their attention and they hurried forward to a group of young ladies who were in evident distress. In the center of the group was a young man acting most strangely, for with his light cane he was striking at and ruining all the plants he could reach.

"He's drunk," said George to his companion as they both pressed forward. "Why doesn't some one stop him?" and pushing through the crowd, Maurice managing to keep close by him, he laid a strong hand on the young man's arm.

"Don't you know what you are doing?" he said. "You'll be arrested."

At these words the cane was very suddenly directed another way and came full across George's cheek. The young man who had struck him acted as if he were crazy. Catching sight of Maurice he hit at him and then before any one realized what he was about, had drawn a pistol and leveled it full at Maurice's breast. George gave one spring forward to disarm the fellow and in the scuffle the two went down, the pistol going off harmlessly in the air. The whole affair happened in far less time than it takes to tell of it, and before ten minutes had elapsed the young man, who was indeed crazy from drink, was in safe hands and George and Maurice were making their way out of the crowd back to the Children's Building. There they found the rest of the family awaiting them, and related their adventure.

"If he had not been quick," said Maurice, "the fellow would have shot me. I may owe him my life."

"Nonsense. If it hadn't been for me you never would have got into the scrape."

There was a great deal more said about it, for there were no less than nine people to crowd about George and love him for his brave act.

As they left the Children's Building they gathered by common consent about the Fountain, and Maurice said suddenly, as a thought brightened up his face:

"George, this has been a sort of temperance meeting, from first to last, in spite of everything. Supposing we give it a grand finish up—it was nearly a climax in there," pointing toward the Horticultural Building. "It is my birthday. Won't you take the pledge right now and fight King Alcohol with us?"

"Oh, do!" said the twins, one on each side of him, clasping his arms eagerly. "Do, do!" echoed Edna, looking up into his face with a lovely smile. "He will," said Maurice, quietly, reading the resolve in his friend's eyes. "Come on (this to his brothers and sisters), join hands. Take hold, George. Now we'll say the pledge together—you heard Edna say it before—and you repeat it after us. Then we'll finish up with water from our Willard Fountain, and if anything could be more appropriate all around I'd like to know it! Take hold! All ready?"

Quite a little crowd had gathered, but the Bell family and George were too intent on what they had in hand to mind any one but themselves. The pledge was slowly repeated, Puggles sitting solemnly in the middle of the little circle, as if he knew exactly what was going on. George's voice never faltered. One or two gentlemen, watching, quietly bared their heads.

Then Edna filled a cup with water and handed it to the new member of the Temperance Army, and after he had drank the others refreshed themselves at the clear stream, Puggles included. But only Maurice heard George's low words: "Guess I'll follow my little brother, after all, thanks to you!"

DEAR BOYS AND GIRLS:—Our country has so few historic relics that we wisely guard and tenderly cherish those that we have. Therefore when the "Old Liberty Bell" last week left its home in "the city of brotherly love," (where is that and why is it so called?) to form a part of the Pennsylvania exhibit at the World's Fair, it was handled with the utmost care, guarded from accident and a special committee attended it.

Perhaps some of you were among the children who lined the tracks, waved American flags and cheered the dear old bell. I am sure you all would have been if you had had the opportunity. It is only an ordinary looking metal bell, but it proclaimed liberty to a whole people one day over a hundred years ago, and so we honor it and love it.

May your lives, each and all, be of enduring metal and have the true ring, is the desire of your

"FOR GOD AND HOME AND NATIVE LAND."

Under the above caption, the motto to which the hearts of white-ribbon women the world over respond, and to which they have always been true, Dr. W. A. Candler, of the M. E. Church South president of Emory College, and considered one of the most progressive young men of his church, makes a bitter attack upon the W. C. T. U. in the columns of the Wesleyan Christian Advocate, of Atlanta, Ga. He strongly advises the Georgia state union to secede from the National and, in the meantime, urges the M. E. Church South, to "withdraw the support of its pulpits, churches and conferences from the organization."

So serious an action as this toward an organization of Christian women who have banded themselves against the greatest foe of our American home, surely should have adequate cause. The supposed cause is found in the attitude of the National on the question of woman's suffrage. The good doctor devotes a column to proving that the National and THE UNION SIGNAL, as its organ, inculcates the doctrine of woman's suffrage. This part of his article strikes us as very amusing. The National speaks in no uncertain tones on this question, and we had always supposed that we had expressed ourselves with sufficient clearness, so that no one would feel the need of an elaborate argument to prove our position. We have not the slightest objection to any one's disseminating good suffrage doctrine by such full quotations from our columns as are to be found in Dr. Candler's article, nevertheless we consider it unnecessary, as we are perfectly willing to say once for all that we earnestly advocate suffrage for woman,

Dr. Candler especially fears woman's suffrage for the South because, he claims, it would greatly increase the ignorant vote. "With negro women voting," he asks, "what would not come to pass?" It is the old, familiar cry, "the votes of the bad and ignorant women will ruin us." It is nevertheless true that thus far wherever women have voted, it has been the intelligent and the good, not the ignorant and bad, who have been the determining factor in the election. We appreciate that an ignorant vote, whether cast by a white hand or a black one, is a dangerous vote; but in this matter we believe the South has far less to fear from ignorant women, black or white, than from ignorant men. It is not an overestimate to say that there are tens of thousands of colored men in the South naturally well-intentioned and industrious who have become the victims of strong drink. The wives of these men have to provide the family support and endure the untold anguish of the drunkard's wife. Think you, such women cannot be trusted to vote on the question of prohibition? White-ribboners have proved that, while there are exceptions, even ignorant women are true to the home as against the saloon.

The Doctor says that Wyoming, which has had woman's suffrage for years, has never put a prohibitory law upon its statute books, and from this he argues that if woman's suffrage were once gained all over the nation, prohibition would be "irretrievably lost." This seems to us a very palpable case of the fallacy known to logicians as post hoc, ergo propter hoc (after this, therefore because of it). When we consider that the women of the world have risen in revolt against the liquor traffic, that in this cause they have endured persecution, made untold sacrifices of time, strength and money, and that everywhere else their vote has been the bulwark of prohibition, it would seem that any reasonable being would look a long time for some other reason for Wyoming's failure to introduce prohibition than the mere fact that women have the suffrage there. The true reasons for this failure were given in Miss Willard's last annual address; the population of the state is scattered and transient and therefore, as every one knows, the very worst kind of a population for reform movements to spread among, hence the W. C. T. U. has not pushed its work in Wyoming as it has elsewhere. But beyond and above all else, and that which makes Dr. Candler's insinuation peculiarly unfair, the trouble with Wyoming is it hasn't enough woman's suffrage, its woman's vote is not large enough. Women in Wyoming form only one-third of the population.

The writer greatly fears that "evil communications will corrupt good manners," and that Southern women will, in the end, be moved to accept the suffrage views of their Northern sisters. Even if they do not he sees only trouble ahead. "But," he says, "suppose the best, that the state unions in the South steadily refuse to indorse woman's suffrage, while the National union, with which they are vitally connected, stands for it and continues to propagate the doctrine; and suppose woman's suffrage is finally adopted by the Northern states, what will be the relation of the Southern states to the case? Will they not be forced to adopt it or suffer from it when it is adopted? The constitution of the United States, in defining national citizenship says, 'The electors in each state shall have the qualifications requisite for electors of the most numerous branch of the state legislature.' If the Northern states should enfranchise women, their women would vote in national elections, and we should therefore have a congress before very long in which there would be a majority of woman suffragists. Suppose they should begin to conjure with these vague but inflammable terms, 'freedom,' 'emancipation,' etc. (always captivating to the ears of Northern fanatics), and in order to secure a party advantage through the votes of negro women in the South, suppose they should adopt an amendment to the constitution providing that 'the right to vote shall not be denied or abridged by the United States or by any state on account of sex,' what would be our condition? Let no one imagine this supposition is far fetched, or this possibility remote. This very amendment has been introduced in every one of the last half-dozen Congresses and in the Senate of the United States. There are open and ardent advocates of it, and there is a standing committee on woman's suffrage.

"Most of our good women who have coöperated with the W. C. T. U. have no sympathy with the doctrine, but they are being misled by plausible women and a few ambitious men. Let them awake to the peril with which our church and the temperance cause and society in the South is threatened, and resist this subtle movement before it goes further and becomes more powerful for evil. Let them separate from the National union and organize their own Christian Temperance Unions, local, state and interstate, if such a connectional union is necessary."

We confess that to our minds the above appears like a non sequitor. In other words, we cannot see how the secession of the Southern unions from the National would at all affect the issue. If woman's suffrage is gaining ground in the North, steadily and rapidly, all these things will just as surely happen if the Southern unions secede as if they do not. We cannot see that the South can save itself by anything short of the secession of the states themselves, and even then we fear that this would not avail unless they could put an ocean between themselves and their offending brothers of the North. Still, this does not give promise of ultimate success, for electricity and steam have well-nigh blotted out this once effectual gulf of separation.

"The simple truth is that the leaving of the woman's suffrage feature of the W. C. T. U. to the determination of the state unions is a skillful method to spread the doctrine without incurring the opposition which otherwise it would provoke."

To the implication in the above paragraph that the W. C. T. U. uses underhanded means to propagate its doctrines, we protest. If our advocacy of woman's suffrage has not been open and above board, then we do not know of any doctrine which has been thus advocated. It is, indeed, true that we fully believe that in the end all of our sisters will come to see this matter as we do and that every Southern state union will adopt the franchise department of the National. We are so sure we are right that we are willing to leave it to the logic of events and the test of open discussion. Is not Dr. Candler willing to let the matter be decided in that way? Is he afraid that his view cannot stand the light? For our part, we only wish that this great question should be decided aright. We pray that if we are wrong, God may defeat us and we believe that He will direct us, and that the surest and the quickest way to find out what is right is to leave every one free to come to his own conclusion and to encourage the freest discussion of the question.

"Let our pulpits, our churches, our conferences withdraw support from an organization, the further indorsement of which weakens our force in behalf of temperance and endangers the peace and power of Methodism. This we should do for 'God and Home and Native Land.'"

Alas, alas! Does not Dr. Candler know that such an action would be greeted with cheers and rejoicing on the part of the liquor host? Does he have more confidence in this enemy of the home than he has in 100,000 Christian women? None but the ignorant or the hopelessly prejudiced can deny that there are no better Christian women in this world than those who have declared that the protection of our homes demands woman's ballot. More than this, the liquor host has declared more than once that woman's ballot is the greatest foe the liquor traffic has to fear. Does not this united testimony of friends and foes deserve serious consideration, in the name of "God and Home and Native Land"?

WORLD'S CONGRESS OF WOMEN.

There is so much said of the World's Congress of Representative Women, so many organizations coöperating with it, so many different departments, so much machinery which is really necessary to the smooth running of such a gigantic meeting, that the outside public, not in the ranks of the workers for the congress, is somewhat mystified by it all.

A few words, however, will serve to give careful readers a clear idea of the general outline of the plan, which includes more than one hundred and fifty separate sessions in the Art Palace, during the week beginning May 15, and each of them a part of the Woman's Congress, without which it would not and could not be the grand setting forth of woman's efforts along all lines which it is the hope of those planning this meeting, to make it.

These are the main divisions of the congress: First, the general program, which will be given in the two large auditoriums of the Art Palace, the Hall of Washington and the Hall of Columbus. This will open in the Hall of Washington alone, Monday, May 15, with the introduction of the foreign representatives, who are coming from every European country except Turkey, and from a number of countries of South America, from Mexico, from Canada, from Iceland and from distant Australia.

The introduction and responses of the foreign delegations will occupy both morning and evening of the first day of the congress, and, although it is greatly to be feared that the one hall in which these welcoming ceremonies will be held, will not hold one-half the people who will wish to see and hear, yet, in deference to our sisters from abroad, no other meetings will be in session that day.

Beginning with Tuesday, there will be a double series of meetings in the two large auditoriums, extending till Saturday evening. Sunday will witness the union service, by ordained women from all the denominations which ordain women, a significant object lesson to all the witnesses who belong to the churches whose doors are still closed to this acknowledgment of the right of women to the laying of holy hands upon her head when she goes forth to preach the gospel to all peoples.

Sunday evening the great hall of Washington will echo to the strains of sacred music, composed and rendered by women, except for the four highly favored representatives of the other sex who shall be selected to sing tenor and bass in the double quartette.

Thus endeth the general program!

But this, with all its attractions of great names and interesting topics, is but a part of the good things in store for those attending the congress.

There are, second, the Department Congresses in long array; these are congresses, each lasting one day, held by the national organizations of women in the numerous department halls of the great Art Palace, to set forth their work and topics kindred to it.

Then, third, there are the sessions of the Report Congress, meeting from Tuesday to Friday in two of the department halls, for the purpose of hearing the interesting reports of all the foreign associations and of such American associations as do not hold Department Congresses. A long array of brilliant names will form a great attraction in this department.

Finally there is, fourth, one of the most interesting and valuable departments of the congress,—the conferences upon all the eight lines of division of the congress—education, industry, literature and art, moral and social reform, philanthropy and charity, civil law and government, religion.

To each of these subjects has been allotted a department hall which is to be in charge of a committee of not less than twenty members, sub-committees of which will be in charge daily (except during the hours of the sessions from 10 to 12:30 and 7:45 to 10:30) to receive all visitors and to arrange informal conferences of those especially interested in particular subjects, which they desire to hear discussed more exhaustively than is possible upon the general program. Many conferences are to be expected in the afternoons, which are also to be given largely to social receptions, both in the Art Palace and outside of it. As the conferences are arranged from day to day, they will be announced from the platforms of all the halls.

Among the attractive speakers to be heard in all these various departments of this many-sided congress are, Mrs. Jane Cobden Unwin, of England, daughter of Richard Cobden, of Corn Law fame; Miss Meri Toppelius and Mrs. Ebba Nordqvist, of Finland; Madame Quesada, of Peru; Frau Hedwig Heyl and Frau Elizabeth Kazelowsky, of Germany; Froken Kirstine Frederiksen, of Denmark; Sleona Karla Machova and Josepha Humpal-Zeman, of Bohemia; Calleroe Parran, of Greece; the Countess of Aberdeen of Scotland; Mrs. Florence Fenwick Miller, of England; Mlle. Rhea and Mme. Isabel Bogelot, of France; Signora Fanny Zampini Salazar, of Italy; Dr. Marie Popelin, of Belgium; Senorita C. de Alcala, of Spain; and of our own country, Augusta Cooper Bristol, Rev. Ida C. Hultin, Dr. Anna H. Shaw, Susan B. Anthony, Sara L. Oberholtzer, Clara Hoffman, Annie Jenness Miller, Miss Georgia Cayvan, Julia Marlow, Madame Janauschek, Madame Helena Modjeska, Julia Ward Howe, Helen H. Gardener, Professor Ellen Hays, of Wellesley, J. Ellen Foster and a host of others.

THE ADMISSION OF UTAH AS A STATE.

We regard with grave apprehension the suggestions from various quarters favoring the admission of Utah to the sisterhood of states. Few more serious problems have confronted us as a nation than Mormonism, the anomalous, hideous excrescence upon our Christian civilization.

What is Mormonism? First, it is an institution devoted to the propagation of polygamy and in that character is the direst foe of woman. Let polygamy once be adopted in any state of our nation and every hard-won forward step of woman would be by so much imperiled. For polygamy relegates woman to the zenana and harem. And the degradation of woman involves the corresponding degradation of man.

It may seem that in this age of Christian civilization polygamy could be nothing more than a ghost of the past, to be feared only as other ghosts for its effects upon the timid and weak-nerved. But the hold which this monstrosity of heathenism has already gained in our land of education and Christian influence warns us that we dare not ignore it as an evil of the past.

In addition to this, Mormonism is a political institution and the utterances of its leaders within recent years brand it as thoroughly treasonable to our institutions and our flag. Until threatened by the national government, it openly avowed that allegiance to the Mormon church took precedence of allegiance to the stars and stripes, and no more open contempt and treason were ever expressed that can be found in the utterances of these same leaders. The dedication of the great temple, noticed in one of our recent issues, included ten days of secret ceremonies. No greater menace to our free institutions can be named than a secret religious or political society, and the Mormon church is both.

It is claimed by admissionists that the rigid measures of the last few years have crushed polygamy and deprived Mormonism of its fangs. From what we can learn, we judge that outwardly polygamists have yielded, and that open treason has been suppressed. There are those, however, who aver that even now there is secret evasion of the law which only awaits opportunity to become outbroken and rampant. And, without evidence, we well know that these people are as much polygamists at heart as ever they were. We have a more or less complete history of the human race dating back nearly six thousand years, and, unless human nature has, within the period of a very few years, entirely changed its character, there is not the slightest reason to hope that Mormons have become at heart monogamists, and loyal to our institutions.

If polygamy and openly avowed treason have been suppressed, it is cause for rejoicing; but it is no reason for us to relax our vigilance. Still less is it a reason for at once trusting these people, who were but a few years ago the undoubted enemies of our nation and our civilization, with additional political power. To admit Utah to statehood gives the Mormon church at once great political power. With Utah as a territory, Mormonism has few political favors to bestow; as a state, the Mormon vote becomes at once a most important factor, for which unscrupulous politicians will bid with regard for nothing but their own personal ambitions. Unless, too, Mormons have lost their craftiness, they will at once concentrate all their forces in Utah, and the Mormon problem will assume at a bound terrific proportions. We have already one of the hosts of Satan "entrenched behind the solid walls of legislation." Let us beware how we permit another host, not less diabolical in character than the liquor traffic, to find lodgment behind the same stronghold.

It is true that the most we can hope from legislation is to "render men harmless"; but it is also true that when an evil has been rigidly suppressed for a generation, the new generation which takes the place of the old will be largely, if not wholly, emancipated from the errors of their fathers. There is reason to believe that if the present rigid suppression of Mormonism is continued for a generation, the next generation of the citizens of Utah may be safely trusted with the privileges of statehood, but, in our judgment, if we risk the experiment sooner, we shall lay up for ourselves "wrath against the day of wrath."

Dr. John Henry Barrows, of Chicago, chairman of the committee on religious congresses, has issued a second report, which is intensely interesting reading. These meetings are a part of the World's Congress Auxiliary, and comprise the first world's parliament of religions. The sessions of the parliament will be held in the hall of Columbus, in the new Art Palace of Chicago, during the month of September. Says Dr. Barrows:

"The plan of holding a parliament of religions, at which the representatives of the great historic faiths shall sit together in frank and friendly conference over the great things of our common, spiritual and moral life, is no longer a dream. The religious world in its great branches will be represented in this truly ecumenical conference. There will be Buddhist scholars, both from Japan and India, and probably also from Siam. One of the high priests of Shintoism is expected to be present. Two Moslem scholars, eminent in India, have accepted invitations. The eloquent Mozoomdar will speak for progressive Hinduism. Arrangements are being made to secure papers from orthodox Hindus. The Chinese government has commissioned a scholar to represent Confucianism. It is expected that Parsis, from Bombay, will speak of their ancient faith. Jewish Rabbis of Europe and America are in earnest sympathy with this movement. The interest in the Exposition and in this approaching congress will draw to Chicago numerous representatives of the historic religions. Leading Christian missionaries and native Christians of many lands will be present, including some of the foremost men of India. Prominent scholars in America, England and Germany have already accepted invitations to address the parliament. We are encouraged to hope that the Russian, Armenian and Bulgarian churches will have representation in the parliament.

"The committee having the parliament in charge fully appreciate the immense task committed to them. They are pioneers entering a new country; they seek light and wisdom from every source. They desire to accomplish the greatest possible good and to unite all those who believe that such a Congress as has been outlined will promote the best interests of mankind. They desire to deepen the spirit of human brotherhood among religious men of diverse faiths, to set forth what are deemed the important distinctive truths taught by each religion; to indicate the impregnable foundations of theism and the reasons for man's faith in immortality; to strengthen the forces adverse to materialism; to inquire what light each religion may afford to the others; to furnish an accurate account of the present outlook of religion; to throw all possible light on the solemn problems of the present age, and to bring the nations of the earth into more friendly fellowship. They invite the coöperation of all who are favorable to their plan in its great outlines, and the suggestions of all who believe that it may be improved in its minor details."

England is to send a commission to this country to inquire into our experience with the Russian Jews. It is claimed that Jews are chiefly responsible for the sweating system and that most of the Jewish ready-made clothing houses of the better class employ sweaters.

That was a happy putting of the case by William T. Stead when he remarked that the theory of life for women is to feed them on the plum pudding of Chivalry, but that all thoughtful women desired instead the coarse but nutritious brown loaf of Justice.

A gifted woman who has recently written a book entitled "Woman Free," explains the reason for it thus: "I had a dear mother who was ill-treated (through man-made laws) and a noble sister to whom were closed the avenues of usefulness which would have lain open to her had she been a man. I felt the position keenly, and that, while it injured woman, it in no way helped man, but far the contrary. How could it but be the dearest hope of my life to help to remove from humanity such injustice, such shackles, and to see man rising with woman to that higher life even on earth itself to which the finer spirit and faculties of women can alone lead the way?"

At one of the meetings of our leaders an old man who had been forty years a total abstainer, came twenty miles in his farm cart to hear, but mistaking the day was obliged to go home disappointed. Each week he is accustomed to put half a crown in a box kept for charity, this being the amount he was wont to spend for tobacco before he reformed from the use of any narcotics. Passing a saloon he was often heard to say in his slow country speech: "When I went inside your doors I did not have a house of my own, but now I have; I did not ride in a cart, but now I own one, and I have laid up money for my old age." This is one of those valuable stories that does not need a moral tacked on at the end.

It was a curious commentary on the average life of good people the advertisement that recently appeared in a London paper, viz.: "Wanted, a companion, a Christian but cheerful."

In the great hall in the Mile End Road where Mr. Charrington, the son of the great brewer, invests money and time to help the most tempted classes in London, and the most distressed, Lady Henry and Miss Willard spoke recently, and in the second gallery of that great hall were one hundred and twenty very poor women to whom the considerate care of the managers had given passes to attend, so that for once in their lives they should have a temperance treat and a real "outing."

In the course of the correspondence carried on by officers of the National Council of Women in their efforts to learn what has been accomplished, they have already lists of leaders in women's societies to the number of eight hundred and fifty.

Those who wish to destroy all mystery in those they love, to have everything revealed, are unconsciously killing their own happiness. It is much to be with those who have many things to say to us which we cannot bear now. It is much to live with those who sometimes speak to us in parables—if we love them. Love needs some indefiniteness in order to keep its charm. Respect, which saves love from the familiarity which degrades it, is kept vivid when we feel that there is a mystery in those we love which comes of depth of character. Remember, that in violating your own reserve, or that of another, you destroy that sensitiveness of character which makes so much of the beauty of character; and beauty of character is not so common as not to make it a cruel thing to spoil it.—Rev. Stafford Brooks.

Speaking of the reasons why so many attractive girls find a difficulty in obtaining husbands, the English periodical, Woman, says: "The mistake partly lies in the fact that men will fall in love with and marry exceedingly young girls, who possess all that nameless charm of youth which exercises such an extraordinary fascination over the male sex, without having yet acquired the common sense, experience and force of character needed to make them become good wives and mothers, all of which they would probably gain in a few years' time. Almost every girl knows from her own personal experience that for one admirer or proposal she may have after three or four and twenty, she had five or six before that time; though she may know herself to have improved in every way, in character, intellect, manner, even in looks—for an English girl seldom deteriorates till after thirty—yet she feels that much of her power of attraction has forsaken her, even though every other power has increased tenfold. A raw boy does not possess any of this charm for women. Heaven forbid that he should!"

NEWS FROM THE LONE STAR STATE.

The Houston W. C. T. U., through the former state reporter, Mrs. Tracy, announces progress in our great work. At a recent election of officers, Mrs. Tracy was elected president; Mrs. Grant was made vice-president at large, Mrs. Jennie Rue, recording secretary, Mrs. Hattie Breeding, corresponding secretary, and Mrs. Jennie Lucas, treasurer. The lecture on "The Moral Reforms of the Day," by the Rev. Dr. Rodgers, of the Episcopal church, was highly appreciated by all. Mrs. Sam Hain now resides in San Antonio, where she will prove a valuable addition to the white ribbon army.

The Dallas union is steadily at work. They have furnished a room in a new home for fallen women opened by the King's Daughters. The eleventh anniversary of the union was held on April 6. The following officers were elected: Mrs. A. T. Canfield, president, Mrs. George Merry, recording secretary, Mrs. W. D. Knowles, corresponding secretary and Mrs. Martha Orr, treasurer. After the election the Temple mite-boxes were opened. The contents of thirteen boxes, amounting to twenty dollars and twelve cents, was unanimously voted to be applied to the Beauchamp tablet. The next day the union gave an ice cream and strawberry supper to finish raising the money pledged on their president's salary.

The W. C. T. U. of Corpus Christi have had a successful entertainment for increasing their Temple fund. It consisted of recitations and music, with an address by Mr. Wilkie. They realized $18.65, which goes to the Temple. The union has received in Mrs. and Miss Hardwicke, the Baptist minister's wife and daughter, two valuable members. Mrs. Hardwicke was president of the Luling union.

Denison women rejoice that they have sent the remainder due on the Acheson tablet, $26.50. They have been holding a series of monthly teas, also one mothers' meeting and two business meetings during the month. Taylor L. T. L. held an interesting medal contest. Miss Nellie Brown won the silver medal. They are preparing for another contest. The L. T. L. numbers one hundred and fifty-six earnest workers. The W. C. T. U. has forty members. Mrs. McLain was elected president, in place of Mrs. Smith, who was compelled to resign.

Dublin L. T. L. has one hundred and fifty pledged members. They have had several parlor socials, with temperance readings, recitations and songs, to raise money for their work. Tyler L. T. L. has also held a medal contest. The medal was won by Miss Annie Leggatt, who recited "The Deacon's Watch."

Paris union is busy preparing to entertain the state convention. They promise us a royal welcome from mayor, clergy, press and the W. C. T. U. In their work they miss the presence and counsel of Mrs. Rosa Johnson, one of the most faithful of Texas W. C. T. U. women, who "crossed over the river" in the early spring.

Fort Worth Y at its annual meeting elected the following officers: Mrs. L. Calhoun, president; Mrs. Ida Hamilton, vice-president; Mrs. Robert Morehouse, secretary, and Miss Emma Pearcy, treasurer. The "Temple Tea" given by the Fort Worth W. C. T. U. was a decided success both socially and financially. Eleven dollars were added to the Key memorial fund. Mrs. Stoddard spent Easter Sunday at Burnet. A church full of children gathered to welcome her in the afternoon. A large company was added to our Texas L. T. L. Monday afternoon a W. C. T. U. was organized with Mrs. Morton as president.

San Antonio unions are much gratified to see the influence they have set in motion. A letter was sent to each minister in the city asking him to preach on Sunday closing of business houses, also to meet with the W. C. T. U. presidents to formulate some plan of aggressive work. These requests were readily complied with and the city has been stirred mightily. The Y. M. C. A. then took it up and it has been entirely taken out of our hands, some not even crediting us with originating the movement, but we do not care for that so that the disgrace of our city is removed. A large mass-meeting at the opera house was called by the citizens' committee. Judge J. R. Fleming, a noble Christian layman, was elected chairman and made a magnificent speech which aroused the entire audience. A committee was sent the next day to Austin to have certain changes made in the liquor license. The saloon men tried to capture the mass-meeting but fortunately it was found out in time to be prevented. They then assembled in front of the opera house and tried by noise and confusion to draw the crowd outside. One feature of the mass-meeting the W. C. T. U. brothers-in-law were heard to object to was that the ladies were not invited to be present, or if so, only to sit in the gallery. It was not very gallant, but we forgave them as they were so anxious to reach the voters, and we are not citizens!

Mrs. Elizabeth A. Fry, who for so many years has stood faithfully at the helm of the Central union, even when it seemed that it would sink beneath the waves of indifference, has resigned her position and, it is said, will give her entire time to the suffrage work, as an equal suffrage association is to be organized soon. Mrs. M. C. Hearon, who has recently come to San Antonio from Denver, was elected president in Mrs. Fry's place. Mrs. Dr. Minnette has resigned the presidency of the Prospect Hill W. C. T. U., and Mrs. Daniels succeeds her.

West End union gave a most interesting medal contest. Miss Eva Mullehan, who recited "The Wolf and the Hound," by Miss Willard, won the silver medal. All did so well that the wish was expressed that each could have a medal. Miss Baker has been appointed superintendent of Temple work and has ordered mite-boxes for the union.

Perhaps we should not record our disappointments, but as this was referred to in my last letter, I will do so. We were so sure the legislature would appropriate fifteen thousand dollars for a rescue home for fallen women in Fort Worth. The bill had passed in the senate and was up for its third reading in the house; there were fifteen majority in its favor. Just at this juncture a most remarkable thing occurred. The chaplain prayed for the economical members, that God would "open the eyes of those who have allowed the love of money to balance against virtue." Instead of opening their eyes it shut many generous ones and the bill was lost by a large majority. Mrs. Collins, our superintendent of social purity, won golden opinions from the legislators by the dignified and able manner in which she spoke of the whole sad business. At any rate, attention was called to the subject as never before.

A bill allowing Dallas to license houses of prostitution was lobbied through the legislature, but we are proud to say Governor Hogg promptly vetoed it. Our scientific temperance instruction bill passed both house and senate, but just as we hoped to report a glorious victory an important trial of an official has come up and everything else is deferred. We feel like exclaiming with Solomon, "Hope deferred maketh the heart sick."

Like Dorothea Dix, our noble president has stood faithfully at her post, working quietly, not doing a thing of a public nature, but never forgetting the little knot of white ribbon that speaks for temperance and purity.

OREGON.

THE SHOWERS OF SPRING.

I hoped by waiting to have had a digest of the bills of our late legislature prepared for me; but I must, after all, depend upon my own gleanings from the papers day by day. In the first place we hoped to have had our scientific instruction bill amended (or "hygienic physiology," which from constant contact with the public school, I am more in the habit of calling it). In fact, I think it a better name, "scientific instruction" alone (for the whole sentence is too long for common parlance) has too wide a signification. The teacher's phrase narrows it down to what the teaching really is.

But about our would-be amendment. There was so little petition work done, and our state superintendent, Mrs. Narcissa White Kinney, found it impossible to visit the legislature, consequently we must wait in patience for another two years, and make up our minds to do better work. However we have obtained a penalty clause to our tobacco law, which will affect the "minor" in question as well as the dealer. Hitherto, as of course the truth could never be wormed out of a boy, how he came by his cigarettes—never a dealer had his right to sell questioned! Having heard of the cigarette raid in San Francisco last year, we did our best to accomplish something in Corvallis, but in vain. We tried to induce the dealers (by carrying them a long petition) to agree not to sell to minors. The best natured of them signed willingly, but the worst delinquent of the whole could not be persuaded. I, for one, however, am getting tired of state laws; excepting for criminal offences of a direr sort, each chartered city rides defiantly over them. I notice in Miss Willard's last letter that she remarks upon the contrast between the enforcement of law in England and in this country.

Although there were no less than seventeen bills for the protection of game and twelve for that of fish, yet our legislators had time to consider some on more important subjects. Amongst those on education, there was one to provide a school in the penitentiary; another concerning the reformation, as well as the punishment of convicts, and yet another, favorable to the school for deaf mutes; two or three, protective of the rights of married women; one to prevent abusive language in public places; to prevent prize fighting; to fine the inmates of bawdy houses; to punish, with twenty years' imprisonment, the crime of rape on a woman under eighteen. But as I said before, what do state laws amount to unless public sentiment is at high water-mark? I feel very strongly how much work the women have to do in order to create this sentiment, and in such a way that the men may think they have done it all themselves. This idea has been lately borne out in the little town of Amity, where the W. C. T. U. has kept the fire smouldering for years, till a warm wind came in the shape of Colonel Stevenson's lectures, which fanned it into a sudden flame, and many men left their evil courses and became Christian citizens.

A change in the chief of police has produced an improvement in Portland, for thirty-one saloons have been closed; there remain, however, some three hundred and fifty as centers of corruption to our metropolis. Forest Grove has just passed through its biennial fight to keep clear of the saloon, when one thousand two hundred dollars were pledged for the expense of bringing an illicit whisky seller before the court. The W. C. T. U. of Gardiner is circulating a remonstrance against the further granting a liquor license, which has been well signed. The Monroe case, mentioned in my last, has not yet been heard. The county judge reckoned the names on the saloon petition, that were afterwards canceled by being placed on the remonstrance. In the meantime the year's license is almost expired, and it is time to begin again with a remonstrance petition that it may be the first in the field.

Another county has fallen into line this winter with a full organization—Jackson county—with Mesdames Hyde, Carter, De Groot and Eddings as officers. That county with Douglas and Josephine, held on February 1, a mass convention at Ashland, when able papers were read by several ladies. "The mother in the temperance work," by Mrs. N. A. Eddings was specially captivating. Our state president conducted a school of methods aided by Mrs. S. H. Spangler, Washington county's president.

Our dear Mrs. Riggs has been instant in season and out of season, although the winter and late spring have been less adapted for traveling work than usual. After the district convention in Southern Oregon, she visited Medford, accompanied by Mrs. Mead, our state evangelist. They spoke at the Y. M. C. A. meeting on the Sunday, holding a mothers' meeting next day. They laid over, too, at Salem for work, in which place during January Mrs. Riggs gave two addresses. With the help of friends, Mrs. Riggs obtained from the legislature the usual appropriation for the refuge home, Portland. This home, notwithstanding its scanty space, is doing good work among unfortunate girls and women. Two pretty patchwork quilts have been finished this winter, all the work being done by the girls, so neatly and tastefully as to give much pleasure to those who have their best interests at heart. When we remember that girls of this stamp seldom know how to handle a needle, their having made this progress in industrial capacity is indeed most satisfactory.

Our superintendent for the mercy department, Mrs. Louise Round, made a two weeks' tour through Yamhill and Washington counties, speaking in forty-eight different school-rooms, besides five private schools and colleges, and forming almost as many bands with an average of forty signatures to each.

Our Y superintendent reports with a facile and piquant pen, the organization of nine unions. Of the Y at LaGrande, she writes: "It occurred to the young ladies that the best way to interest the honorary members and to keep them out of mischief, was to make them active members, which they immediately did, and appointed one of them vice-president." It came about that in consequence of the resignation of their president and their "vice" filling the office so well, that this Y is now presided over by Mr. Wm. Kuhn, and has thirty five members. The banner Y for the state is that of Forest Grove which has seventy-two members, of which one-third are young men. Miss Trumbull rejoices, and naturally so, that in one season three hundred new members have been added to Oregon's list. The new unions are at Forest Grove, LaGrande, Sellwood, St. John, Cornelius, McMinnville, Monmouth, Union and Elgin.

Two National workers have been in the state besides our own resident one, Mrs. Cox. Mrs. Pitt Stevens spoke three times in Southern Oregon, and Mrs. Blair had five appointments—at Portland, Oregon City, Forest Grove, McMinnville and Corvallis. We hailed her advent in Corvallis as a stepping-stone to the L. T. L., which had been in abeyance ever since Mrs. Spangler left us, I am ashamed to think how many years ago! I had resolved to release myself from the president's chair and go back to my early love should no Legion worker be found by the time of our annual meeting. But Mrs. Blair's captivating chalk talk, followed by a second visit from Mrs. Ada Unruh, our state superintendent, resulted in an L. T. L., made up of two divisions, an afternoon one, with Delsarte drill as a délassement, and an evening one for boys over ten, with military drill, kindly given by one of our college students. I shall not rest until I see two more branches at work, one with kindergarten accompaniments and another to play band music for our little army.

But instead of building castles in the air I must tell you of two more conventions. One, that of Linn county, was held at Scio, February 2 and 3, and presided over by Mrs.

DR. PRICE'S Cream Baking Powder.

L. E. Blain, of Albany. Reports came in goodly numbers and showed steady and increased work in eight different departments. Mrs. Harford was there to help and held, as is her wont, when so desired, a special meeting for men on the subject of influence and purity.

The other convention was the quarterly one of Multnomah county which serves to keep the interest warm and the zeal of the workers steady. An interesting discussion, "How shall we hold fathers' meetings?" led by Mrs. Mead, was a new and useful feature.

Shortly after this meeting Mrs. Harford filled seven appointments in the county with great acceptance. She has since spoken in Linn county and at Amity, of which place I have already spoken. Prior to a trip south she visited Corvallis and held a drawing-room mothers' meeting before speaking in the evening. In the afternoon five new members joined us—the first droppings of a temperance shower.

These drops gathered force under the series of sermons (according to request of the National evangelistic department) and urged by our earnest local superintendent, Mrs. Woodward. The first was preached in the Episcopal church, and was a strong, impassioned call to arms against the spoliations of the liquor traffic. The immediate result of this "call" was the entrance into the W. C. T. U. ranks of every woman in the church, either as active or honorary members, and of several gentlemen. By this time the men are "shouldering their muskets"—to quote the advice of our clergyman—for they are incensed by the decoys of the saloons to entrap our students of the State Agricultural College. Called to an "alliance in arms" by our W. C. T. U., they are now planning for a citizens' temperance ticket, which we pray may be elected at the city polls the second Monday in May.

Eugene has just been through the same fight for the sake of the youth at the state university in her midst. I grieve to say, that although thoroughly aroused, the enemy was too strong for them, and beat at the election. We have a detachment of three from the Salvation Army working in our town, and they count for "great guns." Our tri-weekly mothers' meetings are well attended, almost filling the little church in which we meet. Some weekly house-to-house mothers' classes, and Bible meetings on the Sunday at the homes of some shut-in ones, are being well appreciated.

Our Y's too, are keeping up—beside their socials—open monthly meetings in the different churches, and they are helping us as good daughters always do. In fact, I feel inclined to sing with the saintly Keble of my own old Church of England—with but a slight change of word

"Rejoice, my soul, mount up, and sing,
Mount, but be sober on the wing.
Rejoice, for victory's won by prayer,
Be sober, for thou art not there."

HOW THE BATTLE WAS WON.

My last letter gave some account of the fight in our legislature to raise the "age of consent" to eighteen years, and promised a fuller account later. We have been trying to get this bill for years. At our last state convention your reporter was made state superintendent of the social purity department, and at once resolved that the first work of the department would be to try to raise the legal age of protection to girls.

I wrote to all the unions in the state, asking them, among other things, to see or write their representatives at Nashville, urging them to vote for any measure that might come before the legislature for the better protection of girls. An ably written article from the pen of Mrs. Mary Bang, our state vice-president, appeared in the Banner, a Nashville daily of wide circulation and a broad influence for good. Following this, two bills were introduced, one by Mr. Babb, of Shelby, I think, raising the age of consent to sixteen years, and one by Mr. Milburn, of Greene, raising the age to eighteen years. I at once wrote both gentlemen, thanking them, as state superintendent of social purity department, and in the name of the W. C. T. U. for what they had done, and offering our services. Mr. Milburn replied, giving the provisions of the bill, and asking that petitions be sent in for its passage by those interested. The response was prompt, as might have been expected from devoted W. C. T. U. women.

Just before the legislative recess, Mr. Milburn wrote me that his bill had been recommended for rejection by the judiciary committee, to whom it had been referred, and a similar one of Mr. Babb's had been recommended for passage, raising "age of consent" to twelve years. I at once sent word along the line, in advance of the official announcement; and then did the storm rise and rage all through the legislative recess of four weeks. It began with the mothers, but soon the "constituents" began to protest. Then the state press took up the cry and called shame on those who were opposed to protecting girls until they are eighteen years of age. Strong editorial articles appeared in the Banner.

When the legislature came together again, the petitions that had been sent in for the passage of the bill were presented by Mr. Milburn as they came in. A few days later at the instance of Rev. H. H. Wright of the Fisk University, Dr. D. C. Kelly called a meeting of the ministers of Nashville to protest against the action of the judiciary committee. The White Cross League of Nashville also sent in petitions for its passage. The Nashville Christian Advocate, organ of the M. E. Church south, said the recommendation of the judiciary committee (twelve years) would "disgrace a parliament of Hottentots." The Banner, answering the objections to the bill, closed by saying that a man who, under the guise of love, ruins a maiden's confidence and even with her consent, ruins her life, ought to go to the penitentiary.

In the meantime, Mrs. Meriwether, hearing the date was set for third reading of the bill, went to Nashville, where she spoke there to a good crowd, in her best style, the message in her heart. She was followed by Mr. Milburn and other members of the legislature. At the close of the meeting a resolution was unanimously adopted, urging the passage of the bill, raising "age of consent" to eighteen years. On March 16, the bill came before the house. For hours it was argued for and against. The galleries were full of people, prominent ministers, white-ribboners and others interested. The bill finally passed the house fixing the age at sixteen years and one day, by a vote of sixty-six to twenty-nine.

Mrs. Meriwether, on her way home, stopped at Huntingdon and spoke to a crowded house. Mrs. Roach met her there and they circulated a petition for its passage through the senate and sent it up to Nashville Monday. Mrs. Roach took the petitions to McKenzie and circulated them in like manner there. Mrs. Meriwether stirred up Memphis, as that city has seldom been stirred on a like question, and sent in a petition to the senate 987 strong, signed by the best men in the city. She was working up a meeting among the working men in the interest of the bill, when she was called to New York by the sickness of her daughter. In the meantime the names of those senators known to be opposed to the bill were sent out, and urgent appeals "from home" begged them not to vote against a measure so near the hearts of Tennessee mothers, and we prevailed. While there were some speeches on the floor of the senate against the bill, it did not develop into votes, for the bill passed without a dissenting vote; though it was not nearly so good a bill as was Mr. Milburn's original one.

Another bill, making it a felony to seduce a woman under twenty-one years of age, was introduced into the senate, and passed that body by a good majority. It did not pass the house, for lack of time before adjournment, a matter of much regret, as this bill was of scarcely less importance than the other.

Seeing that a bill had been introduced into the house "to prevent the spread of contagious diseases" and knowing that bills enabling towns and cities to license prostitution were usually passed under some such title, I wrote Mr. Milburn, stating my suspicions, and asking him to look into the matter. He did so, and found the bill on its third reading in the house, just in time to get in an amendment excepting venereal diseases from the provisions of the bill. The amendment was promptly adopted. But he writes me that next morning the lobby was full of men, many of them abusing him and his amendment, and he is sure that I was right, as to what was the object of the bill.

Dr. Mary Wood Allen and Mrs. Prescott passed through our state in the interest of the National social purity department, when the fight was at its highest over the bills. Dr. Allen spoke acceptably at several places, and I think did much to convince people of the importance of the work.

Our scientific temperance instruction bill failed of passage, I am sorry to say, and Tennessee, for two years, at least, remains on the black list of states which will not allow children in the public schools to be taught the pernicious effects of alcoholics and narcotics on the human system. In truth, no bill whatever, of a temperance nature, was passed. Though, on the other hand, so far as I know, no bill was passed favoring the liquor traffic in any way.

Some of our unions report themselves as still very much alive, and are moving quietly on their way doing good in every way they can. Jonesboro union never miss a meeting. They have wide-awake superintendents of thirteen different departments of work. They hold a mothers' meeting the last Thursday in every month, which interests many who can be interested in no other way. They sent petitions to the legislature for the passage of our bills. They keep a weekly column in their town paper, have pockets filled with literature in the depot and post-office, and many other good things.

The Harriman L. T. L. gave an entertainment this winter which was well arranged and nicely executed, but as the weather was unfavorable, the proceeds were less than expected. They also had a song service, which suffered from the same cause.

At the regular meeting of the W. C. T. U. in March, they were favored with an interesting Bible reading by Mrs. McDowell, called "A Swarm of Be's"—a collection of exhortatory texts, beginning with the little word "be." A chicken pie social added a little to their finances. Miss House, president of the Y's and teacher of the kindergarten, gave an address replete with wise thoughts on the education and treatment of children. They have had a parliamentary drill by Mrs. Thayer. Their last meeting was an interesting juvenile entertainment by the L. T. L., presided over nicely by a boy of eleven. A chalk talk was given by Mrs. Karr, which was both suggestive and entertaining.

East Nashville sent in report too late for my last letter. They did earnest, faithful work for the scientific temperance instruction bill, but to no purpose. They could not get it. Mrs. Dale, a member of their union and a worker in the Salvation Army, died recently. The union attended the funeral in a body; the services were conducted by the Salvation Army and were very impressive. The East Nashville and Central Nashville unions united in holding a memorial service in memory of Miss Jennie Casseday, which was largely attended by members of the two unions. The Y. W. C. T. U. gave a very nice reception recently, at which one hundred and fifty young ladies and gentlemen were present. It was a great success.

Winchester has recently reorganized for effective work. Mrs. R. C. Handly is president, and Miss Mary Young, a live, wide-awake young lady, a teacher in the Winchester normal, is corresponding secretary. With such leaders, I am sure Winchester will soon become one of the best working unions in the state. They sent in petitions for the passage of our bills through the legislature. They had Dr. Mary Wood Allen with them one night, who did them good service. Dr. Allen also spoke at Chattanooga and Knoxville. It is much to be regretted that more appointments could not have been made for Dr. Allen in this state. But it could not be this time.

Jackson union is struggling along under adverse circumstances, trying to move things as well as they can. They report having distributed much social purity literature. They are begging earnestly for the state convention this fall, believing it will do them much good to have it.

FLORIDA.

TENTH ANNUAL CONVENTION.

Last year, while in the W. C. T. U. convention at Winter Park, we welcomed Mrs. Mary A. Spencer, president of a new and large union just organized at Pensacola, largely due to the efforts of Rev. Wm. Culpepper, of that city. The new-comer came bearing "good tidings" from what seemed, to the already organized part of the state, far-away Pensacola, and an urgent invitation to come to their city for convention the following year. This we desired to do; not without serious misgivings, however, for the way was long, and the W. C. T. U. purse is seldom plethoric.

When on Friday morning, March 24, the tenth annual meeting of the Florida W. C. T. U. was called to order by our president, Mrs. E. A. Hill, of Orange City, with the four state officers, a number of superintendents, delegates, and a fair showing of visitors, we "thanked God and took courage." Our veteran sister, Mrs. E. L. Goodhue, of Jacksonville, who has missed but one Florida convention, conducted the devotional exercises. Mrs. E. Springer Oliver, evangelist, cheered us by her faith and presence. Rev. W. P. Hurt, pastor of the church in which we were convened, and his excellent wife, with proverbial Southern hospitality, threw wide open the doors of their pleasant home. A spirit of welcome was awarded us by all, for which we were thankful.

The decorations in our place of meeting spoke to us of the love and thought of our Pensacola sisters. Their leader, Mrs. John Eagen, was preparing for our coming, and in the midst of a buoyant and busy life, when the order came for her promotion. Her sad and sudden removal threw her comrades into dismay for a season, yet they gathered up the broken threads, and bravely finished the work she had begun. Her death caused an undertone of sadness throughout all the proceedings.

have been given by Mrs. Eagen, was read by an intimate friend Miss Sue P. Simpson, and responded to by Mrs. Glenn, of Tampa. The president's address was not given on the first evening, as the rain kept many from coming. Not being able to carry out the regular program, an impromptu one, a kind of "experience meeting," participated in by delegates and visitors, as the "spirit moved," filled the hour with interest, and, we trust, with profit.

On Saturday, Mrs. Caroline B. Buell, National corresponding secretary, was presented by the president. Mrs. Buell spoke in the evening to a well filled house; her views, clearly and logically expressed, were sound and comprehensive.

The election of officers occurred on Saturday afternoon, and resulted in the reëlection of most of the old officers, there being little variation from last year. One new department of work was created, that of "purity in art and literature," Mrs. Isabella Driffenderfer, of Winter Park, superintendent.

Mrs. E. Springer Oliver conducted a Bible reading on Sunday afternoon, and at night delivered an able address on "Character Building," to which an appreciative audience listened attentively.

A pleasing little episode on Saturday morning was the presentation of Rev. and Mrs. Hurts' twin baby girls, Lena and Lola, to the convention. Mrs. Buell and Mrs. Hill tied the emblematic white ribbon on an arm of each, while they were voted honorary members of the Florida union, and becomingly received.

Mrs. Hill made a formal statement regarding the gift of land to the state W. C. T. U. and which in her official capacity she had accepted for the union. The gift has been christened Somerset Park in honor of Lady Henry Somerset, and great things are expected to be done there as the months go by; notably the building of an auditorium and the establishing a school of methods there. In order to accomplish this, the Florida workers are admonished that they will need to stand shoulder to shoulder, letting no opportunity pass for gaining means to carry out our design.

The president explained further that since the last annual meeting the Florida W. C. T. U. had been incorporated, under the name of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union Association of Florida. The names of the four state officers, together with three of the superintendents, are affixed as trustees of the property.

The crowning event of Pensacola's courtesy came to us on Monday afternoon in the shape of a most enjoyable excursion on the blue waters of the bay, and beyond into the green depths of the gulf; we could distinctly see the dividing line that separates the waters, and we were told that they never mix. We were indebted to the Pensacola union and friendly citizens for this delightful excursion. Lunch was eaten on board the Nellie. The afternoon was fine, and Captain Flinn afforded us every opportunity for "sight seeing." We were landed at old Fort Pickens, on Santa Rosa Island, and wandered over the old ramparts for a half hour, then on to Fort Barancas, where we interviewed the soldier boys, and to the navy yard at Warrington, returning to the city in time for tea. Having had our holiday, we devoted ourselves assiduously to the finishing up of the business of the convention.

Our president's address was full of practical suggestions, abounding also in pathos, our only regret being that the time was limited so that the address had to be cut off prematurely.

The reports of the plan of work and resolutions committees were read and adopted, after which the tenth annual meeting of the Florida W. C. T. U. adjourned, to meet in Kissimmee February, 1894.

Since convention Mrs. Buell has visited several of the unions. In Tampa five hundred cards of invitation were issued by the local union to ladies of the town, to meet Mrs. Buell at the Congregational Church. Quite a number came, and an interest was awakened in the minds of many which, we fondly hope, may result in good. At St. Petersburg a large audience showed their appreciation of her most excellent lecture. Mrs. Buell visited Somerset Park in company with Mrs. Hill and other friends, and, after "viewing the landscape o'er," expressed herself as highly pleased with the prospect of establishing the state school of methods at Lake Helen.

Altogether we have great cause for thankfulness for the labors of the past and for hope of good to come, and we have only to look "unto the hills from whence cometh our help," and go forward.

THE Honolulu Y's, of the Hawaiian Islands, through their president, Mrs. Alice Jordan, have sent a carefully assorted collection of land shells for the Y part of the World's W. C. T. U. exhibit at the Columbian Exposition.

NEWS IN A NUTSHELL.

THREE Demorest medal contests have been held in Tryon, N. C., recently, the first in that part of the state. More will follow.

"UNCLE SAM and his Family" is the name of a successful entertainment given by the Onarga, Ill., W. C. T. U., assisted by the young people of the town, April 27.

MRS. KATE GOLDMAN, president of the fifteenth district, Illinois, who has resigned her position on account of ill-health, is succeeded by Miss Nannie Want, of Hume.

A CIRCULATOR of the World's Petition in New Mexico remarks on sending in her list of names: "I am proud to be able to say I got every American voter in our town to sign."

MRS. CHARLTON, who had been an active member of the W. C. T. U. in Omaha, Neb., and Oakland, Cal., and a highly esteemed Christian worker, passed away in St. Louis, April 5.

DETROIT Central W. C. T. U. at its annual meeting, April 3, reëlected Mrs. Lilian Hollister president for the tenth time, presenting her with a handsomely engrossed set of resolutions.

"ONE hundred and sixteen members have recently been added to the Augusta, Ga., W. C. T. U. in spite of our 'attendance at the polls' and 'the outcry against suffrage,'" writes Mrs. W. C. Sibley, Georgia's president.

A NEW union of forty members, with Mrs. (Rev.) A. B. Reed as president, was organized, April 25, at Teeswater, Bruce county, Ontario. This is a very promising union, full of enthusiastic interest and influential members.

MARY C. GREGORY, state corresponding secretary of Illinois, was summoned to the bedside of her brother, a faithful supporter of the cause, who died April 14. He leaves a wife and two noble sons who wear the white ribbon.

RENSSELAER county, N. Y., W. C. T. U. held its eleventh annual convention at Hoosick Falls, April 21. The reports showed progressive work, and the county unions were represented by seventy-two delegates, who all contributed to the pleasure and profit of the day.

THE West Side union temperance committee of the Christian Endeavor and Epworth League societies in Chicago, have secured the services of Mr. John G. Woolley for a series of temperance revival meetings, to begin at the Western Avenue M. E. Church, May 21.

THE Beardstown, Ill., union and Y's, about one hundred and fifty strong, called on Mrs. W. P. Kuhl, the retiring president of the twelfth district, and presented her with a handsome set of silver orange spoons, the bowl lined with gold. Mrs. Kuhl leaves the work of her district in excellent condition, and bears with her the love of the women with whom she has labored.

ELIZABETH S. OLIVER, state evangelist of Florida, comes of a race of preachers, married a preacher, and has been preaching herself for thirty years. She is one of the charter members of the Ohio W. C. T. U., and was president of the Zanesville union. Her health requires that her residence be in the Southland, where her winters have been spent since 1883, and the W. C. T. U. there thus gains the advantage of her consecrated talents in its evangelistic department.

ONE of the true friends of the W. C. T. U., Mr. Thomas Burgess of Highlands, N. Y., passed to the higher life this spring after a brief illness. He was the husband of Mrs. Emilie U. Burgess, W. C. T. U. associate superintendent and lecturer of the department of peace and international arbitration. Mr. Burgess was an educator and philanthropist, a man of broad views and benevolent spirit, and from its inception the W. C. T. U. has received his sympathy and support.

THE Woman's Christian Temperance Union of Peoria, Ill., is sorely bereaved in the sudden promotion of one of its best beloved and faithful workers, Miss Sara Perkins Grier, sister of Mrs. E. G. Hibben, one of the powerful and unseen tributaries to the growth, vigor and permanence of the work. Gentle, lovable, but strong and steadfast, she was one to be relied upon and whose counsel was always trusted. None better exemplified "the mind that was in Christ Jesus" in that "He came not to be ministered unto but to minister." The central figure in a large family of relations, she was, as has been well expressed, "their household saint." She wore the mantle of faithful and loving service, doing without fail whatsoever the Master placed before her. "He is not unrighteous to forget her work and labor of love, in that she has ministered to the saints," and to all who needed her ministry "In His Name."

DEVOTIONAL HOUR.

It is very desirable that the devotional hour from eleven till twelve should be observed in all county, district, state and National conventions of the white-ribbon women. This helpful custom is now becoming general, and I send this suggestion only to emphasize it still more deeply in the minds and hearts of our readers throughout the world. Believe me,

Yours in the hope of the gospel,

ANNOUNCEMENTS.

LOCAL UNIONS PLEASE TAKE NOTICE.

Many local unions are arranging to have lecture courses this coming winter. The manager of the Lecture Bureau strongly urges against this, particularly in towns where there is already a popular course. It is suggested instead of trying to arrange separate courses, the local union would be wise in bending its energies toward endeavoring to secure a place for one good temperance lecturer on the popular course.

Thus the lecturer may have the benefit of an audience gathered by the attractiveness of all lecturers in the popular course. The temperance question is such a vital one that few managers of courses can afford to refuse to grant a request from their patrons that it be presented. The advantages are obvious and the local union then has the pleasure of knowing that its town has heard the good tidings and the "other folks" have paid the bills. See? Whenever this has been tried, the success has been most gratifying.

Now of course when the manager grants your courteous request, he will naturally ask you to recommend some one, and I hope and trust that you will either refer him to the Woman's Lecture Bureau, where all of the best lecturers may be obtained, or else ask him to leave the choice to your union, and you write to the Bureau immediately for the best lecturer it can give you on a certain date. It will be well to have the refusal of several dates, and then do the work so promptly that he will be glad enough that he granted your request.

But be sure and obtain your speaker from the Woman's Lecture Bureau, and make your application AT ONCE. Be sure and note that courses for next winter are being made up now.

For dates, terms, etc., for speakers, elocutionists, address

The eleventh state convention of the Texas W. C. T. U. will convene in Paris, Texas, from June 2-5 inclusive. In this city eleven years ago our state was organized by Miss Willard. Many of the original white-ribboners are still active in the work.

President.

PETITION OF THE

WORLD'S WOMAN'S CHRISTIAN TEMPERANCE UNION

FOR THE

PROTECTION OF THE HOME

Addressed to the Governments of the World.

Honored Rulers, Representatives and Brothers:

We, your Petitioners, although belonging to the physically weaker sex, are strong of heart to love our homes, our native land, and the world's family of nations.

We know that clear brains and pure hearts make honest lives and happy homes, and that by these the nations prosper, and the time is brought nearer when the world shall be at peace.

We know that indulgence in Alcohol and Opium, and in other vices which disgrace our social life, makes misery for all the world, and most of all for us and for our children.

We know that stimulants and opiates are sold under legal guarantees which make the Governments partners in the traffic, by accepting as revenue a portion of the profits, and we know with shame that they are often forced by treaty upon populations, either ignorant or unwilling.

We know that the law might do much, now left undone, to raise the moral tone of society and render vice difficult.

We have no power to prevent these great iniquities beneath which the whole world groans, but you have power to redeem the honor of the nations from an indefensible complicity.

We therefore come to you with the united voices of representative women of every land, beseeching you to raise the standard of the law to that of Christian morals, to strip away the safeguards and sanctions of the state from the drink traffic and the opium trade, and to protect our homes by the total prohibition of these curses of civilization throughout all the territory over which your Government extends.

NAMES. | RESIDENCES.

Will not everybody who loves the great cause of home protection, send to Mrs. Mary A. Woodbridge, Ravenna, O., for the regular form and circulate it to the best of her ability, mailing the names to Miss Alice E. Briggs, Evanston, Ill.?

Our Library Table.

SUGGESTIONS TO THE GOOD LITERATURE COMMITTEE, a booklet recently issued by the United Society of Christian, Endeavor gives many pointed and valuable hints on the distribution and use of literature which could well be applied by workers in our own ranks. Ways and means are indicated for opening up before starved minds the treasures of good reading, and for furthering the advance of Christ's Kingdom by the dissemination of the printed leaves.

646 Washington St., Boston.

WOMEN WEALTH-WINNERS, OR HOW WOMEN CAN EARN MONEY, is the very suggestive title of a book by Edna C. Jackson. It is suitably introduced by Helen M. Gougar, who is well known in W. C. T. U. circles. Mrs. Gougar gives most sensible hints to girls who would be wealth-winners. The author has evidently taken pains to inform herself thoroughly concerning the vocations that are or may be followed by women, and has presented the matter in an engaging style. It is a book that should be read, if not for self-help, then that one may know how and what to suggest in answer to the oft-heard wail: "What shall I do to earn some money? I must do something!"

PECULIAR PEOPLE, by Samuel Phelps Leland, Ph. D. This book sets forth in interesting style "something of the history and spirit of communistic doctrines prevalent, in various forms, in our country." There is a thread of romance which holds well together the more serious portions of the book. It tears aside with a steady hand the veil of enchantment which, in many instances, covers the truth of communism, but, as the author says for himself, "I have made the friends of the doctrines speak for them, and they have spoken in charity, and have 'set naught down in malice.'"

HIRAM GOLF'S RELIGION OR THE "SHOEMAKER BY THE GRACE OF GOD." No serious reader can take up this book and lay it down again untouched for the better. Hiram Golf was a shoemaker in a little village near the Cheroquee river. John Jessig was a pastor—a young man—in the village. The story opens as John Jessig comes to the new appointment and his predecessor, Robert Flood, is leaving it. The latter introduces Hiram Golf in these words: "It sometimes happens that a minister's brain runs fallow as the ground does. . . . . If you are ever at a loss for a Sunday topic, the shoemaker will give you one. He thinks with one lobe of his brain while he makes shoes with the other." And all through the book Hiram Golf's religion is a bright light shining upon the commonplaces of life until they shine as if glorified by the radiance. Strong and straight to the point as his shoemaker's hammer driven by an earnest hand, his quaint utterances sent forth from an earnest, loving heart, drive straight home, in truest helpfulness. John Jessig sits at his feet and learns lessons deep and high; narrow-minded Deacon Tubbs is forced to listen to a broad theology touching sectarianism; Farmer Kinch, who had only one string to his harp, "what the neighbors called 'the fear and tremblin' string,'" listens to a song of courage, couched in homely words, it is true, but attuned to the very harp of Gabriel; Cynthia Griffin who had a "saturnine temperament" and saw shadows in the broadest sunbeams, catches the infection of his cheer and involuntarily breaks into song; and so on. But the end came. The end? The Great Beginning: "It's not fur now, dear wife, not fur. I am pretty well tired out, but I'm happy and expectin'. My Father's mansion! They're openin' the gates! Jest a little while and you'll come too, Marthy. Don't be nervous when you hear 'em call. . . . When you come, don't be in the leastwise timid. Some of us will be right there to meet you and I guess the Lord'll let me be among them that says good-mornin'. . . . This pain ain't easy to bear, because I'm growin' weaker, but it can't last much longer. My soul is loosenin' its chains. I can hear 'em as they drop, one by one. Then I shall be free, free! . . . . Is that you, parson? And that is my Marthy? I thought I was in heaven! I was among the angels! I saw—I saw—and now I am here again. Ah, they're comin' once more! Can't you see 'em? How many, many there be! The bells is ringin.' And those voices! They are callin', callin'. Good-bye, good—" "He was a priest without the robes of office, a humble laborer in the vineyard, an honest creature, a true friend. His life was incarnate Christianity. His death—well, my dear boy, such as he never die. . . . . He is of the few who enjoy two immortalities, one there and one here. Would there were more like him."

A SUGGESTION.

Among men and women in various avocations who will read this suggestion are many who see no chance for advancement in their present calling. Many of these are among the brightest and most capable persons in their several communities. Because they do not know where to turn for a larger income, they continue in a helpless way on very low salaries. In another circle where they could use and improve their talents, they could command two or three times their present income. Confined to their every-day routine they have no chance to mingle with the world, and the opportunities that come to others never come to them. Any such person, who is willing to lay aside all prejudices, may become prosperous in the same way that thousands of others have succeeded, if they will write for "An Opportunity" to

WE CURE RUPTURE.

Dr. HORNE'S ELECTRIC TRUSSES

Have Relieved and Cured Over 10,000 Cases of Rupture in the Past Ten Years.

Gives perfect ease and comfort in all positions, and does not interfere with work or business.

A Merchant Recommends Them.

Dr. Sir:—The Electric Truss that I got of you has almost cured me of my rupture. I am still wearing it, and am well pleased. I shall recommend your Electric Truss to my friends. J. A. BUCK, Montevallo, Mo.

"I Believe I am Cured of Double Rupture."

Dr. Sir:—Nine years ago I was ruptured on my left side; for eight years I suffered, trying all kinds of steel and rigid Trusses, and until about a year ago the undue pressure of a steel Truss forced a rupture on the other side. Five months ago I sent to you for one of your Electro-Magnetic Trusses. Before putting on your Truss, I was so weak I could scarcely sit up. A few days' use of your Truss enabled me to go to work. Now my rupture does not come down any more, and I believe I am cured.

J. G. UPTHEGROVE, Manistee, Mich.

A Physician Says.

Dr. Sir:—After meeting with such good success by the use of your Electro-Magnetic Truss on Mr. W. J. Calhoun, prompts me to use one on a patient of mine here. He has worn the old kind of spring Trusses, but they do no good. I think yours will do the work.

NORTON BROKAW, M. D., St. Joseph, Mo.

"Its Effects are Wonderful."

Dr. Sir:—It is with great pleasure that I inform you that the Electric Truss bought of you a short time ago is giving entire satisfaction. 'Tis worn with so much ease, and its effects seem to be wonderful. Within a short time I will be entirely well.

W. A. KING, S. Greenfield, Mo.
Agent & Operator, Kansas City, Ft. Scott & Gulf R. R.

From Missouri.

Dr. Sir:—The eighteenth of March last I bought one of your Electric Trusses. It is helping me nicely, and will cure me by wearing it a little longer.

S. C. POUSH, Andover, Mo.

'I Consider it the Best Retainer I Ever Had.'

Dr. Sir:—The Truss you sold me some time ago gives me perfect satisfaction. I take pleasure in recommending it to all who suffer from rupture. I consider it the best retainer I ever had.

C. M. HAIGHT, Medford, Wis.

Rev. Thomas Swain, of Sodom, Ohio, says:

I have worn Dr. W. J. Horne's Electro-Magnetic Truss since the middle of March, 1885. Although not perfectly cured yet, still I can say the Electric Truss has helped me greatly, and I firmly believe it will cure me. I would recommend its use to all who are afflicted with Hernia, believing it a God-send to the suffering.

REV. THOMAS SWAIN, Sodom, O.

"The Best I Ever Tried."

Dr. Sir:—Your Electric Truss is the best I have ever tried. I have less headache and less pain in my back since I wore the Truss than I have had in a long time. I will speak well of your Truss to every one.

MONROE HOTT, Somerset, Ind.

A Stationer Benefited.

Dr. Sir:—The Electric Truss purchased of you some time since has done me much good.

SAM C. WESTCOTT, Bookseller, Keokuk, Ia.

ARE YOU A SUBSCRIBER TO THE ADVANCE GUARD?

The last "circular letter" to state superintendents, by Mrs. Helen G. Rice, National superintendent Loyal Temperance Legion, has the following timely suggestion:

"I trust you have seen in The Advance Guard Miss Guernsey's new plans in regard to the seal courses. These plans have also been set forth in The Young Crusader. Keep these before the Senior Grade Legioners as a stimulus for them to secure diplomas to which these various seals can be affixed. If you are not already a subscriber to The Advance Guard as well as to The Young Crusader you should surely become one, that you may keep the run of progressive movements."

FOR YOUR CHILD.

Patterson Du Bois, Editor of the Sunday School Times, of Philadelphia, writes: "Your 'Child's Christ-Tales' which I received several weeks ago, I had not had time to examine until last Sunday evening, when I read some of them to my little girl, now in her seventh year. I merely want to tell you how beautiful they are. They seem to me, so far as I have examined them, quite a model in their way, employing the same imaginative faculty in the child as it is called upon to exercise in reading a fairy tale, yet to a better and more sacred purpose." THE BEST YET!

World's Fair Guides for Chicago and the Great Exposition are almost as numerous as the sands of the seashore, and many are excellent; but the one advertised by the great Dry Goods House of James H. Walker & Co., of this city, on page 13, of our last issue, is one that we cheerfully commend to our readers, on account of its authenticity, completeness and compactness. It is so convenient you can put it in your pocket or satchel without feeling that it is an encumbrance. Send for one.

WORLD'S FAIR NOTES.

Citizens of Chicago and the great northwest are all interestsd in our manufacturing industries. One of our most extensive and permanent manufacturers will make an exhibit in the musical department that will make old Eastern houses blush with envy. We allude to the matchless exhibit to be made by the Chicago Cottage Organ Company with their organs and the very justly celebrated CONOVER piano. These pianos are acknowledged by our most prominent and leading professional piano players to excel in elegance of tone, free action, quick, responsive touch, elegance of finish and durable qualities, and inferior to none and superior to most all other instruments made anywhere. We advise our readers to examine them at 215 Wabash Avenue.

No better book can be found for a birthday gift to little folks than "Lady Gay and Her Sister," a story of "real live" children just like those in your home. A new baby comes to the Gay house—Sally, by name—and she is, as Lady Gay says: "The very sweetest baby that ever lived." Price $1.

Published by WOMAN'S TEMP. PUB. ASS'N,
THE TEMPLE,
Chicago, Ill.

Under a special concession from the World's Fair authorities, Messrs. Walter Baker & Co., of Dorchester, Mass., the well-known Cocoa and Chocolate Manufacturers, have erected in a conspicuous position on the Fair Ground at Chicago, the building shown in the accompanying cut. It was designed by Messrs. Carrère & Hastings, of New York, the architects of the Ponce de Leon at St. Augustine, and of many of the finest buildings in New York.

For the reason that the surrounding buildings at the Fair are so very large, and so classical and symmetrical in plan and character, it was thought best to adopt for Walter Baker & Co's Pavilion a style of architecture showing a good deal of detail, making this detail of a character so interesting as to attract attention, and so light and gay as to clearly express its purpose as a place of exhibit.

Two main entrances through arched vestibules lead from the ground floor into a large hall to be used as a café, in which Breakfast Cocoa will be served by young ladies dressed in the costume of Liotard's "La Belle Chocolatière." Small tables and chairs will be provided for the convenience of guests.

Hot and cold chocolate soda will also be served from counters in this room. The great variety of Cocoa and Chocolate preparations manufactured by Walter Baker & Co. will be exhibited in handsome show cases made expressly for the purpose.

A broad and monumental flight of stairs, forming one of the principal motifs of the composition, will lead to the second story, part of which will be enclosed, forming another café, which will be served through dumb-waiters from the downstairs department, and part of which is arranged in terraces, covered with awnings, to be used in connection with the café. A private office for the managers of the exhibit is also provided on this floor.

Special study has been made of the lighting of this building in the evening, so as to make it as attractive, gay, and bright as it will appear during the day.

The Cocoa and Chocolate Manufacturing Establishment of WALTER BAKER & COMPANY, at Dorchester, Mass., is not only the oldest, but the largest of its kind on this continent. The mills belonging to this house are situated on the Neponset River, partly in the Dorchester district of Boston and partly in the town of Milton. The plant comprises five large mills (having a floor space of about 315,000 square feet, over seven acres), equipped with all the latest and most improved machinery. The full strength and the exquisite natural flavor of the raw materials are preserved, unimpaired, in all of Walter Baker & Company's preparations, so that their products may be truly said to form THE STANDARD FOR PURITY AND EXCELLENCE.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY OF THE PRESBYTERIAN CHURCH.

Those attending the General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church at Washington, D. C., May 17th to June 2d, can see more of this country, can view the most picturesque scenery in America, and, if traveling from the West to the East, can cross the Alleghany Mountains, 2,000 feet above the sea level, and can traverse the historic Potomac Valley, which was the theater of the war between the states, by traveling via the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad. This company operates vestibuled express trains to Washington from Chicago, St. Louis, Cincinnati, Cleveland and Pittsburg in the West, and from New York, Philadelphia, Wilmington and Baltimore in the East. All express trains of the Baltimore and Ohio Company run via Washington, and carry Pullman sleeping and parlor cars. The rate to the General Assembly will be a fare and a third for the round trip on the certificate plan. For more detailed information as to rates, time of trains, and sleeping-car accommodations, apply to Chas. O. Scull, General Passenger Agent, Baltimore, Md.; L. S. U's, and other organizations, who have writing to do, can use the Edison Mimeograph for communication with their members and others, where a number—few or many—of copies of the same letter, notice or circular of any kind is needed. It is cheap, clean and simple, and can be operated by any one.

We use one here in our general office, and find it indispensable. We can run off 1,000 letters an hour easily. It is manufactured by the A. B. Dick Co. of Chicago, New York and Philadelphia, and can be purchased of stationers and typewriter agents anywhere.

STILL another society with a long name. S. U. P. A., which being interpreted is Society for United Prayer for Animals, which has for its immediate object the suppression of vivisection. It already numbers over one thousand members, among them two prominent English physicians.

HOWELLS, the American novelist, is often criticized for his portrayal of women and gives as his excuse that he is waiting for the Almighty to make grand, noble and perfect women. While he believes women to be far superior to men, he is sure that the portrayal of ideal characters is mischievous in its results.

A REPUBLICAN paper, of Boston, asks the question, "What effective temperance legislation stands to-day in the Massachusetts statutes as the work of Republican legislators? We answer, practically none!" And still it is insisted upon that whatever temperance legislation has been enacted has been through the grand old party.

A LITTLE girl in Manchester, England, attended a Band of Hope meeting and when the speaker said that the drink stripped home of furniture, and women and children of clothes, she exclaimed, "That's what it does at my home." The next time she was sent to the public house for drink she asked for three pennyworth of "stripped homes."

THE demand for schools to educate the children of Christians in India is so great that the Methodist conferences there have recommended that no more schools for Hindus and Mohammedans be opened for the present. Five hundred Christian children educated for Christian work would do a vast amount of missionary work in the future.

JOHN RUSKIN has never been ranked among the so-called "temperance fanatics," but few have ever used stronger language than he in the following: "Drunkenness is not only the cause of crime, but it is crime; and if any encourage drunkenness for the sake of the profit derived from the sale of drink, they are guilty of a form of moral assassination as criminal as any that has been practiced by the bravos of any country or any age."

AN interesting village is that of Fort Mardyck, near Dunkirk, where, since the year 1670 a syndicate has been in existence and where, as a birthright, an equal share of land is conferred on each inhabitant. The village numbers 1,706 inhabitants. They have no paupers and have never cost the state one cent, even building their own public schools by subscription. It would be interesting to know their attitude on the liquor question.

AN English paper commenting on the recent action of the Indian Decennial Missionary Conference in Bombay, when the resolutions condemning the trade in liquor and opium, as well as state regulation of vice, were withdrawn, says: "Never in our gloomiest moments have we hitherto believed that the influence of corrupt Anglo-Indian society could go so far as to be able to silence the representatives of Jesus Christ in the presence of gigantic moral evils."

A SALOON-KEEPER'S journal, in an editorial, gives voice to good prohibition doctrine. It objects to the sale of a villainous compound, which it calls burning fluid, demands that its sale be stopped and tramples on all the "personal rights" doctrines. It says: "No man engaged in the remotest degree in such a traffic in the ruination of his fellow humans of men and women has the right to any consideration, either legal or moral. They should be side-tracked, where they can do no harm, or railroaded to safe places behind the bars of our penal institutions. The brave, honest dealers of New York should take the matter into their own hands, and stamp out this crime against themselves."

Rheumatism, in Five Sentences.

Rheumatism is now recognized as a disease that is caused by disordered blood.

It cannot, therefore, be permanently cured by local applications, any more than the water supply of a city can be improved by work done on a yard hydrant.

In the name of the general quadrennial conference of the United Brethren in session at Dayton, O., May 12, a message was sent to the President protesting against Sunday opening of the World's Fair and requesting that the United States Attorney General secure an injunction to prevent the violation of the law.

Despite protests, petitions, congressional laws and all the efforts brought to bear upon them for the preservation of the Sabbath day, the World's Fair directory in its meeting, May 12, passed an order to throw the Exposition grounds open to the public, at an admission fee of twenty-five cents, the exhibits proper only to be closed.

IN reply to many inquiries we are pleased to announce that the Woman's Dormitory of Chicago is finished and running in good shape, with four hundred guests during the past week. One thousand are registered for June.

MR. DWIGHT L. MOODY will have the superintendence of the Willard Hall noon meetings, beginning with Thursday of this week. He will be assisted by well known English and American evangelists and the Oberlin College quartette. Doubtless the beautiful little auditorium will be crowded and many souls saved.

MISSIONARIES have been most efficient helpers in securing signatures to the Great Petition. Mrs. Bridgman, of Natal, South Africa, has secured many signatures, native and English, and through Mrs. Hepburn, has obtained those of the Christianized chief, Khama, of his wife, three grown daughters and a number of his leading men. His town, Palapye, is on the borders of Matchulilands. For many years Chief Khama has valiantly withstood the entrance into his kingdom of every form of liquor, sometimes forcibly expelling the white traders therein.

MISS GORDON cannot make use of any more children's pledge cards, as the exhibit at the Exposition is now finished and all the space filled. Says one who knows: "Bless the children's hearts, Rest Cottage is filled with pledge cards and we know not what to do with them."

A MEMBER of the Chicago liquor fraternity is authority for the statement that the sale of liquor in the saloons of this city was more than quadrupled last Sunday. And yet the newspapers bewailed the fact that tens of thousands of people hung around the closed gates of the Fair all day or wandered into the theatres and side shows of the immediate vicinity!

IMMEDIATELY following the Women's Congresses, the Press Congress will convene for a week, the last three days being devoted to the religious press. THE UNION SIGNAL will be represented at this congress, so we naturally feel a particular interest in these three days—May 26, 27 and 28. While we have not seen a completed program, we are confident from the make-up of the program committee, with Dr. Simeon Gilbert, editor of The Advance, as chairman, that profitable exercises may be expected.

ONE of the most permanent and beneficial results of Miss West's visit to Japan is the organization of a National Japanese W. C. T. U. which was effected in Tokio, April 3. Five out of the thirty-five unions have already joined this new national union, and it is hoped that all will unite when the object is better understood. The departments of organization, education, reformation, health, literature and law were adopted and the meeting was conducted in the most approved style, with the reading of the Crusade psalm, prayer, and singing of gospel hymns. Mrs. Kaji Tajima is president and Mrs. Sho Nemoto, corresponding secretary. The headquarters are 33 Kaminiban street, Tokio. THE UNION SIGNAL welcomes this new world's auxiliary and opens its columns to a report of its work.

BY an inadvertence we have not previously noticed the charges made against the officers of the Iowa State Temperance Alliance and the report of the committee appointed to investigate these charges. This report is now printed, and fully exonerates the officers, declaring that the "charges are false, groundless and malicious, and were fabricated for the purpose of influencing votes." As a consequence of this malicious attack, temperance people have suspended their contributions, and the Alliance finds itself in debt. Now that all suspicions are removed, friends of the cause should rally around the treasury and supply it with the indispensable means of warfare. Prohibition has made Iowa one of the leading commonwealths of America, and the Alliance is one of the strongest friends of the prohibitory law.

PERSECUTION is never an unmixed evil and frequently it is a disguised blessing. Such we verily believe will be the legitimate consequence of the atrocious attempt, by the use of dynamite, to wreck three beautiful homes and destroy fifteen valuable lives in Muscatine, Ia., last Thursday, May 11, because the heads of these homes were outspoken in their demands for the closing of the saloons, according to the statutes of the state and municipality. That not one of the fifteen lives was destroyed is proof of a Providential care, for the houses were completely ruined, their contents being thrown into the cellar and walls contorted into awful shape. Not one of these men, whose lives were thus thrown into jeopardy, was a "third party Prohibitionist," but merely seeking to enforce the laws of his commonwealth. If for no higher motive than that of personal safety, is it not time that citizens were aroused to the malevolence of the liquor traffic? To arms! ye lovers of law and order.

MANY interesting incidents are connected with the history and signing of the Petition. The first organized effort in regard to a world-signed petition was in August, 1885, when the general officers of the National W. C. T. U. forwarded to their missionary-at-large, Mrs. Leavitt, then in a foreign land, the form of petition substantially as it reads at present. This was also presented by Mrs. Mary B. Willard, Sept. 12, 1885, to the International Temperance Convention then assembled in Brussels, Belgium. It has since been circulated around the globe, and its millions of signatures are written in the characters of forty languages. Many of these signatures have been obtained by invalids, and women past sixty years of age. Sometimes there is appended to a name a touching or stirring comment. "Homeless through drink," "Heartbroken because of this traffic," "Ruined in heart and home and hope." Especially is it the petition of the poor and lowly and the tears and agony it embodies rise up like a mighty cry which enters into the ears of the Lord God of Sabaoth.

THE Chicago Directory last Friday decided to open the World's Fair on Sundays, beginning May 21. The vote stood twenty-two for and seven against opening. The action was based upon the opinion of the directors' attorney, Edwin Walker, who, Portia like, decided that the act of Congress, conditioning the gift of $2,500,000 upon the closing of the gates on Sunday, referred to the exhibits inside the buildings, and not to the grounds and state buildings. Accordingly the decree has gone forth that the grounds surrounding the buildings will be open to the public, Sunday, for the sum of twenty-five cents. This act is not surprising to those familiar with the covetousness of the local directory, but friends of fairness and honor, not to speak of Sabbath observance, now look to the National Commission to veto this action and carry out in spirit as well as letter the edict of our highest lawmaking body—United States Congress. This act is a mere subterfuge and is destined to be the entering wedge to a complete opening of exhibits and a reckless disregard of congressional authority and the purest public sentiment. Will Christians submit tamely? We prophesy otherwise.

THE state committee of the New York Prohibition party, representing forty thousand voters, has memorialized the Hon. Daniel S. Lamont, Secretary of War, on the subject of the sale of liquors at the post-exchanges of the army. After quoting the opinions of such men as Major-General O. O. Howard, Paymaster-General Smith and General T. J. Morgan, the protest says: "There have been, in the army journals and generally in the daily papers, complaints about the deterioration of the army both in quantity and in quality. There is a disposition to attribute it to the privilege accorded the soldiers to purchase their discharge, by reason of which, it is stated, 'the withdrawals from the service amount to more than the enlistments,' and 'to more than the worst record of desertions with which the army has ever been confronted.' If the best men in the ranks are purchasing their discharge in such numbers, may it not be, in large part, because of the intolerable conditions created by the present operation of the post-exchange, in which drunken rows and murderous assaults are frequent, especially just after pay-day? The moral condition of the army is bringing forth earnest and frequent protests from the press. As the condition becomes better known to the public the difficulty of securing a desirable class of recruits will grow greater. Chaplains in the army have received notice to make no complaints concerning these matters to headquarters, but the real results of the canteen cannot be concealed much longer. The efficiency of the army is being seriously impaired, its future standing jeopardized and public sentiment outraged. We appeal to you to remove the cause by ordering the sales of liquor at the post-exchanges discontinued."

I AM BUT ONE.

BY MRS. EMILY P. WILLIAMS.

"I am but one; but I am one.
Not all things can I do,
Yet some things I can do,
And what I can, I know
I truly ought to do,
And by the help of God
These things I will to do."

A lonely cabin in the wood
In perfect desolation stood.
No footprint on the sill or hearth,
To mark it as the place of birth
Of human joy, or human woe,
As on the silent moments go.

But on the rough-hewn walls were found,
In letters legible and round,
The quoted words above. The hand
Of one afar from native land,
Had lightly traced, and left them there—
It may have been with faith and prayer.

It must have been a noble mind
Found here a refuge from mankind.
When, crossed in high ambition's aim,
Dark disappointment to him came.
But rest in nature's solitude
Brought to his soul its needed food.

And if the wrongs of earth e'er cease,
If ever comes the reign of peace,
'Twill be because each soul will say,
"I will do what I can and may."
Nor waste the grand, God-given powers
In vain regrets, through idle hours.

Appleton City, Mo.

A BUNCH OF ARBUTUS.

BY ALICE PERRY.

"Wouldn't you like to buy this sweet pea basket, Miss Janet?"

Pretty Greta Hollis was the speaker, and she invitingly balanced on one outstretched forefinger the daintiest of May baskets, woven of pale green and coral pink crêpe paper, with a handful of sweet peas, almost natural enough to smell, fastened on one side.

"Humph! Buy it! I should think not!" ejaculated Miss Janet, turning her back on the table of crêpe paper novelties, and stalking over to the other side of the hall, where more substantial articles of the same class were for sale, in the shape of clothes and market baskets, with a liberal sprinkling of fancy shapes in bright colored, sweet grass. These last, however, Miss Janet tossed aside with a contemptuous sniff. She tossed aside all sweet and pretty things that crossed her pathway with the same scornful demonstration. Finally she selected and paid for the strongest and ugliest market basket she could find, and marched out of the hall with it, ruthlessly scattering the happy little boys and girls skipping round the flower-wreathed May pole, and closed the door after her with a resounding bang.

"Cross old thing! I'm glad she's gone," muttered injured Greta, prinking up the sweet pea petals that Miss Janet's ruthless clutch had well-nigh demolished. "What did she come to our Basket Bazaar for, anyway? Nobody wanted her, I am sure."

"Greta! Greta, my dear," said Miss Marbury, her Sunday-school teacher, stroking the flushed cheek with a gentle gesture of reproof.

"Then why does Miss Janet act so?" continued Greta excitedly. "She won't let anybody be friends with her, and she came here to-night just to pick our poor little bazaar to pieces. She said the ice cream was as gritty as sand, the cake heavy as lead, the lemonade sour as vinegar—"

"Or herself, she should have remarked," broke in Sue Ryder, with a merry laugh, joining the group around the May basket booth, in which the others joined.

"Never mind, Greta," said she, putting her arm affectionately around her friend's waist, "Miss Janet is just so to everybody. I never heard her make a remark that did not begin or end with a 'pshaw!'"

"What kind of a girl must she have been?" inquired Ada Mellen, thrusting her roguish face into their midst. "How did she ever happen to be named Flower? Janet is just like her—short and snappy—but Flower! I wonder if she ever smelled one," and plucking an imaginary blossom, Ada cautiously approached to her turned-up nose, then straightway propelled it an arm's length away from that disgusted feature, with an explosive "pooh!"

"Do you suppose she ever hung a May basket, girls?"

Such a shout of laughter greeted this performance and subsequent supposition, that the young people on the other side of the hall flocked with wondering smiles in the direction of Greta Hollis' booth to discover what the joke could be.

"Imagine Miss Janet running," gasped Greta, holding her sides in an ecstasy of mirth.

"Climbing fences," put in Ada.

"Dodging behind stone walls," added Sue Ryder. "Oh! ho! ho!"

Even Miss Marbury could not repress a fleeting smile at the comical image conjured up by the girls' remarks, but it was quickly replaced with a glance full of pain.

"She needn't be so cross," began one of the dissenting voices again.

"Sh! Emma, we've said enough," declared one of the others, and the unpleasant subject was dropped.

Eleanor Lindsay, out of all the others, had remained silent during this discussion. Eleanor never talked much, but there was very little her quiet blue eyes failed to see. They saw a soft look creep into Miss Janet's hard, gray ones, as they alighted on a tiny bunch of arbutus, skillfully fashioned from pink and white paper, nestling on the handle of a pure white basket. She saw Miss Janet's long, knotty fingers fumble involuntarily in the pocket of her dress when Greta's innocently-meant query seemed to break the spell, and the old woman answered even more gruffly than her wont.

"Crusty Janet," as she was known to the town folk far and near, had lived in a little brown cottage under the hill all her sixty-five years of existence. She had seen most of her neighbors move away to other and more flourishing townships, till hardly one remained who remembered anything about her early life. Her father and mother had died when she was a young girl and there had been a little crippled sister named Mary. That was all people knew or cared to know about her, for she met all kind advances with the same repellant diffidence exhibited towards old and young alike. Latterly, people had remarked that Miss Janet was growing old fast. Rheumatism had bowed her once tall, erect figure and given her a painful limp. It was too funny to the thoughtless girls, the imaginary spectacle of Miss Janet hanging a May basket, though she had really often done such a thing in her nimble-footed youth.

Less than a quarter of a mile away from the foot of the hill, where stood the brown cottage, lay the village cemetery, white in May time with the snow of drifting blossom petals from orchards on either side.

It happened that Eleanor Lindsay had an errand at the cemetery one bright May afternoon, not long after the Basket Bazaar. The child of a poor woman had died a few days previous, and been laid to rest in the old part of the cemetery, where few people went. Eleanor had a nosegay of field violets to put on the new-made grave, and carefully picked her way among half-forgotten mounds in search of it. Suddenly a low moaning sound reached her ear from a neighboring lot thickly hedged with evergreen, startling her so that she paused involuntarily to listen.

"Little May!—little May!" a choked, harsh voice, softened to infinite tenderness, was repeating over and over. "Do you miss your posy, my darlin'? The woods have got too fur away for poor, lame, old Jinny to get there any longer. It's the fust May-time I've ever missed it sence you was laid away, my baby,—the fust time—the fust—time—" and the broken voice died away in a few long drawn sobs that were quickly hushed into silence.

Eleanor shrank hastily back into the shadow of a clump of trees, a moment later, as a tall, stooping form came slowly out at the narrow inclosure, and limped past, so near she could have touched it with her outstretched hand. It was Miss Janet. When she had gone out of sight, Eleanor timidly ventured within the inclosure, to find two moss-grown tombstones, bearing the names of Miss Janet's father and mother, and, at the foot of a white lilac shrub, a small marble slab upon which was simply inscribed, "Mary Flower: Aged 11 Years." The little mound was completely covered from sight with a great branch of beautiful pink and white apple blooms freshly plucked.

It told a story of its own to Eleanor. She stood there looking at it a long time, then she went home, and, filling a slender glass vase with the sweetest clusters of arbutus she could find among those gathered the day before, carried it back to the cemetery and left it beneath the white lilac, not without sundry secret misgivings.

A few days later she ventured to that part of the burial ground again with a fresh cluster of flowers, and was encouraged to find her tiny vase and its contents undisturbed. As she refilled it with water and arranged her blossoms within, a low, sullen voice suddenly asked, "What be you a-doin' that fur?" and Eleanor looked up with a start, to behold Miss Janet standing a few feet away from her, her heavy brows drawn together in an angry frown of resentment.

Eleanor's clear blue eyes did not waver nor her voice tremble, as she answered gently: "For Jesus' sake—and yours—Miss Janet."

The grim features worked painfully for a long moment or two of silence; then Miss Janet reached forward and caught hold of Eleanor's hand.

"You come home with me," she said shortly and led the way across the meadow path whence she had come, with Eleanor following in the rear. When they entered the brown cottage, Miss Janet produced a key and fitting it in the lock of a sunny south room with shaking fingers, pushed the door wide open. It contained a little bed covered with smooth fair drapery, an invalid's chair, bright pictures on the walls, flowers blooming on the window ledge, and books and games on the round table near the bed.

"I had a little sister once," said she, stroking the white counterpane with tender fingers. "That was her grave you see up in the buryin' ground, yonder. She set a heap by all kinds of flowers, but she loved May flowers the best of any, though she couldn't go arter 'em with her twisted leg. I used to go an' git 'em fur her every spring. Arter she died, I went and got 'em just the same an' put 'em over her, till this spring I couldn't git there—I tried to but I couldn't, an' you—" Miss Janet suddenly dropped on her knees by the little white bed and hid her face in the pillows. Sobs shook the bent shoulders, so full of agony, and Eleanor softly stroked the gray hair above the wrinkled forehead, but uttered not a word.

"I ain't makin' no excuse fur myself," halted the broken voice. "I'm a miserable, wicked, old woman, despised by everybody. I've hardened my heart ag'in my Lord and Saviour all my life because He took away my little May and left me all alone. I wouldn't hearken to Him when He called, but now He's spoke to me through them little posies o' your'n, an' told me poor, cross, old Janet Flower ain't cast out o' His love and forgiveness yet, though she be out o' everybody's else."

Her voice ceased, and her gray head sank lower on the pillow she had clasped in both arms.

Eleanor trod softly across the cottage floor, and stealing out into the spring twilight, closed the door behind her, leaving Miss Janet alone and uncared for no longer.

The next Sabbath morning great was the amazement of the congregation gathered in church to behold Miss Janet sitting in the corner of one of the side pews, clad in a quiet gray gown, shawl and bonnet, with a soft white ruche resting against the silvery hair beneath. The old, hard look had forsaken her really fine features, and a placid one of deep rejoicing reigned there instead.

"Is the world coming to an end,—or Miss Janet?" whispered Ada Mellen nudging Greta Hollis, with a half-ashamed giggle.

"Hush, Ada!" answered Greta. "Don't you see how happy the poor old soul looks?"

There were no giggles that afternoon, and tears glistened in many a thoughtless eye, when, at the Y meeting, Eleanor told her young friends the story of the tiny bunch of arbutus, and the miracle it had wrought.

"We can never tell how far a good deed of ours will reach," said Miss Marbury, her kind face beaming with joy, "when even a little flower, in our hands, may become a missionary."

WHAT IS THE RELATION OF THE W. C. T. U. TO THE CHURCH?

BY KATHARINE LENTE STEVENSON.

A short time ago one of our most valued Massachusetts workers was asked by a clergyman why she did not "give to God" the time she was giving to the Woman's Christian Temperance Union. Upon her quiet suggestion that she considered she was doing just that in giving time to the W. C. T. U., the answer came—"Impossible; there is no avenue for growth in grace except through the church."

This somewhat high-churchly sentiment—though uttered by a follower of John Wesley and not, as might be supposed, by an archbishop, coupled with the remark we not infrequently hear from clerical lips when pressing the claims of our organization, "there are so many societies; they take all the time, strength and money of my people; they have nothing left for church work," has caused me to wonder, whether in reality or in seeming, the work of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union stands as opposed to "church work." If it does so in reality it is a most serious charge against our organization, and an argument not easily met why it should no longer exist. For, whatever may be our individual opinion as to the manner in which the church has fulfilled its mission in the past, or is fulfilling it to-day, there can be no question that to the church belongs the highest and holiest of missions; therefore, whatever hinders her in its performance, whether by interposing direct obstacles, or weakening her force, should meet with reprobation rather than encouragement and support from all true friends of the church of Christ. But, if this opposition exists in seeming only, then it is time the apparent antagonism was removed, and the real relation between the church and the W. C. T. U. made manifest.

It is undoubtedly true that the multiplication of societies is a thing to be deprecated. It is undoubtedly true that there are many societies which hinder the church in its highest workings—societies organized for an obviously trivial end,—but it is also true that there are societies which prove the most powerful of allies to the church in all its aggressive movements, without the coöperation of which the church of to-day feels that it cannot do its best and highest work. In proof of this assertion witness the cordial welcome the church is according to missionary societies, to the Y. P. S. C. E., the Epworth League, King's Daughters, etc.

But is the Woman's Christian Temperance Union such an ally? Most heartily do we of the white-ribbon army believe that it is. So far from its existence in any community jeopardizing the work of the church, we believe that it is a necessary factor to the highest efficiency of any church. So far from being a something apart from the church, opposed to the church, it is the vital principle of the church itself, brought to its highest potentiality.

And this brings us to two questions:

1. What is the work of the church?

2. What is the work of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union?

What is "church work"? The Master, the great founder of the church, said to His disciples: "The works that I do shall ye do also." What were those works? The angel who foretold His birth declared: "Thou shalt call his name Jesus, for he shall save his people from their sins." When He began His public ministry and declared in that synagogue of Nazareth: "To-day hath this scripture been fulfilled in your ears," what were the words to which He referred? What, indeed, but those clarion-like utterances of Isaiah? "The Spirit of the Lord is upon me, because he hath anointed me to preach the gospel to the poor; He hath sent me to heal the broken-hearted, to preach deliverance to the captives and recovering of sight to the blind, to set at liberty them that are bruised, to preach the acceptable year of the Lord."

Did ever the founder of a new régime set before himself a more comprehensive program, or one that involved more absolute destruction of existing forms, before he could hope to compass the construction of new?—opening of prison doors to the captive; giving of sight to the blind and liberty to the bruised; bearing good tidings to the poor, and, if we turn back to Isaiah for the full text, we find it carries with it also the binding up of the broken-hearted, the comforting of all who mourn, the giving of "beauty for ashes, the oil of joy for mourning and the garment of praise for the spirit of heaviness."

We, in this age of the world, looking at this declaration, see how absolutely impossible it would be for us to carry such a program into full effect without striking at the very foundations of many of the most cherished structures of our social and political life. How must it have seemed in a society eighteen hundred years ago, where not a ray of the Christ principle had as yet shone? How it seemed let the priests and the pharisees, by their treatment of Him, answer. They knew that the program of His kingdom meant the absolute subversion of their own, and therefore they hated Him. Not because He claimed to be king of the Jews—they would have flocked to a king like Cæsar who should have borne the Jewish standard—but because He was such a king in such a kingdom—a kingdom whose absolute righteousness could mean only the overthrow of their own unrighteousness.

And yet men tell us to-day that "Jesus Christ was a Saviour and not a reformer"; and, in the calm repetition of this statement, they seem to consider that they have effectually settled the claims of all reform work. A Saviour and not a reformer! Can the terms, in their truest meaning, be divorced? What made Him a Saviour? Because He saved. From what? "Thou shalt call his name Jesus, for he shall save his people from their sins." How? By a twofold operation; through putting a new life-principle into the heart, and then causing that life-principle to work out through the destruction of all the old death-dealing systems.

A Saviour and not a reformer! One must blot out from the record of Christ's life all mention of that visit to the temple, when, with a whip of small cords, he drove out the buyers and sellers; one must forget the many times when, face to face with the pharisees and the priests, He denounced their self-righteousness and hypocrisy, calling them "whited sepulchers" and "blind leaders of the blind"; one must forget the heroic zeal with which He overthrew their own petty interpretations of the divine word and the divine purpose; one must forget the blow He struck at that most cherished Jewish institution when He declared: "The Son of Man is Lord, even of the Sabbath day"; aye, and one must close one's eyes to the record of the Christ-spirit in all the ages since, if he is to believe that Jesus Christ was a Saviour and not also a reformer. He was a reformer because He was a Saviour, but He was a Saviour "to the uttermost," because He was to the uttermost a reformer, one in whose hands the axe was always "laid at the root of the tree."

Granted that in the ages since the two characters have not always been combined in the one personality. There have been many reformers who have lacked the vital life-principle, and there have been many more Christians who have emphasized the necessity of eternal life in the individual soul, and have, nevertheless, failed to see that the logical outgrowth of that eternal life must be the destruction of all evil, everywhere. There have been Boanerges, who tore down where they could not build up, and there have been rapt saints, so lost in the contemplation of the heavenly Jerusalem, that they have failed to see that the first business of a Christ-follower is to make this earth ready for the descent of that city. But the ideal is still the Master, who tore down only that He might build up, but who never for one moment questioned that the tearing down was as much the Divine province as the building up.

Oh, if but His church, through all the ages, had literally "followed" Him what sad anomalies, what hideous contradictions we should be spared the sight of to-day! The church and slavery side by side! The church and the saloon side by side! The church and social impurity side by side! The church and political corruption side by side! The church and poverty; the church and misery; the church and wrong; the church and oppression; the church and greed of gain; the church and monopolies; the church and red-throated war; the church and the subjection of the weak to the strong. How one's soul sickens at the record! Do we not recognize in each, and in countless other things tolerated as necessary evils in the world to-day, the implacable foes of the Church of Christ, and is it not directly contrary to the Divine purpose that the lion and the lamb should thus lie down in peace together, the lion still the ravening beast of prey, and the lamb only escaping its fate as his victim, through a meek acknowledgment of his necessary supremacy, not as "king of beasts," but as king, in the sense of having superior power, of the children of the Heavenly King?

Or when a church is found, which ventures to deny, in word and deed, this necessary supremacy of evil over good, is it not met with a wail of horror over its degeneracy and a repetition of the old, threadbare assertion that "Jesus Christ was a Saviour and not a reformer"?

Not long since I clipped the following from the columns of The Wine and Spirit Gazette:

"These blatherskite preachers are noticeably men of one idea. They are wrapped up in the sacredness of the Sabbath, the evils of rum drinking or some other hobby, radically distinct from, or but distantly related to the legitimate work of the pulpit—the preaching of the gospel. These pulpit shriekers make religion a farce in the eyes of the irreligious, by representing it as something concerning men's lives and habits and pursuits."

Somehow the Master seemed to have an idea that religion was a "something concerning men's lives and habits and pursuits"; but it must be extremely gratifying to the constituency of The Wine and Spirit Gazette that comparatively few of His followers agree with their Lord in this view of Christianity.

The "work of the church"? Whatever affects humanity for weal or for woe is the work of the Christian church. Whatever hinders the coming of that day when "the earth shall be filled with the knowledge of the Lord as the waters cover the sea" is the work of the church to remove. Whatever helps any human being towards goodness, towards purity, towards uprightness, towards happiness, that is the work of the church. Nothing is too trivial for its work. Nothing can be too great. There is no avenue through which it must not work. It cannot claim a monopoly of the prayer-meeting to the exclusion of the ballot box. Its mission is not alone to sing God's praises, nor to raise the individual soul to an ecstasy of devotion and introspection, but to bring about such life-conditions as shall make it possible for universal humanity to live God's praises in upright, happy lives. Its ideal accomplishment is nothing less than absolute conformity, in inward spirit and in outward life, to the "image of the Son."

Now what is the work of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union? Its name in part answers the question, but its record gives a fuller revelation. It is the identical work which Christ left to His church. Seeing the world a prisoner in the bonds of sin, it seeks to break the chain; recognizing that there are everywhere blind eyes, it seeks to carry to them sight; with a heart aching for those who have been bruised by sin, it hastens to carry to them healing. It sees that the beauty of holy living can alone replace the ashes of the unholy; that the oil of joy is the only cure for mourning, and the garment of praise can alone displace the spirit of heaviness. It realizes that the one need of humanity is to know God, but it likewise recognizes that, before such knowledge can be perfected, there must be taken out of the way "whatsoever worketh abomination." It believes in the experience of the "indwelling Christ," but it believes equally in the experience of the out-reaching Christ—the Christ whose spirit inspires His followers to make straight paths for other's feet, "lest that which is lame be turned out of the way."

Not only to make the individual man good, but to bring about conditions which shall make it possible for the largest number of men both to become good and to continue so, this is the work of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union.

To this end its forty-three departments were born; to this end it has adopted the "do-everything policy"; to this end, wherever it sees a wrong, whether enthroned in law, as the liquor traffic; or in a perverted nature, as social impurity; or in selfishness, as oppression and monopoly; wherever it finds wrong of any kind, it recognizes its own implacable foe and is in turn thus recognized. Because of its fearlessness, because of its breadth of purpose, because of its determination to hasten that day when God's kingdom shall come and His will be done in earth as it is in heaven, therefore is it the natural ally of the Church of Christ.

Its ally? It is the church itself. Where does there exist a dividing line? Why should there be the slightest feeling of difference? Who are the members of the W. C. T. U.? In ninety-nine cases out of each hundred they are members and for the greater part active members of some one of the many branches of the Christian church. "Why, then, do we need an individual existence and a separate organization?" Why do we need the Sunday-school? Why missionary societies? Why the Christian Endeavor? "But these are branches of the church," you say? So is the Woman's Christian Temperance Union. It is a part of the great whole, but a part which has its own special province as truly as any of these enumerated, and which believes its recognition as an individual part to be essential to its best working. It is composed of the chosen few from all churches who have been baptized into a knowledge of the world's needs and a longing to consecrate themselves to the meeting of those needs through the surrender of self and ease, and life itself, if need be.

When there is an antagonism between the heart and the hand, between the will that moves and the organ which responds to its power, then there can be a genuine antagonism between the church and the W. C. T. U. It is true, if one means by "the church" his individual forty-foot lot in the great city of God, he may find decided proof of this antagonism. Our organization is too great to be contained by any one denomination, nor can it consent to subordinate the universal to the individual, the greater to the less. But, if a man be himself broad enough to grasp any true conception of the scope of the kingdom of heaven, then must he recognize the Woman's Christian Temperance Union as a vital part of that kingdom, and rejoice in that it is so gloriously aiding in hastening its universal dawning. Then must he recognize it as an integral part of the larger "Church of God"; and not only cease to repudiate it as the foe to that church, but welcome its entrance into every community, as another and a mighty link in the great chain of agencies through which this world is, some day, to be won to righteousness. My brother, my sister, followers with us of the Lord Jesus help, not hinder, these women who "labor with you" in "the glorious gospel of the blessed God."

A WINTER'S PURITY CAMPAIGN IN INDIA.

BY ELIZABETH WHEELER ANDREW.

(Concluded.)

One woman in a Lock Hospital visited by us told the following in a most simple, yet eloquent manner: "Some time ago a lady in Calcutta saw a woman weeping, and there were others going with her to the Hospital. The lady asked her why she wept. She said she had to go to the Hospital to be inspected and she dreaded it, for the doctor was very cruel. The lady could not understand her, so she explained to her how they were exposed. She took the native woman home with her and questioned her closely, and she told her all the painful details.

"The lady said: 'This ought not to be,' and promised that she would do all she could for them. Then she went home to England and talked to the queen and she talked with wonderful power on behalf of the poor women of India. She said to the queen that she (the queen) was a woman, and these were women, and their shame was the queen's shame; and for them to be exposed was as though she (the queen) were exposed; that it was a shame for women to be so treated when a woman was queen. Then the queen ordered that this should stop; but the officers do these things now." The other women agreed to all she said. The confidence of all the women, wherever we talked with them, in the queen's regard for them in this matter was most touching.

They asked if we were like that lady in Calcutta, going to try to do something to help them. They said no missionaries had ever come to them before. We told them we would pray and work that help might come to them, and homes be furnished for them, so that they could leave and go to a good life whenever they should choose to do this. Then we asked how they thought we could help them, and they exclaimed, "Is it not enough that you pray for us, and will do all you can to get homes provided for us?" They blessed and thanked us over and over. We told them we looked upon them as our sisters; they answered, "We are your slaves." Our interpreter sang, and the poor women wept, several sobbing aloud. When she finished, one of the daughters made a most solemn oath that she would give up her life of shame, adding: "Four months ago I told my mother I must give it up." The old mother sobbed aloud while her daughter was talking. The latter went on, "If death comes while I am in this life, I could not appear before my God; so that I am resolved to give it up."

We called at this same house the next morning. The girl who had taken the solemn vow the day before met us with a sad face, but they all welcomed us earnestly. They said they had been unable to sleep during the night, because they were thinking and talking of us, and that they were sure that God had sent us to tell them of our religion; we told them that we, too, were awake at midnight talking of and praying for them. They poured out blessings upon us, clasping their hands together in prayer, and the old mother cried out: "I am a sinner! I am a sinner!" confessing with broken words and tears that she had led a life of shame for twenty-five years, and they all, as with one voice, begged us to pray for them. The daughter who had been most deeply moved the day before, now came forward and half knelt beside me, taking my hand and whispering a request. Our interpreter said, "Put your hand on her head; she wants your blessing." I did so, and the tears streamed down her face as I implored the Lord Jesus to deliver her from the power of sin, and from her awful surroundings. The other two looked so sad and pleading that I prayed for them in like manner. The poor old mother humbled herself to the earth, laying her aged hands on my feet, and crying bitterly while I prayed for her. Then we took their names carefully, that we might bear them before the throne daily, and promised them that we would not forget to do this.

Let me tell a few short histories out of the hundreds given us by the women in different places. One was married at eleven years of age; her husband died almost immediately; she remained three years in his family, then she was so utterly miserable that she ran away and wandered in the bazaar; was taken up by the police at fourteen, registered, and brought into a life of shame.

Another said her husband was beating her and she ran away when fourteen years old; was wandering in the bazaar and the policeman took her to the Lock Hospital; she was registered and has been with the soldiers ten years; (this girl was greatly emaciated, and suffered with a racking cough.) Another said her husband ran away and left her. A sahib (European) took her by force at eleven years of age and kept her. When he deserted her, her family would not receive her. She added that she was then "taken by the government." A Christian soldier told us that in former days if the native policemen saw young girls talking indiscreetly with any one on the street, even though it might be in perfect innocence and ignorance, they often declared them to be of bad character and arrested them. He said he had seen them many times brought thus into court, and then they were registered and delivered over into a life of shame. He exclaimed: "Poor little girls! Only twelve and thirteen years old."

A Hill girl told us that she belonged to a respectable family. Her father and mother both died and she was left a widow at eleven years of age. A wicked woman came and talked with her saying, "Your father and mother are dead, and now your husband also," and expressed deep sympathy for her. She told the girl it would do her good to travel and have a change of scene. She asked her to go with her, promising to show her beautiful cities and to pay all her expenses. The girl said: "But you are a Mohammedan and I am a Hindu; and how could we go together?" The woman replied: "That makes no difference, I will be as a mother to you." The girl still pleaded that she could not leave home and friends; but the woman said she would bring her back within a month. The poor, fluttering dove was caught, and this fiend in woman's form took her far away and sold her to an English commissioner, taking the money he gave and stealing her jewels. The officer dying soon after, she became an inmate of the regimental brothel. She had been in this life four years. She "did not know what she was coming to when brought away," she said, adding in an inexpressibly hopeless tone, "It is a bitter life." She remains to our thought one of the most innocent and deeply wronged of the many victims we saw during these months when we met and talked with them daily; and her delicate, beautiful face, so intensely sad, often passes before us in memory.

It has been argued by many advocates of the regulation of vice that a woman's whole nature was changed by her sinful life and that she had no sensitiveness in regard to the examinations, and no deep sense of the degradation of her position. We utterly deny this, on behalf of the scores of women with whom we have talked in India, whether of high or low caste, Hindu or Mohammedan, of whatever nationality, brought up in virtue and betrayed, or reared from infancy in vicious surroundings; we deny it, even in the cases of the dhais and mahaldarnis over them, whom avarice might blind or the ordinary routine of their duties in these positions might harden; yet when their womanly feelings were appealed to they always responded, and felt the shame with and for the women under their care.

In all our conversations with these poor degraded women there was shown the most remarkable patience in regard to the various material inconveniences which the regulations entailed upon them; the fire of their indignation and hatred all centered upon the heart of the regulations—the examinations, and the violation of womanhood, which these were felt to be. It is of no use that any one deny to us that these outcasts from society have deep feelings in regard to their wrongs and their shame; we have felt the beating of their aching hearts against our own; we have heard histories that throbbed with the strong agony of betrayed innocence, and have seen a hopeless woe in eyes that will haunt us forever.

A girl at Umballa spoke feelingly of our coming to them as an honor, saying that most European women would not speak to them, and that European men often forbade the women even to look at them. She also said that missionaries used to come to them at Cawnpore, and that, for days after their visits "her heart was so sore that it seemed as if it would burst."

At Benares a woman told us that some time before a missionary lady had begun visiting the chakla to try to help them, but she had been warned not to do it, as it would injure her influence as a missionary, so she had felt compelled to cease coming, and the women grieved that she could visit them no more.

A woman at Sitapur told us that on account of a famine a sepoy's daughter took her and reared her. The sepoy sold her when eleven years old to the mahaldarni to live in the chakla. He took the money; she did not know for how much she was sold. She said, with tears rolling down her face: "In all the years of my life, I have not known one day's happiness. My heart is full of wounds."

A group of women in the far north said, when speaking of the great hardship of being expelled from the cantonment: "What would we go to? We are outcasts. No one would give us work." And again: "Every one under this government is treated well but ourselves; we only are despised."

Dear white-ribbon sisters, my heart is too full of sorrowful thoughts and memories to write more. Deliverance will never come to these poor native women of India and of other countries until the Christian women of the world come to their relief. Ask on your knees what part you have in this deliverance; ask as did Saul in the mid-day vision: "Lord, what wilt Thou have me to do?" I make my appeal to you through a recent utterance, surcharged with love and pity and spiritual power, of that great-souled woman, Josephine Butler:

I have vowed afresh that this image of outraged and enslaved girlhood shall never be absent from my mind. I am determined that the image of this poor residuary legatee of life's deepest horrors shall remain before me, shall be with me in the seclusion of my chamber, in social life, in public, and above all when I kneel before God to ask that His kingdom may come upon earth. I appeal to you especially, my women friends, not to let anything, joyful or sad, blot out the image of this enslaved figure which surely calls for our utmost pity, and for our deepest indignation against the wrong that continues in the midst of our reforms to be done to her. She, above all others may say, "No man careth for my soul." In spite of all the beautiful rescue and preventive and vigilance work that is being done in many countries, there is still this last victim, this human creature left out of account, so to speak, this refuse of humanity, which even the Christian dares to allow to be swept out of sight and tortured to death.

May God arise in defense of this last portion of His redeemed ones! For "vain is the help of man."

HILLSBORO CRUSADE SKETCHES.

II.

Story of the "Crusade Hymn."

BY ELIZA J. THOMPSON.

When David, "the stripling," essayed to go out against the vaunting "Goliath of Gath" his only reason for so daring a feat was that the God of Israel had in the past enabled him to kill both a lion and a bear. "And David said to Saul, the king of Israel," (whose approval he must have,) "the Lord that delivered me out of the paw of the lion and out of the paw of the bear, He will deliver me out of the hand of this Philistine. . . . And Saul said unto David, Go, and the Lord be with thee."

Thus the inspiration of past experiences aided the earnest women in their new departure, and gave to their untrained leader fresh courage and faith, as she remembered how, in the "long ago," her heart had been taught to sing:

"Give to the winds thy fears."

Early in the winter of 1852, when our children numbered six, the eldest son away from home at school, and the youngest an infant of a few months, the scarlet fever became an epidemic in our little town and three of our dear children became victims of it.

About the same time a valued young woman who had been in the family for some years was taken with quinsy, and was removed by her parents to their home, two miles in the country. Thus I was left with an infant, three sick children, and no assistance save a little colored girl about ten years of age, and a stable boy, who, by the way, knew everybody, and was able to serve us a good purpose in searching for needed help. In the evening, however, he returned after a fruitless quest, and reported: "Can't get nobody—all fear'd of dat 'zease." So I nursed on, and provided for the various needs of my family as best I could until my husband, who always had a very tender feeling for ladies who were oppressed with work (yet had no native tact to aid) devised a plan by which he might do me essential service; he mounted his horse and started to the farm, three miles from town, trusting that the wife of the tenant might be induced to come to our rescue in such an emergency, as she had no children, and had once lived with us. But there was a stream to cross before reaching the farm, and it was frozen over; regardless of the smooth shoes of his horse, he ventured, and lo! the noble horse fell, crushing the right leg of the rider so that he could not walk. The sufferer was gently lifted by a stalwart farmer passing with his sled—laid upon the straw, the poor, limping horse tied to the hinder part; and so he was safely, but painfully brought to our door.

The sight and the history would have done for me what "the last pound" did for the camel's back, but for the gratitude that came welling up in my heart that my poor husband's limb was not broken, neither was our noble family horse killed!

With such addition to my cares, however, it can well be supposed, after nine days and nights of weary, sleepless nursing and toiling, with no change for the better, my heart and strength began to fail, and I reasoned thus with myself about midnight: I have tried since a child to love the Saviour; I have denied myself, taken up my cross and made an honest effort to follow Him—and now I am deserted, and in the town of my nativity, I am forsaken! Quick as thought the enemy said, "I'll tell you what to do, leave the church, for you are a hypocrite if you keep your name there, feeling as you do."

I at once laid my sleeping infant in its cradle, determined to act promptly and write a note to our M. E. minister. As I arose to do so an inward voice seemed to say, "Open that hymn book first," and as I looked around, the old book of songs was taken from its place, and carelessly opened without design or hope on my part, showing that it was all of love and pity that John Wesley's hymn, "Give to the winds thy fears," was the one that first met my gaze and caused the instant and complete transformation that followed. Taking a seat by the cradle the emotions of my heart found utterance in the song of songs, "How firm a foundation, ye saints of the Lord," and forgetting that the poor patients might be aroused, one verse after another was sung, sweeter than ever before it seemed, until from the adjoining room my husband called out, "Eliza, what do you find to sing about?"

I said: "I am singing about our holy religion." He reached out his hands to me:

"Wife, I know you are an honest woman; now, tell me, do you find anything in your religion to comfort you—situated as you now are?"

I answered him honestly that I had never felt happier in my life! With a firm grasp of my hand he said emphatically: "Then I must seek it!"

Thus had the "Comforter" not only enabled me to "Give to the winds my fears," but had taught my anxious heart to

"Leave to His sov'reign sway
To choose and to command," in the work, which had hitherto caused my greatest care. Can it be wondered that this blessed hymn, with all its sacred influences, should come to my mind when we were about to step out upon an untried way, and venture across the line of public sentiment—all helpless, save in the strength which God supplies?

But this is not all. No one could be found who was willing, for "love or money," to risk the plague and do a day's washing; therefore an airy place had been prepared, our unwashed clothes had been assorted and disinfected, and we were trusting and waiting. Good Katharine had recovered and had come, as an angel of mercy, to sit with the children and thus relieve me for other work.

The crisis of the disease had passed safely with our dear little ones and our hearts were full of gratitude. The winter seemed gone, for "the singing of birds had come and the voice of the turtle was heard in the land." New courage took possession of our souls, and although the last word of "kindly command" from my husband—recovered from his lameness and on the way to county court—as he drove off was, "See that a bonfire is made of the soiled clothes, below the barn," other plans were in the head of the one who had put so many careful stitches into those little garments; therefore, "with malice toward none" as soon as he was out of sight, "John, the faithful," was quietly directed to make a fire in the laundry furnace and fill the boilers. Then as poor blind Samson cried to God for strength "this once," before taking hold of the pillars, so did I implore the evidence of strength before acting upon my own judgment.

Well, the answer of approval came, and by two o'clock my clothes lines in the back lawn were filled with snowy garments and household linen, and I felt none the worse! While poor John, with few words but a fixed expression of amazement, put all things in order for me. A nice appetizing dinner was then prepared for the delicate part of the family and a hearty one for the laborers. Surely, I could never doubt the promise: "As thy days, so shall thy strength be."

In all this I feared nothing so much as the criticism of my dear father who came over each day to inquire for the sick and to care for our temporal wants—my good mother being quite unable to leave her room. As the dear old gentleman rode up, I cautioned the grown ones of the nursery to keep quiet, but his keen eye spied the large washing upon the lines, and at once congratulated me upon having found a laundress; the smiles that passed told the tale, and with a most reproving look at his only daughter he said, "My child, I am surprised at you." But with a forgiving kiss he only added: "It is useless to ask you to take care of yourself." And surely he would have been confirmed in his opinion had he lived to witness the Crusade of '73 and '74, but his noble heart would have been with us.

THE WORLD ABROAD, OR TEMPERANCE NOTES FROM FOREIGN LANDS.

BY FELIX L. OSWALD, M. D.
Author of "Physical Education," "The Bible of Nature," "International Health Studies," etc.

HOME ARGUMENTS.

During a recent visit of the Czar at Oranienbaum, the Russian Versailles, a detachment of the Finnish Guards became so noisy under the influence of vodka as to seriously alarm the guests of the Imperial family, who at first ascribed the disturbance to an outbreak of Nihilist malcontents. As a consequence, the commanding general of the military district of St. Petersburg has received instructions to appoint a commission for the purpose of purging the Garde du Corps regiments of habitual drunkards.

LAW'S LABOR LOST.

Near Marienburg, in the Austrian province of Transylvania, a detachment of gensdarmes, a few weeks ago, captured three Bulgarian robbers who had taken refuge in the mountains, and who, after a preliminary trial, were escorted across the frontier and turned over to the proper authorities. Thus far, the prisoners had seemed resigned to their fate, but on the very first night after their transfer to the Bulgarian representatives of the law, they succeeded in getting their guards drunk and effected their escape to the highlands of Tarnogra.

PERILS OF THE RAIL.

So many disasters on the Trans-Andes line of the Chilian railways have been traced to the inebriety of employés that the directors have decided to discharge every conductor, engineer or telegraph operator who, after this, shall be caught under the influence of liquor.

DOUBTFUL MORALISTS.

During a recent meeting of a temperance association of Lausanne, Switzerland, the Syndic Romelin stated that he could mention by name quite a number of almost total abstainers engaged in the manufacture or sale of intoxicating liquors. Personal temperance, the speaker said, should always be respected, but under the circumstances named, it rather reminded him of the self-control of egotists, who break the law in cold blood, and contrive to save themselves, though not others, from the consequences of their transgressions.

ASSISTED IMMIGRANTS.

The Brazilian government has spent millions for the promotion of immigration, both by land grants and the direct subvention of indigent settlers, but the commissioners complain that only a small percentage of the alleged colonists can be induced to stay. An American humorist suggests that the new Republic ought to try its luck with a cargo of English sparrows, but it could do no harm to admit the fact that a good deal of the discontent is due to the drunken brawls and the consequent shiftlessness of the colonists, whose idea of liberty is the repudiation of all restraints upon the use of alcoholic beverages.

EXPENSIVE BOARDERS.

A citizen of Groningen, Holland, had two of his boarders arrested for coming home howling drunk night after night, and soon after was awakened by a midnight cry of fire. Lurid flames burst from the bedroom of his lodgers, who answered the reproaches of the enraged landlord with complaint that his severity had obliged them to purchase a ten gallon keg of alcohol for the private manufacture of Schiedam Schnapps.

A TARDY CONFESSION.

The medical association of Verviers, Belgium, indorses the theory of their president who ascribes the prevalence of pulmonary complaints largely to the immoderate use of intoxicating drinks, including wine. "The steady increase in the death rate from consumption," he says, "has long been attributed to the development of textile industries" (woolen mills and the lung affecting dust of the spinning room), "but that cause of disease is fairly offset by the improvement of domestic hygiene, and in a large plurality of cases lung complaints can be traced to the direct influence of intemperance or to the pathological tendencies inherited from intemperate parents."

EFFECTIVE SIMILE.

A temperance agitator of Odessa, whom the Russian police came near imprisoning for his trouble, made a strong appeal for the suppression of the liquor traffic during the crisis of the cholera panic. "In the naphtha districts," he said, "they have a custom of soaking wooden shingles in petroleum, and it is really a cheap way to make a roof weather tight. But now suppose our government should go into partnership with a naphtha dealer and permit him to drench our roof with coal oil, at the very time when a conflagration is known to approach on the wings of the storm."

WASTED ADVANTAGES.

A delegate from Reynosa, in the province of Aragon, calls attention to the fact that in spite of a genial climate, cheap food and good harbors, the percentage of mendicants is more outrageous in the wine-growing districts of Southern Spain than in any other part of the monarchy—nearly four times larger, for instance, than among the rockbound, but sober and thrifty population of the Catalonian highlands.

THE PROPHET OF THE UKRAINE.

The peasants of Russian Poland still cherish the memory of Ivan Wernyhora, a rural reformer and clairvoyant of the eighteenth century, who twenty years before the political crime of the allied despots, predicted the fate of his native land in all details, and who according to tradition foretold a time when his countrymen would regain their independence and resume their rank among the great nations of Europe. He used to travel incognito from village to village in order to study the habits of the rural population under various conditions of servitude, and it is a significant fact that he was a consistent abstainer from strong drink and ascribed the degradation of his countrymen chiefly to this habitual intemperance. Some of his predictions have been recorded in writing, and printed copies are still smuggled from cottage to cottage, in spite of the vigilance of the Russian police.

FILIAL PIETY.

A country gentleman of the Silesian district of Ohlan a few months ago offered a reward for the identification of the poachers who had repeatedly invaded his game-preserves. A young fellow of the neighborhood at last did denounce the trespasser, and claimed the promised reward, but subsequent investigations established the fact that the informer was the son of the alleged poacher, and had perjured himself in the hope of increasing his allowance of beer-money.

SANITARY SELF-HELP.

In several cities of northern Germany there are now private associations for the mitigation of the tobacco nuisance (especially in railway depots, libraries, and other places of public resort), and the peasants of Olmütz, Moravia, have devised a method of their own for curing the bibulous propensities of the rising generation. If a youth under twenty gets disorderly drunk, he is confined a day or two in the Buettel Haus—a sort of toper's pound, for the first offence, and every following time has to purchase his release by chopping a cord of oak wood for the benefit of the village school.

Cincinnati, O.

WE are instructed to love our neighbor as ourselves, but the Christly standard is yet higher. "Love your enemies." But there are no "enemies," for they have been transformed. As our eyes are opened the divine image shines through all human wrappings. This makes the lowest semblance of humanity lovely. Though yet unmanifested, he is a son of God.—Henry Wood.

LETTER FROM ENGLAND.

DEAR UNION SIGNAL:—Probably no temperance organization which has ever been formed in this country has done more toward the accomplishment of its main object than has the Anglo-Indian Temperance Association during the five years of its existence. As its name implies, it is a society which comprises English people and Indians—natives of the vast Eastern dependency of the British Empire, and its purpose is the promotion of temperance in India, and the rescue of that land and its countless population from the triple curse of drink, opium and Indian hemp drugs.

India contains two hundred and fifty millions of people but it has little or no self-government, and no direct representation in the British Parliament save one member of the Parsee race (Mr. Dadabhi Naovoji) who sits in the present House of Commons for a division of London. India, therefore, is governed by Englishmen who hold official stations under the Home Executive, and are only amenable to public opinion through the "India Office." Public opinion in England, especially if expressed through the House of Commons, is the one effective engine by which the rights of the natives of India can be safeguarded. The tremendous importance of this fact from a temperance point of view is obvious when it is remembered that it has passed into a current phrase that England found India a sober country and has made her drunken; that to many of the natives to drink is the symbol of so-called Christianity; and that this state of things has been brought about by the Anglo-Indian government, not only countenancing and fostering the liquor traffic, but by actually forcing the liquor traffic upon an unwilling people, raising revenue from their vices, and practically monopolizing both the drink and the opium traffic for the sake of monetary gain.

Moved by these considerations, and fired by the result of personal investigations in India, Mr. W. S. Caine, M. P., perhaps our most robust and stalwart parliamentary temperance reformer, originated the Anglo-Indian Temperance Association. It was formed at a private meeting held in the drawing-room of the wife of another reformer, M. P., Mr. Samuel Smith, who has throughout been, and still is, president of the association. Mr. Caine has paid two visits to India in furtherance of the work, and exercises as honorary secretary a ceaseless vigilance in the interest of the society, by a most voluminous correspondence with secretaries and other leaders in India, through the daily and other press of this country, and in Parliament, where, with the aid and support of other members of Indian sympathies, he and the president have achieved some marked and salutary successes, brought about some great changes in administration, and on several points compelled reforms, in spite of strenuous opposition from prominent officials, who, however much they may resist what they call Mr. Caine's "meddling," yet find themselves compelled to shape their conduct in accordance with the expressed views of Parliament. The association has in India over one hundred and thirty branches and many thousands of members, all of whom are pledged against both drink and opium, and against the many varieties of hemp drugs, bhang, gauga, etc., etc. Among the numerous agencies in India which have contributed to this excellent result, two in particular stand out with preëminence; first, the self-denying work of the Rev. Thomas Evans, a retired missionary who, without fee or reward, acts as the resident agent of the association in India, travels every year thousands of miles in its work, delivers many lectures, visits and encourages the branch societies, and forms new ones wherever the opportunity can be found. More of this good friend of humanity and of his work may, perhaps, be given in another letter, as also of the second agency referred to, the very special work of the Mahunt of Benares, Kesho Ram Roy, a Hindu of the highest caste, who, having abandoned a prosperous career as a tutor for the life of a religious recluse, has been drawn from that by an awakened interest in the temperance cause, and now preaches total abstinence with great eloquence and power in the name of the Anglo-Indian Temperance Association not only to thousands upon thousands of pilgrims to the Holy City, but in other parts of India, and with the most remarkable success.

The annual meetings of the association have just been held in London, and they were rendered picturesque and of practical interest by the presence of a number of dusky-visaged visitors from India. Conspicuous among them was His Highness Shrimant Sampatra Gaekwar—the brother of the reigning Maharaja of Baroda—one of the best governed of the native states of India. He gave striking tes-

WHAT THE WOMEN WANT.

BY F. E. S.

"Whatever do the women want?" we hear the scornful cry.
To you, oh, "Christian Commonwealth!" we women make reply.
We want a "Christian Commonwealth," where just and equal laws
Shall make a needless mission ours, who plead the woman's cause.

It was a wholesome lesson we were taught as girls at school,
That our vaunted Constitution has a fundamental rule,
That whosoever hath no voice in voting or debate
Is free from obligation to contribute to the state.

When we women claim the franchise, men have one answering note—
"By reason of your womanhood we do refuse the vote."
But when the tax collector calls, 'tis not enough to say,
'By reason of our womanhood, we do refuse to pay."

Oh, wise and prudent rulers! we are women, it is true,
But we are fellow-citizens and fellow-subjects, too,
We have hearts and brains and voices, have we no right to say
By what laws we will be governed—whose the sceptre we obey?

There are wrongs that must be righted—bitter woes that seek redress,
We can hear our sisters calling in their weakness and distress.
We need the power to lift them from their sad and evil plight,
'Tis for this we want the franchise—and we claim it as our right.

HOW ONE WOMAN STAYED AT HOME FROM CONVENTION.

BY EVA JONES.

"It seems so strange, mother, such a puzzling providence, that I should have to stay at home this time. I have wanted to go so much and planned so carefully for it. John is as much disappointed as I am. Sister Alice was coming to mother Baby Rob and see to John's comfort. The twenty-five dollars for my trip were all laid by, and now this visit comes right across the path of my going. Not but that I want to see Aunt Caroline and Tom—if their visit could only have been a week earlier or later, so that I could have had my convention! And you know the selfish pleasure is not the deepest motive, mother. I so long to gather help and inspiration to bring into our own union. I meant it should be such an aid in our temperance work. I feel incompetent as president, though John tries to cheer me by saying that I have zeal and earnestness enough to preside over a state or a nation. It would be such a treat and education to meet our splendid state workers, and to hear them tell all about the work. It seems as if I should not feel lonely in the uphill struggle here for five years after I had once spent a week with them," and tears stood in the eyes of disappointed Mrs. Truman.

"But, dear, perhaps you can go to the state convention next year, and for this time the visit will be compensation."

"Why, mother, I don't mean to be wicked or cross. It is hardly likely, though, that things will all arrange themselves so that I can go another year. But I mean to make the best blessing out of this visit I can. It is ten years since I saw them and I am so glad they are coming. Aunt Carrie writes that Tom has weak eyes at present, and is taking this trip as a rest from business and to renew his health. If he is something of an invalid I shall have the better chance to know him."

"Couldn't you get some of the other women to go, daughter, to represent the union?"

"If I only could! but Mrs. Judge Lawler says the weather is too warm; it is apt to be too cold or warm or wet or dry for her even to come to the meetings. Several of them cannot well afford it; some have little children, some might and would go if their husbands were as willing to furnish the money as they were to treat themselves to their party state convention last June. Those women never have twenty dollars to spend on their own independent judgment. John says he wants me to be as independent and individual in my judgment in spending my share of our money as if I were an old bachelor; he wants a wife with some financial common sense of her own. Isn't that a speech for a man to make, and a married man at that? No, not a woman of them will go this year, and not one of our union has ever been."

Mrs. Truman was out on her vine-shaded piazza with her guests four days later. A tall, fine-faced but tired-looking fellow lay stretched in the hammock, laughing just then to see small Rob chase the kitten.

"Rob is not big enough yet to go to school," Aunt Carrie was saying, "and you have no kindergarten in this small town. Is there anything for him to go to but Sunday-school?"

"The Sunday-school and the L. T. L. are all," replied Mrs. Truman. "He enjoys them both immensely."

"The Elteeyell?" queried Cousin Tom; "some kind of a gymnastic school, is it?" as Rob executed a somersault on the grass.

"Not exactly," smiled Mrs. Truman. "It is the juvenile work of the W. C. T. U., you know."

"Oh, yes," a vague expression coming over his face. Scholarly Tom Hemingway did not care to say immediately how little he did know about it. "Just what does the Elteeyell do with such a little chap as that, and how came it to adopt such a queer name? It isn't Greek, is it?" And then he laughed at her astonished face and said: "You must know, Cousin Elsie, that my education has been a good deal neglected about that society,—W. U. T. C., is it? Please tell me a little about it."

Mrs. Truman's face brightened but she turned to Aunt Caroline. "Haven't you ever told him all about it, auntie? You surely have kept in touch with it somehow."

"No, I really know no more of it than Tom. Before going abroad with him for two years, I was in society a good deal, and since returning, I have devoted myself to art studies so deeply as to absorb my whole attention. But tell us. I am sure I shall be interested."

"But where shall I begin," sighed this lonely W. C. T. U. president. "There is so much to tell."

"Begin at the beginning," commanded the invalid, "and tell it all. I am so uncommonly comfortable, I would like to make the afternoon as long as possible."

So Mrs. Truman, obeying literally, began with that wonderful story of the Crusade of '74. She was a good talker and this was a well-loved theme. She had gone without fresh gloves and had retrimmed last year's bonnets that she might have plenty of W. C. T. U. papers and books. She had that summer read Miss Willard's "Glimpses" and her UNION SIGNALS were to her a perennial fountain. Tom soon shifted his easy position to better watch her glowing, earnest face, and to interrupt her with his quick, searching questions and comments.

"Well, I remember, in my school days there was such an enthusiastic,—or perhaps some called it 'fanatical' uprising of women that soon spent itself. I'm surprised to learn that it had any sort of relation to a ladies' existing society. That Crusade did scare the saloons out, hundreds of them, for a time. But what is the—what do you call it—W. T. U. C. succeeding in now?"

Mrs. Truman was methodical in her knowledge of the W. C. T. U., as was her habit in everything. "Just let me show a little, Cousin Tom." And she brought from her "W. C. T. U. shelf" of the book-case, as John called it, the National W. C. T. U. minutes of the year before. "Don't try your eyes now and consume the afternoon trying to read it all, but just notice these few first pages that give the outline of the departments of work. I'll read you a little of the constitution, etc., if you care to have me."

Aunt Carrie leaned over to examine it with him. Questions and explanations followed thick and fast, and soon they were completely absorbed in Elsie Truman's story of the heroic order which was daring to undertake to sweep the liquor curse with its attendant evils from the earth.

"And it would seem," observed Tom, "that they know no weariness or discouragement as the decades of years go by, and the liquor power each day seems more strong and triumphant, more securely possessed of the control of government and the consciences of men."

It was a favorite theme to which mother and son often recurred during the warm, hazy afternoon reunions on the cool piazza. The "W. C. T. U. shelf" was thoroughly overhauled by Mrs. Hemingway and Tom in the mornings while Elsie was busy housekeeping. Her file of UNION SIGNALS, complete for several years, was brought down from the hall cupboard upstairs where they had steadily accumulated.

"I know it seems almost foolish and wicked for me to keep them all to myself, and store them away as I do," Mrs. Truman said.

But Tom was delighted with them. "You ought to have them bound. They are splendid reading. We must have them at home after this, mother. It would be worth while to know some of these brainy women, as keen as they are plucky, upon my word. Was ever anything more noble and thrilling than the mission of that first lone woman, going with this unheard-of message to the women of a nation, preaching a crusade for total abstinence and the destruction of the liquor traffic to a Christendom which is a little more heathenish than Africa or China in this work of ruin! You don't know how it thrills a fellow, Cousin Elsie, that has never before heard much of it. I've hated the liquor, every form of it, always, and some way considered it about as I did China's opium curse, with about as much notion of undertaking its overthrow as a mouse would have of leveling Mount Vesuvius. And do you know what I thought of this W. C. T. U., from the depths of my ignorance of it? I had a vague notion that it was a well-meaning set of enthusiastic women whose chief progress consisted in admiring procession of yourselves around a goddess leader."

"Why, Tom Hemingway! I—"

"Don't, please. I beg your most humble pardon for such abominable ignorance of the most potent society the world of reform has ever known. I had no idea of the 'round ups' these state conventions seem to be. I knew there were conventions but I had a vague notion that they were not very orderly, and that there were squabblings about politics; and politics, as such, I've never had much relish for. I'd rather study theology in Sanskrit than dabble in the mess. You don't think me much of a patriot from your noble, self-denying, white-ribbon level, do you?"

"It is too bad," said Aunt Carrie, "that our coming spoiled your plan for your own attendance at the state convention this week. I found it out, by-the-by, though you never breathed a word of your disappointment."

"Oh," said Mrs. Truman, a little tremble in her laugh, "I built a beautiful air-castle of that kind, but I will have my castle on hand to live in until some time when I do go. Oh, yes, I'll own I did care a great deal, but your visit has more than repaid for postponing that pleasure, and especially your interest in this dear white-ribbon cause."

"We should not have been much interested if you had been like the two or three W. C. T. U. women I have met before. They just belonged in a disinterested sort of a way, I suppose, did not read its literature or have it to show as you do. I should not have learned much about the work from them in a month. But your exhibition of it is a revelation and an inspiration. I shall find out if there is a union for me to join in Clayton as soon as I get home from the coast; and I shall watch to see whether women are as alive west of the Rockies as they are in these breezy prairie states. As for Tom,"—with a mischievous glance at that gentleman, who was half listening to them and half reading "Thumb-nail Sketches"—"I don't know what will become of him. He seems to be deeply enough infatuated to do anything."

"That I am," promptly answered Tom. "I'll go half across the continent to see and hear these people, the honored ladies and elect this little book tells of. I'm in love with them all collectively, I'm proud to say."

"Well, why don't you?" was Mrs. Truman's quick suggestion. "The National Convention meets this fall at Chicago during the great Columbian Fair. That will be just on your way to California."

"I've seen mountains," said the stalwart traveler, "but I've never seen the W. C. T. U., except in the small edition I find here,"—with a low bow to Mrs. Truman, "and I shall not miss the opportunity, you may be sure. Of course you will want to go, Cousin Elsie?"

"To the National? Oh, no, that is far beyond my dreams or my ability. I shall be perfectly satisfied with one of our own state conventions some of these days. Every one cannot go to the National Convention, you know, but every one can work in her own corner of the vineyard, and know that the glory of the great convention belongs to her, too, for it is just a summing up of all the little corners."

"Well, my brave little cousin, you shall go, you are going with mother and me. You shall be our guide and guest, and give us a sort of right, through virtue of your white ribbon, to sit within that charmed circle and hear those noble souls discourse of saving this old planet. I declare, if it doesn't seem the only thing worth talking of or working for—if one could only believe it possible. Let's go, mother, and see if this is only a dream of the millennium."

There is a plain but handsome wool suit and bonnet and a new cloak, made and sprinkled with camphor, waiting for October in Mrs. Truman's lock closet.

"Why, that is a beautiful and unusual story," said her district president—hearing the news in a call—"that your loss of the state convention should have secured you so great a treat. I congratulate you most sincerely."

"Let me tell you the true reason," said Cousin Tom. "She was thoroughly well read and well posted on the W. C. T. U., and knowing all about it, she could not help making the story charming. She had the W. C. T. U. in all its fullness at home, and it is just another illustration of the promise, 'To him that hath shall be given.'"

THE TEMPERANCE GIRL.

BY H. M. NOYES.

A jolly temp'rance girl am I,
With honest heart and true;
Striving to do with all my might
Whate'er I find to do.

No wine or brandy e'er I'll put
In pudding, sauce or pie;
Ah, no, indeed! that's 'gainst my rule,
For a temp'rance girl am I.

No whisky pickles will I taste,
Nor set before a guest;
But in the temp'rance cause I'll work,
And do my very best.

No brandy peaches, or homemade wine,
Shall on my table find a place;
Tho' the President should with me dine,
I would not thus our cause disgrace.

For, am I not a temp'rance girl,
Pledged honest heart and hand?
Yes! I'll fight for right with all my might!
For God and Home and Native Land.

OUR HEROES.

Here's a hand to the boy who has courage
To do what he knows to be right.
When he falls in the way of temptation,
He has a hard battle to fight.
Who strives against self and his comrades
Will find a most powerful foe;
All honor to him if he conquers,
A cheer for the boy who says "No!"

There's many a battle fought daily
The world knows nothing about;
There's many a brave little soldier
Whose strength puts a legion to rout,
And he who fights single-handed
Is more of a hero, I say,
Than he who leads soldiers to battle,
And conquers arms in the fray.

Be steadfast, my boy, when you're tempted
To do what you know is not right;
Stand firm by the colors of manhood,
And you will o'ercome in the fight.
"The right!" be your battle-cry ever
In waging the warfare of life;
And God, who knows who are the heroes,
Will give you the strength for the strife.

YOU'LL HAVE TO AVOID THE SALOON.

BY LAURA C. GIBBONS.

You stand on the threshold of youth, boys,
Your future lies out in the years;
You're learning your parts for life's work, boys,
You're planning your future careers.
You'll have to fill places of trust, boys,
Your fathers will pass away soon;
And if you'd be trustworthy men, boys,
You'll have to avoid the saloon.

If you would be honored in life, boys,
If joy and contentment you'd know;
If you would have plenty of cash, boys,
And bask in prosperity's glow;
If you would enjoy robust health, boys,
That priceless, but much abused boon;
If God's benediction you'd have, boys,
You'll have to avoid the saloon.

You'll have to avoid the saloon, boys,
Or sorrow and shame you will share.
And poverty's crust you will eat, boys,
And poverty's rags you will wear.
Your future will end in disgrace, boys,
Your life be cut off at its noon,
Both body and soul will be lost, boys,
Unless you avoid the saloon.

UNCLE JOHN'S TALKS.

X.

TOOLS.

Come in, dears. Matter with me? Oh, nothing much, only Aunt Mary wanted me to lie down, to-day, because I—no, Jimmy, I didn't fall down cellar nor up stairs, and my head is on and my bones whole; but I did catch a runaway horse, yesterday, when I saw a boy in the wagon, and so that arm and some other places seem to want a rest.

But I can give you what I have for to-day from here as well as in the shop. I want to tell you about more tools. Not at length, as public speakers say, but in brief. We might spend our whole half-hour over almost any one of the fifty things you need for such work as always comes to willing hands. But I will only give you a list of the more common ones and a few directions for two or three.

We have talked about saws, hammers, hatchets, squares, planes, nails and vises. Besides these you will want chisels, gauges, files, drills, screwdrivers, compasses, awls, shears, sandpaper, oil can, brace and bits, and by all means a broom. Then if you can afford it, have a lathe and learn to turn—little goblets, vases, etc.—but this is ornamental rather than necessary. If you do have a lathe, it will serve for the drills. If not, try to get a jigsaw, like mine, you remember. And if that fails, perhaps you can rig up an old sewing machine to hold the drills, for you will often want to use them.

As to the tools just mentioned, get one or more of different sizes. Be sure to get compasses that have the curved arm and set-screw. And the awl I must mention. Don't get the hollow handle, cap going on with a screw; first, because you cannot hammer on it, and second, because of the trouble of changing tools. This second objection is not so great where the clamp can be turned without a wrench. But get the kind that has a solid handle, with a separate hole for each awl, and all pointing the same way as the one which is in use, so that when you hold it up and take off the cap, you have a neat little circle of tools that do not fall out of place nor get mixed up.

Yes, you must have a glue-pot right away. Ought to have had it long ago. Never nail chair-rounds, because, when the glue cracks loose you cannot get them out. No need of a fancy combination of lamp and pail-holder and pail and glue-pot. Take a tomato can, cut out the end and hammer the edges down smooth and put in a wire bail, turning the hooks inward. Now get a corn can, fix it the same way all but the bail. Then punch two holes, one inch from the top, and about two-fifths of the circumference apart. Put a straight wire through and hook the ends. This wire is to wipe the brush on, so as not to spread glue over the sides. Now put glue and water in the small can and water in the large one, and set the combination on the stove. If you can get one of these little hand kerosene stoves, do so, as they are perfection for heating soldering-irons, as I will explain, sometime.

I have for a long time been wanting to tell you what a comfort I take with—that clock! Be off!

TWO BRAVE BOYS.

Two young boys, sons of a clergyman, living in Cincinnati, O., went not long ago with their father to visit the Soldiers' Home in Dayton. After awhile the clergyman left his sons in charge of an officer, who was to show them the sights. Presently the soldier began:

"Now that the old man has—"

"We do not know any 'old man,'" interrupted the elder of the boys.

"Now that the old gentleman—" said the soldier.

"We do not know any old gentleman," once more interrupted the boy; "he is our father."

A little while afterward the soldier began to swear. The younger brother looked up into his face and said:

"Please don't use such words."

"Why not?"

"Because we do not like to hear them; we are church folks."

"Oh!" said the soldier, as he gave a whistle.

But he did not swear any more and he guided those boys around the grounds as respectfully and attentively as if they had been the sons of Queen Victoria.—Selected.

Vineland, N. J.

A WISE little boy whose Sunday-school teacher distributed slips of paper to her scholars and asked each to write thereon a New Year's resolution, decided to make a resolve which he would be able to keep, and to secure the prize offered to the boy who, at the beginning of another year, should have come the nearest to keeping it. He wrote: "REEsoLVE. That i wil tri too bee a yeer older by nex noo yeers."—Exchange.

DEAR BOYS AND GIRLS:—How many of you have a scrapbook? I see lots of hands waving in the air. But wait—how many have a temperance scrapbook? Ah, not so many. Why not have one, or devote a part of your regular scrapbook to temperance selections? Then whenever a good poem, short selection, or especially interesting story is printed upon the children's page in THE UNION SIGNAL you could preserve it and have it ready when needed. The poems and selections are nice to learn for recitation, and the story your teacher will be glad to read out loud to the whole school, if you request it. Let us have lots of temperance scrapbooks in the Cozy Corner.

Our whole family are temperance people. I enjoy reading the stories on the children's page, especially the letters. I was very glad to see the picture of Willard Fountain. The picture and the story are very nice. I am sorry we have no temperance meetings here; only once in a while we have a temperance lesson at Sunday-school.

Arlington Heights, Mass. PEARL PERKINS.

The picture of the fountain was very pretty, wasn't it, children? And the story was one of Miss Melville's best. Can't you coax somebody to help you start an L. T. L. or Junior Y, Pearl?

Mamma takes THE UNION SIGNAL,
I think it's very nice,
I read it every week it comes,
And sometimes read it twice.

I am a boy nine years old. I like to read Aunt Jane's Cozy Corner. There are four in our family, and we all expect to go to the World's Fair, and would like to take a drink from the Children's Fountain.

I expect many temperance families will gather round the Willard Fountain this summer. You will find it, Royal, between the Woman's and the Children's Building, where it will be placed as soon as it arrives from England.

I am a temperance girl and would like to join your Cozy Corner. HELEN SMITH.

OUR "DO-EVERYTHING" POLICY OUTLINED.

W. C. T. U. work is divided into six main branches: Organization, preventive, educational, evangelistic, social, legal. Each branch is subdivided, making in all forty-one separate departments, each being presided over by a superintendent who is a specialist in her particular line. Indeed, the reason for many of the departments lies in the fact that when the W. C. T. U. discovers a helpful specialty anywhere it has a habit of reaching out and attaching that specialty, specialist and all, to its own organization, giving it a local habitation and a name. As our president expresses it, "We find a woman with a mission and we give her a commission."

The advantages of this method are twofold. On the one hand it brings into the organization women of capability and enthusiasm, and on the other hand it furnishes valuable aid to the specialist by reason of the superior facilities possessed by the W. C. T. U. for extending its propaganda. Each department is duplicated wherever practicable in the local union, thus making every individual society a copy of the great whole.

We outline briefly the plan and general scope of the six main divisions:

1. Organization. Every thoroughly organized state has its district and county unions, thus forming an unbroken chain from the National to the local. There are fifteen National organizers now in the field. Of the ten thousand or more local unions in the United States, 964 are Young Woman's branches. "Our girls" take up the work of the various departments with enthusiasm, and are proving a tower of strength to the parent society all along the line. The oak and ivy leaf is their National emblem, and each state has its emblematic flower. In the words of the National superintendent, the mission of the Y union is "to keep in solid, unbroken phalanx the ranks between the W. C. T. Unions and the juvenile organization, thus preventing the loss of a decade of years in obtaining consecrated, efficient members."

In the Loyal Temperance Legions the boys and girls are systematically instructed in the principles of prohibition and total abstinence, and childish lips are carrying the temperance gospel into thousands of homes which could be reached in no other way. The number of L. T. L's is now estimated at 4,380, of which 694 were organized last year. Well may their motto be, "Tremble, King Alcohol, for we shall grow up!" The organization of Bands of Mercy, and the establishment of School Savings Banks are also efforts in line of the "do-everything" policy, and are specially helpful in the development of juvenile work.

2. Preventive. It is sometimes said that the W. C. T. U. fails to strike at the root of the liquor evil—the "appetite." Even if appetite were the root of the evil, which we are not prepared to admit, its preventive lines of work would conclusively refute this assertion. The W. C. T. U. believes with the Autocrat of the Breakfast Table that the remedies for some diseases must be applied a hundred years or so before the patient is born. Hence it has its departments of heredity and of health, through which it teaches the relation of diseased physical conditions to the drink habit. It has even a department of sanitary and economic cookery, which aims to show that not only what we cook but how we cook, is of the highest importance in the healthy development of mind and body. To the work of the unions in this direction is largely due the changing status of the drunkard. To the physician and to the philanthropist he is now the "dipsomaniac," and drunkenness is viewed as a form of insanity.

3. Educational. "The masses of to-morrow are in the schools of to-day." So says our superintendent of scientific temperance instruction. This being true, the public school is the most valuable vantage ground yet won by W. C. T. U. forces. In thirty-six states, in all the territories, including the District of Columbia, in the military and naval academies, and in Indian and colored schools, temperance instruction is now compulsory. More than twelve million children of the United States are being taught the nature and effects of alcohol and narcotics upon the human system. Legislation to that effect in the remaining eight states is only a question of time.

The Sunday-school is another stronghold won for temperance. The perseverance of our specialist in this department has been rewarded, and the international lesson series now provides each quarter a temperance lesson.

When we remember that two million voters in this country cannot read their ballots, we are impressed with the importance of work among foreigners. This department circulates literature in seventeen different languages, from Castle Garden to the Golden Gate.

Recognizing the fact that while the voice from the platform reaches hundreds, the voice of the press reaches tens of thousands, the W. C. T. U. does not fail to utilize that greatest of all educators, the newspaper. The growing respect and friendliness shown by the public press for our work is a welcome indication of the beneficent results of Christian temperance methods.

The department of narcotics has succeeded in securing in thirty-six states laws prohibiting the sale of cigarettes to minors under a certain age, and a petition is now before Congress asking for a law forbidding the manufacture of cigarettes, which petition was very properly referred to the committee on epidemic diseases.

The educational work also includes the presentation of our cause to influential bodies; bringing to the notice of employers and employés the relation existing between the temperance and labor questions; the circulation of literature; the study of parliamentary law; W. C. T. U. schools of methods; kindergartens, and last but not least, physical culture.

4. Evangelistic. Gospel work is the backbone of all W. C. T. U. effort, the Alpha and Omega of all Christian temperance methods. This department plans to carry the gospel cure to all classes of men and women, more especially to those not reached by the churches.

The flower mission is one of the many beautiful forms in which is embodied gospel teaching. To combine the message of flowers with the message of the written Word was a thought worthy the heart of our Jennie Casseday, so lately called "up higher" from the sick bed where she had lain for thirty years "doing good."

The department of purity is an outgrowth of disclosures made some years ago in the Pall Mall Gazette in which Mr. Stead vividly pictured the rottenness of London society. It aims to emphasize the relation between the drink habit and social crimes, and by means of mothers' meetings and the circulation of literature to impress upon men and women the truth that the laws of purity are equally binding upon both sexes; also to secure laws for the better protection of women and girls. It endeavors also to create a public sentiment in favor of purity in literature and art, and special effort is being made to secure a pure exhibit at the Columbian Exhibition, which has, in large measure, succeeded.

The evangelistic department embraces, further, efforts for Sabbath observance and for the use of unfermented wine at the Sacrament of the Lord's Supper. A course of study has been prepared for women who desire special training as evangelists.

5. Social. This branch is designed to reach the more conservative classes of society by means of parlor meetings, autograph pledge books, and other conservative methods, while the department of state and county fairs endeavors to make the W. C. T. U. a power in the management of fairs and other holiday gatherings.

6. Legal. Under this head we have legislation and petitions, and franchise work. State legislatures, and Congress itself, can testify to the thoroughness of our specialists along these lines. Much valuable legislation has been secured through this truly educative department, and still there's more to follow. Believing firmly in the ballot as a means of protection against the organized saloon power, the W. C. T. U. endeavors through various methods to secure that weapon for woman.

Experience having taught our women their own power in directing the trend of public opinion, they declare for a peace policy between nations and between classes. The W. C. T. U. aims to cultivate, by means of a department created for that purpose, an anti-war sentiment, which shall substitute arbitration for wholesale manslaughter.

It may be asked, How is all this vast amount of machinery to be kept moving without a correspondingly vast amount of money? We answer, by determined pluck and skillful management. The salaries of the general officers and the various appropriations for department work are paid from membership fees and dues. A department for "proportionate giving" recommends the tithe system as the best means of securing ample funds for carrying on the work.

A word concerning the three affiliated interests of our organization will not be out of place in this outline.

The Woman's Temperance Publishing Association has been designated as the strong right arm of the W. C. T. U. It publishes THE UNION SIGNAL, which reaches half a million readers weekly; the Oak and Ivy Leaf, National organ of the Y's, and The Young Crusader and Advance Guard, for juvenile readers, besides books and leaflets and many outside publications. The number of pages of temperance literature sent out last year amounted to two hundred and thirty-five million.

The National Temperance Hospital for the non-alcoholic treatment of disease is meeting with deserved success. In connection with it is a training school for nurses. It is the desire of the Hospital Board to erect a suitable building at no distant day, and contributions for this worthy object may be sent to the treasurer, Mrs. C. E. Bigelow, 539 W. Adams St., Chicago, Ill.

The Temple, our National headquarters, is, architecturally, "a thing of beauty and a joy forever," and from a business standpoint, beautiful for situation also. Thirteen stories high, costing $1,200,000, it stands upon the business corner of the business city of this nation. With the exception of one other building (which in this respect is its equal, not its superior) its offices command the highest rents in the city.

The Temple idea originated with Mrs. Carse in 1883, when from the shelter of the Y. M. C. A. rooms the W. C. T. U. was told, like little Joe, to "move on." To her came the command, "Arise and build," and though we expected much, the result has been far beyond our most sanguine hopes. The net income from the Temple rent-roll will, when the W. C. T. U. enters into full possession, be divided as follows: One-half to the National society, the other half among the different states in proportion to the amount contributed by each.

This array of departments may look appalling to an outsider, but the initiated know that "I in my small corner and you in yours," is the secret of our great organization's marvelous success. By the widening of our scope and the centralizing of all departments upon temperance, each member easily fits her special attainments into a special place and gives an impetus, otherwise unobtainable, to the great prohibition ball.

SABBATH OBSERVANCE CRISIS.

The true Christian consecrates all time to God. Every day is to him a Lord's day. But in the same spirit that he sets apart one dollar in every ten as specially the Lord's, he also sets apart one day in every seven as specially the Lord's Day.

In the outward act of Sabbath day observance the Christian world symbolizes an ideal truth; in the ceremonial consecration of one day in seven, it typifies the consecration of all days; in remembering the Sabbath day to keep it holy we invoke the promised blessing upon our labor of the six days.

The observance of a "Lord's Day" does not merely signify obedience to an arbitrary law enacted by a despotic ruler. None of God's laws are arbitrary. There is a divine philosophy underlying all our Father's commands. Blessed are they who accord unquestioning obedience! But if the why and the wherefore is sought, as it often is, it may be found. God will show us wondrous things out of His law if we only seek for them.

But before we can approach to a right understanding of God and His dealings with the world, we must first understand man. Before we can sound the heights and depths of divine wisdom as set forth in the "shalt" and "shalt not" of Sinai, we must realize something of the heights and depths of human nature. All the tedious details in the ordering of the Hebrew economy, all the minute particulars concerning the civil and religious life of the twelve tribes given in the Books of the Law, we find to be part of a most wonderful system for an all-around education of mankind—a system which could only have originated with One who thoroughly understood man's complex make-up. In the Mosaic law, with its harmonious blending of the threefold nature of man, we discern the work of the Supreme mind—the Creator of man.

The spiritual and material, the mental and the physical organism demands a rest day. Not of "idle rest" by any means, but the rest which can only come through a turning of the whole being toward God. To remember that the very thought is restful to soul and body. It brings strength and peace. This is what we would seek to gain in keeping hold of the Sabbath day, and if the people generally are not awake to the importance of obeying the Fourth Commandment, the few who are awake must endeavor to secure Sabbath observance by the enforcement of civil statute.

"God's in His heaven, All's right with the world"—

The Mosaic law, with its detailed instructions concerning duties toward God and duties toward our neighbor, concentrated in the Ten Commandments, is a divinely appointed schoolmaster. When all men shall have grown up into Christ, the Decalogue will no longer be needed. But so long as men and nations are in danger of "forgetting God," as the Hebrews were so prone to do, surrounded as they were by heathen nations—it is clear that the letter of the law must still be observed. The world to-day still needs the schoolmaster. America to-day has not risen to such spiritual heights as to have outgrown the Ten Commandments. Chicago, to-day, may boast, as she has a right to do, of her progressive civilization, but she cannot yet say that the millennial day has dawned.

The United States of America can ill afford at this critical time to throw aside any part of the Christian economy which has contributed so largely towards making the nation what it is to-day.

The city of Chicago, now the hostess of nations, cannot afford to ignore the sacredness of the Christian Sabbath by opening the Fair gates upon that day.

Let us be true to our colors! Let the Christian church move forward in solid phalanx against the desecrator of the Lord's Day! Let its voice be heard in halls of Congress and in council chambers! Let it see to it that Chicago shall fitly represent a Christian civilization in the matter of Sabbath observance! So shall "peace be within her walls and prosperity within her palaces."

REVEALING CHRIST.

The great mission of the church to the world to-day is to reveal Jesus Christ; to reveal Him in His entirety as the ideal man as well as the manifested Redeemer. To reveal Him in deed as well as word; in lives as well as creeds; in Christlike characters and Christlike customs as well as in pomp and liturgy. This cannot be done in the prayer-meeting alone, it is not confined to psalm singing or testimony as a means of expression; it must find other and wider fields of operation than the altar or inquiry room; the manifestation must appear wherever there is a sin to be overcome, a wrong to be made right, a darkened work to be illumined by the rays of the Sun of righteousness. God has anointed the church militant "to wrestle, not to reign," and that point where the conflict wages fiercest and there seems least hope of victory, is the very strategic point where the hosts of God should form their strength and demand victory in the name of the Most High. Because the liquor traffic is the great barrier to the success of Christ's kingdom on earth, because it is debauching men, our brothers; because its overthrow seems well-nigh hopeless, is the very reason why it should be the pivotal point of every scheme of reform, of every plan for the evangelization of the nations. That missionary society which ignores its claims, that individual worker who refuses to admit them, fails to meet the demands of the age and of God, who ever speaks through the need of the age.

Not in the ancient temple alone must the Christ with the whip of small cords, who shall drive out the buyers and sellers, precede the Christ who could declare, "Come unto me all ye that labor and are heavy laden and I will give you rest." Too long have we been pressing upon a sinful world the compassionate Christ alone and ignoring the Christ whose divine indignation blazed out against every form of wrong, injustice, cruelty, greed and oppression; whose one mission was to make wrong right, whether that wrong were enshrined in church or state, or in the heart of the individual man. When His followers shall recognize the full scope of their Master's mission for "the life that now is" as well as for that which is "to come," then and then only can the Church of Christ arise and shine—her light being come and the glory of the Lord God having risen upon her.

THE report that our National president did not uphold Mrs. Carse's management of Temple affairs having reached Miss Willard, she hastened to send the following unqualified indorsement for publication in THE UNION SIGNAL:

Perhaps I have not duly estimated the importance of the attacks made upon Mrs. Carse and our enterprises in my absence. We have become so accustomed to criticism and contradiction, not to say contumely, that we do not feel about it all as we once did. That is a part of the compensation that comes to those who participate in great enterprises and espouse unpopular reforms. We have learned that attacks are made not only from those who represent the interests against which we feel called upon to fight, but that in all organized movements there will be those who take up the cudgels against their fellow-workers and do them more damage than the powers to which reformers are opposed can possibly receive from those whom they are obliged to antagonize, for it is harder to be "wounded in the house of one's friends" than to meet the weapons of one's opponents upon the open field. The only sufficient shield that we can carry is our character and record. I have known Mrs. Carse now nearly twenty years and have found her always faithful and devoted as a friend and equally devoted and faithful as a temperance worker. I am fully persuaded that when all these bickerings and jealousies, criticisms and combinations are forgotten she will be remembered in the history of our country as one of its bravest and most capable defenders, and that her Christian character will shine out more resplendent as the years pass on. It has pained me greatly that one who might have lived a life of ease and self-indulgence, but who chose to devote her remarkable talents to the building up of great public interests, should have been accused of motives to which I know her to be infinitely superior and should have had her good so evil spoken of. I do not need to say that I believe she has conducted the enterprises entrusted to her care with honesty, fidelity and in a most unselfish spirit. I am not a business woman and my opinion concerning the details of any business transaction is not that of an expert, but I know that men and women who are experts hold concerning Mrs. Carse and the details of the various great enterprises she has conducted, the same opinion that I have always maintained, that I now hold and that I expect always to cherish. FRANCES E. WILLARD.

IT is probable that no citizen of Kansas is better qualified to give intelligent testimony concerning the prohibitory law of that great state than ex-Senator Ingalls and we are delighted to publish his statement as follows:

The curse and bane of frontier life is drunkenness. The literature of the mining camp, the cross-roads, and the cattle ranch reeks with whisky. In every new settlement the saloon precedes the school-house and the church, is the rendezvous of ruffians, the harbor of criminals, the recruiting station of the murderer, the gambler, the harlot, and the thief; a perpetual menace to social order, intelligence, and morality, above whose portal should be inscribed the legend engraved on the lintel of the infernal gates, "Who enters here leaves hope behind." Agitation against the evils of intemperance was contemporary with the political organization of the Territory [of Kansas]. The founders of Topeka and Lawrence forbade the sale of intoxicating beverages within their corporate limits, and the debate continued until 1881, when a constitutional amendment was adopted forever prohibiting the manufacture and sale of intoxicating liquors, except for medicinal, mechanical and scientific purposes. This was enforced by appropriate legislation, and the validity of the amendment and of the statutes was sustained by the supreme courts of the state and of the nation. After futile and costly resistance, the dram-shop traffic has disappeared from the state. Surreptitious sales continue, club drinking and "joints" are not unknown, but the saloon has vanished, and the law has been better enforced than similar legislation elsewhere. In the larger towns, prohibition is not so strictly observed as in the rural districts, where public opinion is more rigid; but in all localities the beneficent results are apparent in the diminution of crime, poverty and disorder. Banned by law, the occupation is stigmatized and becomes disreputable. If the offender avoids punishment, he does not escape contempt. Drinking being in secret, temptation is diminished, the weak are protected from their infirmities, and the young from their appetites and passions.

WE quote the following extract from a leading London paper: "The strike of ladies' tailors and mantle makers in the East End was caused by a firm having reduced the price paid to the extent of two pence and three pence per garment. Even under the old conditions it was necessary to work from 6:30 a. m. till midnight in order to gain a livelihood. The men have struck against the reduction, and the employers are seeking to obtain women to take their places." These poor toilers are indeed "living in a daily circulation of sorrow—living but to work, and working but to live, with daily bread the only end of a wearisome life, and a wearisome life the only occasion for daily bread."

"Oh, women! Do what you can,
Not what you cannot;
Not what you think might be done,
Not what you would like to do;
Not what you would do if you had more time,
Not what somebody else thinks you ought to do
But what you can."

Edison employs two hundred women machinists in the work of his electrical inventions. He is credited with saying that women have more fine sense about machinery in one minute than most men have in their whole lifetime.

Mrs. Ebba Nordqvist, of Helsingfors, Finland, a delegate to the World's Congresses of women in Chicago from the Unionen (a woman's suffrage society), is a member not only of many temperance and charitable societies, but of the press in that north country, whose women already have many suffrage privileges. She is accompanied on her trip to this land by her husband, who is commissioner of fisheries, and whom I greeted as an "honorary member" of the Finnish temperance societies. "Oh, no," said he, with a roguish smile, "I am a real member. We have men suffrage in Finland!" I hope, through these good friends of temperance, that an auxiliary to the World's W.C. T. U. will be formed in Finland.

Some one has said that the forty departments of the white-ribbon army are like a river broken up into many channels, thus interfering with its progress, but to white-ribboners this seems an illustration entirely to the advantage of their methods, for these many channels make a river fertilize the land so that it brings forth harvest. No river is so helpful as the Nile, which by means of many outlets is made to pour its riches on the soil.

The English are great readers. Much as we hear about American newspapers, and though it is claimed by some that newspapers are sold in but ten per cent larger numbers than before the system of popular education was devised, it remains true that America has no such variety of newspapers, daily and weekly, magazines, brochures, pamphlets and cheap books as one finds on the news stands of Great Britain, and these are at almost every railway station, even though you penetrate the rural districts. The English are also insatiable novel readers, but they have this advantage, that to a great extent their greatest novelists have wrought good to the people in the correcting of abuses. Everybody knows that Dickens' and Thackeray's, Charles Reade's and Charles Kingsley's, Walter Besant's and a score of lesser lights' "epoch making" books have widened the horizon of the people and lifted them to higher outlooks.

The Y. W. C. T. U. might well emulate the Christian Endeavor Society of Baltimore in organizing a "surprise committee," whose duty it is to play what might be termed Christian practical jokes. This committee does little things that most people would overlook, but that please and astonish everybody when done. For instance they make pleasant surprise calls on old ladies; they unexpectedly bring out an edition of their pastor's last sermon; they astonish the church prayer-meeting with a sudden flood of young faces; they get up a picnic for the waifs and strays; they buy a tricycle and take some lonesome little people out to ride on Saturday afternoons; in short they introduce the small, sweet courtesies of life in nooks and corners that are not wont to know their influence.

Mrs. Hemmenway, of Boston, one of its richest women, illustrates beyond most others the value of applying brains as well as good will in the use of that concerning which she evidently feels herself only the almoner of heaven's bounty. She does not give to the first comer, does not take up individual cases, but has established a normal training school for physical education, so that the people may have a better chance to start right in habits, physical, mental and moral. While we believe greatly in kindness to the individual—and there is certainly no end to gospel effort—we still think that "sober second thought" applied to the use of one's money would often do far more good than the haphazard methods by which we give to the first comer, often as much to relieve our own minds as for any other reason. What is most needed in philanthropy is minds; we mean especially among women. Their hearts are enlisted; there is no doubt about that. We now wish to get their minds.

ON DUTY.

NEWS FROM THE FIELD

RHODE ISLAND.

"Blessed be the Lord who daily loadeth us with benefits, even the God of our salvation."

The W. C. T. U. of Rhode Island has so much to be thankful for, both as an organization in the work that it is permitted to do, and as individuals with their personal blessings, both temporal and spiritual, that it must needs keep a holy day all its own. So on the day of our last executive meeting, representatives from our workers throughout the state came together again to offer the sacrifice of praise to God, by the fruit of their lips giving thanks to His name, and with their substance honoring Him from whom cometh every good and every perfect gift.

Mrs. A. M. Paine happily illustrated the thought of the unions by a reference to the chest which Joash had placed by the temple gate to receive the freewill offerings of the Jews. In our W. C. T. U. the Lord's work is hindered for lack of funds, so all the members were invited to help. But instead of one big chest by the table at headquarters, it was thought better to have little paper chests sent out to all the unions. And now the time had come to empty these that they might be taken back and refilled.

As each was brought forward and presented with a choice gem of Scripture and some incident or experience connected with the offering, the verification of God's promise was apparent: "He that watereth shall be watered also himself." Earnest testimony was given to blessings received from giving freely, and some have come to feel that they have been robbing God in withholding their tithes. One gave in gratitude that her son, through temperance teaching in the public school, has become strong in principle. One poor woman, who takes in washing, brought more than some who gave of their abundance. And many another incident, too sacred for speech, has consecrated these gifts. The amount of the offering exceeded $500.

Fourteen towns have made a strong effort to gain no-license. That some failed in the immediate result does not prove that their work was in vain. But in such towns as East Greenwich and Coventry, which were "rum towns," a large majority for no-license does prove that the leaven is working and that the better classes of citizens are not willing to be ruled by the lowest elements.

One of the results of the union revival services at Pawtucket is a man turned from a destroyer of men to one who would uplift and save. Last Easter he gave twenty dollars for the beautiful emblems of life and purity to decorate a gateway to death. This Easter his little chapel was fragrant with the same emblems made beautifully true in a soul dead to sin but alive in Christ Jesus.

Woonsocket has a rescue mission right next to a saloon and the keeper complains that it robs him of a hundred dollars a week. The missions at Providence and Westerly are doing grand work. The unions at all these places actively coöperate and many are the brands plucked from the burning. Homes are blessed and employment is found for those who are capable of doing good work when sober.

Providence Y's are holding daily services, under the leadership of Miss Gordon. Of her work in Newport, the Y's can speak for themselves.

The Newport, R. I., Y. W. C. T. U. want to tell the other unions of the wonderful blessings which have come into their lives, individually and collectively, in a series of evangelistic services held at their mission room, the "Beacon," during the past two months by Miss Mattie Gordon, of Nashville, Tenn. Miss Gordon also spoke twice at Fort Adams, twice to the Y. M. C. A. and held eight services in various churches. Her presentation of truth was so simple, so direct, so gentle, so loving and so full of the Holy Spirit that it came home to the hearts of the listeners with great power. The hearts of sinners were melted with the love and tenderness of the message, and as they saw their helplessness, they also saw the One who is "mighty to save" and accepted Him.

The prohibitory campaign has been a great success. The total vote shows a gain of from one hundred to one hundred and fifty per cent all over the state. The grand rallies have wakened the sleepers and many are arousing to take their places next time. One of our W. C. T. U. women raised the money by solicitation to carry on a public meeting, pay for advertising, etc. It is needless to add that the meeting was a great success.

The bill asking for police matrons in the cities of our state, which was presented by Mrs. J. K. Barney, has passed the committee and the senate without an opposing vote and we hope that it will soon become a law. A bill asking for factory inspectors is also before the senate committee, and many of our W. C. T. U. are helping the Woman's Council to encourage the passage of the proposed measure. Two hearings have already been given and a third will soon be held.

Two of our unions have completed their pledges of one hundred dollars for the Temple. Demorest contests have proved very helpful in building prohibition sentiment in three towns, and other places will continue the work. Four new unions have been organized, and all are working in good order, growing in power and influence.

A state conference of the Y's, just held in Providence, brought together the earnest young women workers, and several excellent papers were presented by their members.

A meeting of the superintendents of scientific temperance instruction, under the leadership of Mrs. A. W. Chase, was held in connection with the thank-offering service. They reported good work accomplished. Many unions are placing Mrs. Hunt's Monthly Advices in the hands of teachers.

And so the work grows, and so the workers grow. We are glad that it is our privilege to learn God's ways by working with Him as He establishes His Kingdom in the earth.

MISSOURI.

FORWARD MARCH.

The president of the twenty-first district is arranging work in her district and hopes, ere summer arrives, to have her work reach fever heat in all lines and departments.

Appleton city union has accomplished much in the way of holding Demorest medal contests and social entertainments. An "old maids' and bachelors'" entertainment was recently held by this union which netted them forty-seven dollars. Mrs. M. M. Gibson will give information necessary concerning this unique entertainment to those desiring it. Petitions were circulated asking that the business men of the town refuse to rent buildings to any person who would use said building for the sale of intoxicating drinks. Nearly all their business men signed this petition which was the means of driving out one illegal business (?) firm.

Our thoughts are now turning to the delightful city of Sedalia as this is the place where our state convention expects to meet the first week in October. The union in this city extended its hospitality by giving a reception to their district president, Mrs. M. E. Golliday, who spoke at the Central Presbyterian church. Six new members were added to their union. Gospel temperance meetings are held in the various churches on Sunday afternoons. Mrs. Lenora Lake held meetings for one week here and organized a Catholic Woman's Temperance union of forty members, besides adding several new members to the old union. The superintendent of jail and prison work holds services every Sunday afternoon at the jail and in many of our departments excellent work is being done. Our state superintendent of fair work has sent out petitions to all the districts and urges that work be done now, before privileges are granted, hoping thereby to prevent the sale of intoxicants and prohibit gambling on the fair grounds in our state.

The Thayer L. T. L. gave an interesting entertainment which netted them five dollars. The church was beautifully decorated, and how well we know "a little child can lead them." The Thayer Y is doing excellent educational work by way of social entertainments which are well attended by the honoraries, some of whom have taken the pledge against tobacco.

Our state president is doing telling work as only she can do, organizing and adding new recruits to our white ribbon army. At Jamesport, ten new members were added to their union; after leaving this point she went to Gallatin and there organized a union of about forty members. At Maryville, where she addressed another immense audience, nineteen honorary members and eleven regular members were gained. In the afternoon a reception was given by the union at which Mrs. Hoffman explained the aims and work of the W. C. T. U., and seven more new members were added to their ranks, making thirty-seven new members. At Seneca she also spoke to a large audience and wherever her lectures have been well advertised large numbers have greeted her and great have been the results.

Seneca has held another Demorest medal contest, having now the required number of silver medals to form a class for the gold medal. The president of the union took the young ladies who recited in their last contest out to a country church and they gave the same recitations there to a large and delighted audience. This may be the means of forming a new union out in the country. This union has circulated petitions against the social evil bill and many letters were written to members of our legislature. A committee was sent to confer with the county court asking that they refuse to grant license in Seneca. This request was not heeded as these women were "not their constituency," and one of the members of the court was not compos mentis. Two very interesting lectures were delivered here by Mr. E. H. Benham, who is an earnest advocate of prohibition and a friend to the W. C. T. U.

In the twenty-third district work is progressing and Mrs. Cushing, their president, hopes to bring their membership up to five hundred before our state convention meets. The public school of Marionville gave a Demorest medal contest in connection with their closing exercises, which was a new feature and was well received. Mrs. Mary L. Woods, county president of Lawrence county, together with the Marionville local union, sent requests to the presbytery of the Cumberland Presbyterian church (which recently met) that they approve of granting equal church privileges to men and women; of Mrs. Ingalls' anti-tobacco petition, and that they disapprove of ministers and laymen using tobacco in churches, which is so common in country places. All these requests were granted, recommended and signed officially.

A W. C. T. U. reunion was held at Verona, with cheering results. The mayor, clergy and citizens were in attendance, and gave warm words of welcome and good cheer. A contest was held, with excellent results. The question-box was also a source of information. "How to rid the county of the illegal sale of intoxicants?" was discussed at length, and the people are saying, "Saloons must go." Five minute speeches from the local presidents were eagerly listened to. This was, indeed, an excellent meeting. Mr. M. Edward Clark gave a dramatic recital for the benefit of the Marionville W. C. T. U., which was highly entertaining and instructive. Edgewood enjoyed the silver medal contest, which was well attended.

Lamar is doing energetic, systematic work, and as the state superintendent of flower-mission work resides here, this department is receiving its due attention. The Craig union has given two very entertaining parlor socials, about fifty guests being present at each. Programs, consisting of papers, recitations and excellent music, were rendered, and delicious refreshments served; twelve new members were gained. Many petitions have been circulated. This union sewed one afternoon for the benefit of a widow with four small children. They also sewed two other afternoons, for the benefit of the Christian Home, at Council Bluffs, Iowa, which is in charge of Rev. Lemon, son of our beloved Mother Lemon, late of Neosho. About fifty garments were made, besides some money collected. Items are kept in the local papers; scientific temperance instruction is taught thoroughly in the public schools. Temperance is taught in the Sunday-schools, and where can any other union in a town of less than five hundred inhabitants show a better record?

Stockton held a very enjoyable mite-box social, and when the boxes were opened they were found to contain over thirty dollars. This more than finished paying their one hundred dollar pledge for the Temple. The monthly district meeting held at St. Louis W. C. T. U. headquarters reports excellent work done. They were enthused by having with them Rev. Mr. McElhenny, of Rochester, N. Y., who was traveling in the interest of the National Sunday-school union, and conducted the opening devotional exercises. They were also highly favored by having at this meeting the National lecturer of narcotics Mrs. Bullock, of New York. She urged that the white-ribboners put forth their best efforts for the cause during the World's Fair, and encouraged the workers by saying there was an increased enthusiasm in our work all through the country. Presidents of local unions and superintendents reported gain in membership and work done showing good results. A special committee had done nobly in securing needed legislation for social purity. Hundreds of pledge cards had been signed by the children and sent to Miss Gordon to be used in decorating this department at the World's Fair. These unions all promised to keep self-denial week. L. T. L. work is being carried on with good results. The departments of health and heredity have made unusual progress, and suffrage work has been strengthened. Mrs. A. S. Benjamin has given instruction in parliamentary law, as only she can. Several of the notable housekeepers of St. Louis have spoken on food adulteration and healthful cookery, the Aladdin oven and other similar subjects. Miss Ida Clothier organized a Y which promises to be a very efficient addition to our ranks, and much interest was awakened by her coming.

The meeting of our state executive committee in Kansas City, recently held, was a very instructive business meeting and much was accomplished for the good of our work. Mrs. E. B. Eversol, of 614 Campbell St., Springfield, was appointed state superintendent of railroad work. Our state paper, the Missouri Home Guard, will be published for the remainder of the year by Mrs. Lucy M. Wisker, of Sedalia. A vote of thanks was sent the former editor, Mrs. Sarah H. King, for her efforts and hard work in making it possible for us to have a state paper at all. The central union entertained the members of this committee and our beloved state president entertained us all for lunch. All these kindnesses are the oasis in the desert of action. A W. C. T. U. woman's life is a busy one.

KANSAS CULLINGS.

The "angel of death" has again spread its wings over the home of our state president, who was so recently bereft in one short day of son and grandson. This time a beloved daughter "entered into rest," April 5. Mrs. Grubb has been constant in attendance at her daughter's bedside for several months past, going from state to state with faint hopes of the beneficial effects of change of climate. Words of sympathy are of little avail at such a time, but our prayers are with her, that she may be sustained and comforted in this sad trial, and strengthened to go on in her life work for God and humanity.

Mrs. L. B. Smith, the efficient president of the second district, sends the following interesting report: "There has not been so much interest and enthusiasm among the unions of the second district along all lines of work for a long time, as thus far in 1893. The 'Denver Convention,' as it is now called, brought to us both Eastern and Western workers. Miss Jennie Smith, National railroad evangelist, with her zeal for saving souls, produced a stimulating desire to come into closer touch with all the needs of poor humanity. Miss Emma E. Page, of Wyoming, state superintendent of juvenile and mercy departments, also chairman of the state prohibition central committee by her broad and liberal views, and winning address, captured the hearts of our people.

"Miss Lydia A. Irons, of Lima, Ohio, National organizer for the mercy department, won for herself the just praise of the workers and the public in general. J. Howard Moore spoke with acceptance to the students of our schools of higher education, and further, our district is being stimulated by the prospect of a visit from another Western worker, Mrs. Ada W. Unruh, of Oregon, really a Kansas white-ribboner, only loaned for a season, to add 'grit and gumption' to our councils, and gifts and graces to our platform.

"The Demorest medal contests have proved another important factor. A matron's contest, under the direction of Miss Page, was held in Pomona, Franklin county, which can bring only good to every union who may try it both in interest, and 'sinews of war.' The orations were selected from the Demorest books, and the prize awarded—Miss West's book—'Childhood, its Care and Culture.' Mrs. Clara Parker was the successful competitor. The county presidents arranged county schools of methods during the months of April and May. This work has inspired the best thought and closer study of methods, by our county and local leaders, and is probably one of the leading causes of increasing interest in details of work not known before."

The fourth district held its semi-annual meeting at Douglas, Butler county, but on account of its being on the extreme southern boundary of the district and also of the variableness of March weather but few delegates were in attendance. The W. C. T. U., the I. O. G. T. and the churches bade them a hearty welcome which was responded to by Mrs. Flenner of El Dorado, following which were addresses by Miss E. May Jaquith, Mrs. Hazelrigg, and Mrs. Ella Brown. The county president's reports were presented, and Miss O. P. Bray conducted a school of methods. A parliamentary drill was given by Mrs. Ella Brown of the first district, who also gave an able address in the evening on "Broaden the Outlook," followed by Rev. Rice of Augusta, who gave cordial words of encouragement to the W. C. T. U., and by Miss Bray with a short and pointed collection speech.

The plan of work committee urged increased activity in holding temperance mass meetings, and working up a suffrage sentiment favorable to the equal suffrage amendment to be voted upon at our next general election, which will be November, 1894. A gold medal contest occupied the last evening, Miss Adams of El Dorado winning the prize, but as a part of the class were not present, a "Cooper" gold medal was awarded instead of a "Demorest," the medal being purchased by the district W. C. T. U. The holder can compete again for a Demorest prize should she so desire.

The Wichita union reports attendance regular, new names being constantly added, and increased interest in all that pertains to the work. It meets regularly and has special days each month, assigned topics with appointed leaders. Miss Jennie Smith was with them in March. Under the inspiration of the W. C. T. U. a "Wayside Home" has been started with regularly arranged boards and workers for the rescue of all women who wish to turn from the paths of sin to those of virtue. Through the combined efforts of the "Woman's Council" of this place, in which the W. C. T. U. is represented, the bill requiring police matrons became a law. Colonel Bain, of Kentucky, gave one of his effective lectures. The county convention is to be held in May with the Maize union. A general feeling of encouragement prevails.

Mrs. Woodward, of Nebraska, National railroad evangelist, delivered five lectures in Hiawatha, recently, in the interest of her work, giving general satisfaction. Since Jennie Smith's visit to the place, the Hiawatha union has been agitating the subject of a reading room and lunch house for railroad men. At Mrs. Woodward's instigation a conference was held with railroad officials and others. After much discussion it was decided to take steps toward this end, and a committee was appointed to work among the railroad men, and one to work among the citizens to solicit funds for the construction of a suitable building.

Lyon county convention was held in Emporia. In the absence of the president, Mrs. Dr. Irvine conducted the sessions. Eleven delegates were present. Fremont is the banner union for juvenile work, and members of its L. T. L. came ten miles and gave some very fine recitations and songs. Mrs. Coman and Mrs. Ruggles were chosen to represent the county at the World's Temperance Convention in Chicago. Dr. Kirkwood delivered a fine address in the evening. The primary class of the state normal school, led by Miss Harris, sang several enjoyable songs.

NOTES.

State executive meeting was held at Leavenworth, April 6 and 7.

The colored union of Paola recently held a medal contest, eight contestants. Miss Mossie Ellison received the medal, and Miss Nellie Thomas a book. This is the third or fourth contest held in the state among the colored people.

Lawrence union has sent one hundred dollars to the Temple.

At the third district convention one hundred subscriptions were taken for Our Messenger, and about forty for THE UNION SIGNAL.

The protective home, which is under the wing of the North Leavenworth colored union, received an appropriation of $1,800 from the recent legislature. This amount will be a great help to the work which they are so creditably carrying on.

Marion union not long since held a "souvenir social," the "souvenir" being a card tied with the white ribbon, and bearing diagonally across its face the letters W. C. T. U., also the date, in fancy type.

The state W. C. T. U. and the state temperance union recommended that the people of Kansas celebrate May 1, the anniversary of our prohibitory law, by appropriate exercises.

Burlington union have had two lectures from Rev. C. H. St. John, and are assisting in conducting a girls' industrial school in that place.

Mrs. Ella W. Brown, our W. C. T. U. lawyer, who is also president of the first district, has issued a pamphlet on parliamentary rules, of which it would be well for all unions to have a copy. Mrs. Brown was assistant counsel for county attorney in a recent liquor trial, and, though ruled out of court, went to the supreme court with the case.

Cedar Grove union holds monthly gospel temperance meetings, alternately between the Presbyterian and Methodist churches, with large and attentive audiences, distributing literature at the close of the meetings. The young people assist by songs and recitations. The ministers are in thorough sympathy, and have delivered several good temperance addresses.

Emporia worked heroically in circulating petitions to the city council, asking for the suppression of illegal liquor selling. Would it not be wiser to work as heroically to elect a council that will suppress such places without being petitioned to do their duty?

The result of the spring housecleaning, politically speaking, was highly satisfactory to all friends of equal suffrage in the state, and won even from its opponents the general verdict that "Kansas women want to vote." In some towns more women voted than men, and in many places a much larger per cent of those who registered. The terrible scarecrow of the "bad women" who would flock to the polls, was blown down by the spring cyclone of good women's ballots, and in all places the presence of so many women at the polling precincts was acknowledged to have resulted in a most orderly conducted election, and none were molested when they exercised the privilege of citizenship. Country women like myself cannot vote. It is probable that all the "danger" to women voters would now center in the rural districts should the amendment pass, and all the "bad women" of the country would turn out and carry the elections. Alas! What dangers now threaten our commonwealth from the prospective country woman voter.

THE second district Wisconsin W. C. T. U., May 4, passed glowing resolutions condemning any attempt to ignore the law and the will of the people as expressed through Congress, by opening the World's Fair on the Sabbath.

LOUISIANA STATE CONVENTION.

The Louisiana W. C. T. U. was well represented in the women who met at Lake Charles, April 20, to attend to the work of the year in this most southern of the Southern states. The call was responded to by eighty-eight delegates of the unions along the great lines of our railroads from New Orleans and the northern towns of Alexandria, Shreveport, Monroe, etc.

A noble looking band of earnest workers was present to respond to roll-call when our president, Mrs. M. R. Goodale, took the chair and all the deliberations of the whole convention were of the faithful, firm and fitting type. Never has it been my pleasure to attend a convention where business of moment and interest was so rapidly and systematically dispatched. Mrs. Goodale, the untiring head of the W. C. T. U. work of Louisiana, is a woman of quick perception and executive ability. Her address on Thursday evening was a résumé of the work of the past year. Laborers in the old fields have revived the work; in new fields good beginnings have been made. Much of this actual labor has been done by such women as Mrs. H. C. Pharr, Mrs. Kate Wilkins, Mrs. E. A. White and others of the district vice-presidents who have coöperated with Miss Bell Kearney and Mrs. Snell, in spreading the work of temperance in our fair state. The report on the work done in the legislature was appreciated. Three bills were carried through and that fact will give greater help and strength to woman and her cause. Mrs. Goodale's address will be printed in full in the minutes of the convention.

The secretaries, Mrs. Alice M. Zable and Mrs. E. A. White, were present at every meeting and did good and faithful service in making the meeting a success and also in preparing the reports of the convention's work. Mrs. M. L. Wells, National organizer, was present during the entire session and took the evangelistic work in Mrs. M. M. Snell's absence, with great acceptability, speaking twice to large audiences. Miss Myrtle Shively of the Y's is full of enthusiasm in the work and will do all possible to lead the young women of Louisiana to a higher plane.

This company of representative women was entertained with commendable success by the Lake Charles union assisted by many of the ladies of the city who, while not claiming affiliation with the temperance union, do sympathize with the organization that has for its object the welfare of womankind. The hall in the new court-house was decorated with bunting and flags and Southland roses, and every day the president had on her desk a fresh bouquet of her favorite star jessamine. The excursions given to the delegates were resting places of enjoyment and sociability. On the belt line, Mr. Watkins' road, they were escorted to the sugar factory and rice mill at Gossport. On the steamer Hazel they had a lovely afternoon trip down the winding, charming Calcasean as far as Prian's Lake.

No convention would be perfect without a presentation, so this could not pass without one, but in place of one came a shower. A gavel made of Southern woods was presented by Miss Della Neal to the state union; a bed-quilt made by the ladies of Bayou Sara was presented to the Lake Charles union; a souvenir spoon was given by the delegates to Mrs. Alice M. Zable, and a jeweled pin to Miss Della Neal. Life memberships were presented to twelve worthy ladies by private parties or by unions or delegates at large.

The officers for the coming year are: President, Mrs. M. R. Goodale; vice-president, Mrs. H. C. Pharr; secretary, Mrs. Emma A. White; treasurer, Mrs. S. A. Knapp; corresponding secretary, Mrs. A. M. Zable; superintendent of Y's, Miss Myrtle Shively; state organizer, Miss Della A. Neal. Five directors were elected, with Mrs. F. A. Lyons as president. Eighteen superintendents of the different departments of work were also elected.

Saturday evening was given to the Young Woman's Christian Temperance Union. The exercises were conducted in a manner which reflects credit on the Y delegates and also the Y's of Lake Charles. It would take too long to tell all the good things of the evening, but "Sam's Letter" drew many "audible smiles" from the large audience there assembled. A children's meeting was held in the court-house on Sunday afternoon.

The convention adjourned feeling confident that the temperance fire was still burning, and that He who rules the winds will send showers of blessing over all our state from the meeting of eighty strong-hearted, firm-minded, God-fearing women, in the little city of Lake Charles on the Calcasean.

"THOSE EYOTA Y'S"

This is the heading that has appeared in some newspapers lately, some of the notices concerning them being very complimentary, and some rather inclined to make fun of the bright girls who did a deed that has made themselves and their little town famous in temperance circles. Seeing the above heading in one of our city dailies, I wrote to the corresponding secretary of the Y's in Eyota for the real facts of the matter. Two replies came, one from the secretary, the other from the president, giving the true version in a simple, unaffected manner, the writers seeming to have no thought of having done anything remarkable at all. They simply saw an opportunity to do some practical temperance work, and did it.

The circumstances were these: Last year the town voted no-license. The advocates of the liquor traffic, including some of the most influential citizens, declared that without the license fees the town could not afford to keep the street lamps lighted. Surely such men must be those who "loved darkness rather than light, because their deeds were evil." When this decision became known, the members of the Young Woman's Christian Temperance Union took it upon themselves to keep the lamps trimmed and burning. The necessary funds were raised by popular subscription, and each lamp was given into the care of a young lady, who is responsible for it. By this volunteer work on their part, they not only keep the town lighted, but have dealt a telling blow at alcohol. Are they not girls to be proud of? I wish the whole 200,000 members of our National union might give them, unitedly, a hearty three cheers. But, better than that, we can give them our united prayers, that they may ever be thus earnest for the right, and may God bless them.

The last temperance Sunday of the international lessons was a red-letter day in St. Paul. Never before had such concerted work for temperance been done. It was all planned, work begun and everything arranged a month before the day came. The state superintendent of Sunday-school work, Mrs. L. W. Irvine, began by calling a conference of the superintendents from the local city unions, and it was there decided to make a vigorous effort to have the day observed in all the churches as temperance Sunday. In order that there might be a general coöperation of all the churches, a printed call was issued for a larger conference of pastors, Sabbath-school superintendents and members of all the young people's societies. The result was a large gathering of representatives from nearly every denomination, including Scandinavian and German churches.

The plan presented and adopted was to have each pastor preach a temperance sermon in the morning. In the Sunday-schools the lesson was to be carefully taught, and some special exercises, including pledge signing. In the young people's societies, also, there should be special temperance programs, and wherever it was thought best a union evening service in the interests of temperance. A committee was appointed to see every pastor and request that, if possible, work be done along these lines.

The result was most encouraging. From almost every pulpit in the city on that day sounded forth the truths of righteousness and temperance, including prohibition. Morning service, Sabbath-school and evening young people's gatherings were all given over for the once to this especial topic, while in many localities several churches united in one grand service. The conference of unions, at Mrs. Irvine's request, held a gospel temperance mass-meeting in the afternoon, which was not least among the meetings of the day, Central Park M. E. church being crowded. Here the W. C. T. U. women naturally led the service, Mrs. Irvine presiding, and Mrs. Julia B. Nelson and Mrs. F. L. Ames giving short addresses. Why cannot all the unions follow out the same thought when the next temperance Sunday rolls round, and "make a chain" throughout the land?

Paynesville union has been hard at work. The state organizer, Mrs. Fannie L. Ames, was with them just before election, and as she says, the ladies had planned to "make the most of her." She gave three addresses to large audiences—they know how to advertise their meetings in Paynesville. The last lecture was in the German Evangelical church on Sunday evening. Several new members were added to the union, including several honorary members, among whom were the pastors of the three leading churches. The Germans took a decided interest and expressed a willingness to help the cause of temperance. Despite all these efforts both Paynesville and New Paynesville carried license at the election, but the ladies of the union are not discouraged. On the contrary their president writes, "We have great reason to be thankful. Mrs. Ames did us much good and our ministers stand by us and help us in every possible way." One member of this union deserves especial mention. Although she has a large family and is never strong, yet she went around during the winter with the World's Petition, and secured seventy names thereto. The children of the L. T. L. recently gave a Willard Fountain entertainment and raised over five dollars.

AFTERMATH FROM THE LEGISLATURE.

The cigarette bill passed both houses and received the governor's signature, but whether it will be really effectual remains to be seen. A reporter who claims to have made a tour of this city since the passage of the bill, states that cigarettes are being sold as indiscriminately as ever, and that as a rule boys can still smoke if they have the money to pay for cigarettes (parents, please take notice of that last clause). But the reporter admits that there is one way in which the new law may become helpful. If any one wishes to institute a campaign against the sale of cigarettes to minors under sixteen, such a person has the law behind him, or more likely her.

The Woman's Improvement League of this city has already taken the matter up and appointed a committee to look into it. This committee at the last meeting reported that the new law was practically void. If this be true, it is another proof of the necessity of women in politics. Men have fooled at law-making long enough, but when they come to fool with laws to protect our children, we shall be hardly less criminal if we do not demand the right to protect the helpless little ones ourselves. I confess that just now I need some one to remind me of Miss Willard's motto, "Keep sweet." But there is such a thing as righteous indignation, and looking into the clear eyes of my own boy and the bright faces of my neighbors' boys, it makes me quiver with indignation to think that they can't have as much protection as the birds of our fields, and then to think of a whole legislature spending its time making a law that does not amount to anything!

The woman's suffrage bill did not pass. But probably its passing the senate has been a great help educationally, and we will hope for better things next time, not forgetting through the two years that must intervene before another legislature to improve every opportunity to—sweetly—carry on this warfare, for it is more and more apparent that in the suffrage question lies the solution to very many other questions.

NEWS IN A NUTSHELL.

AFTER spending four months among the W. C. T. unions of Southern California, Mrs. L. E. Bailey is filling a course of fourteen lectures in New Mexico, following which she goes to North Dakota to work six months under the direction of the state prohibition party.

THE police matron bill for which Mrs. J. K. Barney petitioned, has become a law in Rhode Island. It provides for a police matron in every city in that state and two in the city of Providence, and that they must each be recommended by twenty women before their appointment.

MRS. EVA C. HIGGINS, Colorado's W. C. T. U. president, writes: "The last legislature of Colorado submitted the question of woman's suffrage to the people to be voted upon at the next general election. If carried, we will stand with our sister state, Wyoming, the second true republic. The outlook is favorable."

AN "old folks' contest," conducted on the same plan as the Demorest medal contests, with young folks as judges, was given by the Tekamah, Neb., W. C. T. U. recently. A ten cent admission fee was charged, the only work required being that of securing speakers, and eleven dollars in the treasury was the result.

THE Marquette, Mich., Loyal Temperance Legion, organized three months ago, is in active service. Thirty pledge cards have been sent for the World's Fair chain, and $20.20 have been collected for the Willard Fountain. An unused school room on a principal street has been fitted up as headquarters for the W. C. T. U. and Young Woman's Branch through the energy of the members and the kindness of friends.

A PRIZE prohibition oratorical contest will take place at Evanston, Friday evening, May 19, under the auspices of the Prohibition Club of the College of Liberal Arts, Northwestern University, and is preliminary to the succeeding state and national contests. These are organized and managed by the College Prohibition Club which has chapters in all leading colleges and universities of America. The winner of the preliminary contest will compete for a prize with representatives from all the leading colleges of Illinois, and the winner of the state contest with representatives of each of the other states.

AN editorial from THE UNION SIGNAL entitled, "Conclusions of Women," was thought so good by a subscriber that she clipped and sent it to the Locomotive Engineer's Monthly Journal which printed it by a mistake without due credit to THE UNION SIGNAL. Instead the sender's initials were given and she now writes to give this explanation.

MRS. MARY C. UPHAM, Marshfield, Wisconsin, National superintendent and Wisconsin superintendent W. C. T. U. camp work, in her annual printed report of work done in Wisconsin gives an excellent showing of the effort to interest and help the lumbermen in isolated camps by supplying them with good literature in pleasing variety and abundance, and in sending gospel temperance missionaries into their midst.

AN active, consecrated and zealous spirit and faultless weather characterized the annual convention of Monterey, Santa Cruz and San Benito, California counties, April 12-14. There are fourteen unions with a membership of over 300 and nearly as many in the L. T. L. of the tri-county union. Three reading-rooms are supported and another one is under way. Excellent work is being done in press, Sabbath observance, scientific temperance instruction, closing saloons on Sunday, and in many other lines.

SIX counties in the southeastern part of the state comprise the fifth district of Nebraska W. C. T. U., which held a convention at Hebron, April 25. Thirty officers and delegates were present, beside a number of visitors. A good number of towns in the district have declared for prohibition, and it contains forty-four unions, numbering 578 active, and 111 associate and honorary members. The reports were all good, the workers in the district having taken hold of all the departments of work adopted by the National W. C. T. U. A pleasing episode was the presentation of a purse containing fifty dollars from the district unions to the veteran district superintendent, Mrs. Putnam, who is seventy-two years old.

REV. S. H. POTTER, a well-known Methodist preacher of western New York, and a warm friend of the W. C. T. U., recently preached a very earnest sermon from the text, "I will pour out my spirit upon all flesh," Acts 2:17. He proceeded to show that "the last days," referred to the present dispensation, that now Jew and Gentile, bond and free, male and female were to ask for, expect, and receive the Holy Spirit, to fully fit them for their work. He wittily said, "I suppose if my friend and brother, Dr. Buckley, had been present when this promise was made, he no doubt would have moved to amend, by inserting the word male in our text so that it would read, 'I will pour out my spirit upon all male flesh.'"

A CORRESPONDENT sends the following suggestion to housekeepers: "I have just used the last of the fruit that I put up last summer. I did not heat or seal the fruit, just put it up cold. Get fresh fruit, wash it clean, put it in three or four gallon common earthen jars and press it down as much as you can without injuring it. Take two ounces of powdered comp. extract of salix, (you can get it at any drug store) dissolve it in four gallons of boiling water, and when cool pour on enough to cover the fruit. The salix prevents fermentation and the water keeps the air from the fruit. Every jar kept perfectly fresh. The fruit looked and tasted just as it did when picked. I think it strange that everybody does not put up fruit in this way as it is certainly elegant and so cheap and healthy."

HISTORY OF WILLARD FOUNTAIN.

A number of letters have reached me, expressing surprise that the commission for the L. T. L. Willard fountain was not placed with an American sculptor, and I should be grateful for the publication of the following explanation. While it seems altogether appropriate that the mother country should furnish the artist for this gift from the little people of the World's W. C. T. U., it was my full intention from the first to secure the work of an American, and a woman sculptor. Miss Anne Whitney, of Boston, was asked to accept the commission when the plan was first projected; she declined to furnish a special model as desired, but made us a generous offer of a figure already in clay which she thought would answer our purpose. Some months then intervened before I saw the figure in Miss Whitney's studio. Like all this celebrated sculptor's work the design was unique in conception and exquisite in finish, representing a boy cupid, rising from a base of lily leaves and holding above his head a broad leaf from which the water fell in fine spray into the basin below. My earnest wish had been to

Don't do the washing yourself? You still need Pearline. Every one of these rubs is wearing the things washed. They suffer, if you don't. Millions now use Pearline. make our proposed fountain an expression of the temperance reform, and if possible to have it represent a child in the attitude of offering a cup of water to the passers-by. As a matter of course, Miss Whitney's model had not been made with any such thought in mind, and yet it was so beautiful, and was the work of an artist so justly renowned, that for a long time I hoped we might become its happy possessor. Later it grew more evident that the delicate beauty of the statue made it less suitable for a street fountain than for a park or some indoor location, and it was suggested that it might be placed in the rotunda of the Temple. In that case a bronze basin was necessary, which would have made the financial outlay beyond our means, for the children's enthusiasm centered around an outdoor fountain where animals as well as "humans" could find refreshment, and it was feared that they would not work with the same interest if the plans were changed.

Just at this time came the great sorrow in Miss Willard's home, and the necessity for change of scene, which led us to accept Lady Henry Somerset's generous invitation to visit her in England. On our second trip across the sea after returning to the Denver Convention, I felt obliged, with sincere reluctance, to relinquish Miss Whitney's fountain, and as we were to spend the winter in and near London, it was decided to give the order to a well-known sculptor there. By this means it has been possible to carry out our original thought in the design, and the sturdy little figure of a girl with her brimming cup will be loved by all who see it. Mr. George E. Wade, of London, is a distinguished young sculptor, and deserves all praise for the earnestness with which he has sought to realize, not only his own ideal, but ours, in this significant gift from the world's children to the city entertaining the Columbian Exposition.

UNFERMENTED WINE.

To State Superintendents:

MY DEAR CO-WORKERS:—I feel that I must ask your patient forbearance with my long silence and failure to communicate with you upon the work of our department. Unusual circumstances controlled my movements during the earlier part of the year, and the past two months I have been watching by the bedside of my beloved sister (now translated into the larger life and more glorious service of heaven). Other duties have arisen, which now demand my time and strength, so that I may still farther claim your patience—but I am trusting ere long I shall be able to give to this important work the attention which it demands. In the meantime, I beg that my co-laborers, who have the care of this department in the various states, will earnestly pursue their work, as heretofore. I will gladly answer all communications, and especially desire to hear from all superintendents who have been but recently appointed. Praying that God's richest blessing may rest upon all your labors, I am, most sincerely yours,

ELIZABETH GRIER HIBBEN,
National Superintendent.

PRISONERS' MEMORIAL TO THE FLOWER MISSION.

Dear Superintendents Flower Mission Department:—A few weeks ago I wrote letters to each state flower mission superintendent in regard to a request made by the prisoners in our Kentucky penitentiary that they be permitted to contribute toward erecting a monument in Cave Hill Cemetery to the memory of Miss Jennie Casseday, and in order that prisoners in every state be accorded the same privilege, an opportunity be afforded them not later than June 9, this being the day set apart by our beloved National superintendent for prison visitation, we deem it the most appropriate time. We feel assured, dear sisters, you are deeply interested in this matter. Please forward any contribution you receive from prisoners or any of our workers, (for we desire to give all an opportunity or part in this testimonial of love), to Mrs. Susan Warner, President Louisville Flower Mission, 503 W. Chestnut St., Louisville, Ky.

PETITION OF THE WORLD'S WOMAN'S CHRISTIAN TEMPERANCE UNION FOR THE PROTECTION OF THE HOME.

Addressed to the Governments of the World.

Honored Rulers, Representatives and Brothers:

We, your Petitioners, although belonging to the physically weaker sex, are strong of heart to love our homes, our native land, and the world's family of nations.

We know that clear brains and pure hearts make honest lives and happy homes, and that by these the nations prosper, and the time is brought nearer when the world shall be at peace.

We know that indulgence in Alcohol and Opium, and in other vices which disgrace our social life, makes misery for all the world, and most of all for us and for our children.

We know that stimulants and opiates are sold under legal guarantees which make the Governments partners in the traffic, by accepting as revenue a portion of the profits, and we know with shame that they are often forced by treaty upon populations, either ignorant or unwilling.

We know that the law might do much, now left undone, to raise the moral tone of society and render vice difficult.

We have no power to prevent these great iniquities beneath which the whole world groans, but you have power to redeem the honor of the nations from an indefensible complicity.

We therefore come to you with the united voices of representative women of every land, beseeching you to raise the standard of the law to that of Christian morals, to strip away the safeguards and sanctions of the state from the drink traffic and the opium trade, and to protect our homes by the total prohibition of these curses of civilization throughout all the territory over which your Government extends.

NAMES. | RESIDENCES.

Will not everybody who loves the great cause of home protection, send to Mrs. Mary A. Woodbridge, Ravenna, O., for the regular form and circulate it to the best of her ability, mailing the names to Miss Alice E. Briggs, Evanston, Ill.?

Our Library Table.

The May PANSY is bright as the spring it heralds in. The seventh chapter of Pansy's story, "Only Ten Cents," is one of thrilling interest. "Transplanted Blossoms" by Myra Spafford, is a strong temperance tale. In "American Literature Papers," Elizabeth Abbott talks charmingly about William Cullen Bryant and James Russell Lowell.

D. Lothrop Co., Boston, Mass.

In the May issue of the REVIEW of REVIEWS appears a lengthy summary of Eugen Richter's "Pictures of the Future," bearing the title, "How a Socialist Millennium would Work." The summary has been prepared by Miss Werner, hitherto the reviewer of the German periodicals for the magazine in question. "Pictures of the Future" is compared to "Looking Backward," but Richter's delineations are as intensely gloomy and full of despair as Bellamy's are brilliant and surcharged with hope. Families are broken up, personal rights set rudely aside, sacred institutions violated —everything sacrificed for the "state"; doubt grows into misery, misery into insanity, death, suicide.

The May issue of the CALIFORNIAN ILLUSTRATED MAGAZINE bears upon its cover the magic legend of the times, The Columbian Exposition, in accordance with which J. J. Peatfield contributes a beautifully illustrated article, giving a brief history of fairs in general and descriptive of the World's Fair in particular. The illustrators are F. R. Standish, A. P. Niles, W. K. Briggs, Paul Tillaux, Harry K. Hopps, N. A. S. Goodloe, H. J. Breuer and J. W. Cantrell. An article of very special interest to Californians is by "An Amiable Critic" and entitled "Some California Writers." Portraits are given of Ambrose Bierce, "a perfect master of the technique of style"; Gertrude Atherton, who "ought to make important additions to California literature"; John Vance Cheney, "a New Englander who excels in lyrics of the woods and the field"; Mrs. Sarah B. Cooper, the friend of the children of the poor, etc., etc.

The Californian Publishing Co., San Francisco, Cal.

In the May number of OUR DAY appears the reprint of an article by Hugh Price Hughes, from the London Methodist Times, entitled "India's Three Moral Cancers." A few sentences may be quoted that will give in brief the central thoughts of this article: "Let us go to Lucknow. . . . . We enter the Serai—a barracks for fallen women, containing nearly a hundred one-room dwellings, built, owned and maintained by our representatives in India. Each room in that British barracks of shame is numbered and occupied by a registered native woman. . . . . These are obtained principally from the large class of child-widows. There is also an official tariff for sin. Such places exist in nearly every military quarter in India. Every year ten thousand soldiers, or 'mere boys,' as Lord Wolseley calls them, are sent out to India for five years, and there by the English government are drawn into vice by a system which the British nation has refused to tolerate at home, and which was utterly unknown in India until we introduced it." "Our opium traffic is a triple infamy. It curses India, Burma and China. . . . . One point to which our attention is particularly called is this: The Roman Catholic, the German, the Swiss, the Scandinavian, the American and British churches of China and Japan, without one exception, exclude the opium smoker, grower and seller from church membership. For the sake of revenue we tempt men with that the ordinary use of which will debar them from becoming members of the different Christian churches." "The evils of the liquor traffic in India, as of the opium trade, are due to frantic efforts to raise the revenue. The drink traffic in India is managed by the government, and the root of the evil is in the central distillery system. By it the government owns and runs great gin distilleries, which are managed from top to bottom by government officials. At these distilleries a burning, fiery, poisonous liquor is made. . . . English soldiers are not allowed to touch it. . . . . On the natives, however, it is forced at every turn," etc., etc. "The unsophisticated Christian public at home will now be able to judge for themselves the moral significance of the fact that a Decennial Conference of Christian missionaries in India, face to face with the awful evils we have partially disclosed, refused to condemn them lightly dismissing the whole subject as 'a point of procedure.'" In connection with these articles appears the protest forwarded to Bishop Thoburn on behalf of the World's W. C. T. U. signed by Frances E. Willard, Lady Henry Somerset and others.

QUARTERLY TEMPERANCE LESSON.

The Quarterly Temperance Lesson for Sunday, May 21, has been carefully prepared by Mrs. Helen G. Rice, superintendent of Loyal Temperance Legion work.

The topic is "A Warning Against Strong Drink," with the Golden Text: "Wine is a mocker, strong drink is raging; and whosoever is deceived thereby is not wise." Prov. 20:1.

The striking picture of the drunkard as shown in the Word of God (Prov. 29:33-35) though not pleasant to contemplate, is hideously true. An analysis of the portrait discloses six of its saddest features: Woe and sorrow; contentions; babbling; wounds without cause; redness of eyes. In verse 31 is revealed God's sure remedy for drunkenness, which is obedience to the strongest possible command, "Look not." In the following verse is the reason for this remedy.

For primary classes verse 31 suggests an object lesson for blackboard illustrations, from which a tactful teacher may evolve many impressive truths, and may emphasize the insidious and evil effects of the poison of alcohol. Pictures of insects which bite or sting may be drawn, and the fact developed that while some bites or stings, though painful, are not lasting in effect, other poisons will kill quickly, and that the poison of alcohol, which biteth like a serpent and stingeth like an adder, will kill if a man drinks it.

The lesson closes with a story for the L. T. L's upon the words: "Thou shalt not take the name of the Lord thy God in vain."

The Quarterly Lesson is issued, as usual, as a supplement to the May number of The Young Crusader.

In the White Ribbon Banner, the official organ of the W. C. T. U. of Connecticut, a plan was recently presented for a special series of temperance meetings in the churches, with a view to a concerted presentation of gospel truth. It was suggested that at the conclusion of these services temperance leaflets should be distributed. We publish a series of leaflets called "Timely Talks," which are designed for this especial object. This series covers a great range of topics, aiming to touch all phases of the temperance question. We will send the entire set, 40 in number, for 15 cents. From these samples you can order especial numbers at the rate of 30 cents a hundred; $2.50 per thousand.

Buffalo Lithia Water

In Rheumatic Gout---Cold Water Against Hot Water in this Malady.

General Colton Greene, President of the State Savings Bank of Memphis, Tenn., Leaves His Crutches at Buffalo Lithia Springs---Value of this Water in Gout, Uric-Acid Diathesis, Etc., Etc.

BUFFALO LITHIA SPRINGS, VA., September 29, 1892.

Colonel Thomas F. Goode:

Dear Sir:—It is now four weeks since I reached Buffalo Lithia Springs, suffering from the effects of recurrent attacks of acute articular gout in both feet, which had lasted and confined me to bed for two months. Though I had biennally, sometimes annually, suffered for short periods, the malady on this last occasion was more violent than before, and threatened to take a chronic form. My digestive organs were impaired, my health was shattered, I was crippled, and calcareous deposits were appearing on both feet. Directly on my arrival I copiously used the water of Spring No. 2 conjointly with daily hot baths. A fortnight later I was in condition to walk without the use of crutches, the swelling and inflammation of the parts had measurably subsided, and my health improved. To-day my general health is better than it has been in twelve months, the deposition of uric-acid sediment is dissipated, and my feet, though sensitive to pressure, are restored to their normal condition.

Respectfully yours, COLTON GREENE.

BUFFALO LITHIA WATER.
Its Great Triumph in Rheumatic Gout.

Statement of Mr. Charles Bernaschina, of Hot Springs, Ark.

Proprietor of Buffalo Lithia Springs, Va.:

Dear Sir:—I cheerfully place at your disposal the following statement, showing the remarkable benefit which I have derived from the Buffalo Lithia Waters in a case of Gout. I am a resident of the Hot Springs, Ark. In October, 1885, I was attacked with Rheumatic Gout in a very severe form, being confined to my bed until the April following. For fourteen consecutive months I used the hot baths, and visited many of the noted mineral resorts of the country, and from time to time since have made use of the hot baths, but without finding any relief. Chalky deposits formed in most of my joints; I was unable to walk or to use my hands. Four months ago to-day I arrived at these Springs, and was for some time after confined to my bed. At the expiration of six weeks slight improvement was perceptible, the chalky deposits began to disappear, and I have continued to improve to the present time, and to an extent that I consider, under the circumstances, almost marvelous, the chalky deposits having almost disappeared. I am now in vigorous general health, and walk readily and actively, walking often several miles over the surrounding hills, and am able to use my hands in dressing myself and at the table, which I was not able to do previous to coming to the Springs.

You are doubtless aware of the fact that my case has attracted unusual attention among your many guests from all parts of the country.

Yours very respectfully,
August 6th, 1892. CHAS. BERNASCHINA.

timony to the good effected by the association, and of the deep interest in its work felt by his brother, the Gaekwar of Baroda. Two returned missionaries expressed like views, and most encouraging reports were presented on the different phases of the society's operations. Last year forty-five new branches were formed, bringing the total number to one hundred and thirty-one. The list of these societies is deeply interesting, showing as it does the great preponderance of native Indians who fill the offices. The reports of their meetings are no less striking, and evidence frequently a most intelligent grasp of the great principles of the temperance reformation. Among resolutions passed by the annual council was one sending to these one hundred and thirty-one societies warm fraternal greetings, and urging them to constant and increasing efforts in the direction of temperance, and to unsleeping vigilance over the administration of the excise laws in their respective provinces. Three members of Parliament spoke to this resolution. Sir Wilfrid Lawson, Baronet, as representing the great body of temperance reformers, Mr. J. Herbert Roberts, one of the "young Wales" party in Parliament, and Sir William Wedderburn, Baronet, once a high placed Indian official, but whose sympathies are all with the people, and whose recent return to the House of Commons is a signal gain to the cause of India. Another resolution passed was congratulatory upon a Parliamentary success recently achieved by means of judicious pressure—the appointment of a commission of experts to inquire into the cultivation of and trade in gauga and other deleterious hemp drugs, their effects upon the social and moral well-being of the people, and the desirability of prohibiting their growth, manufacture and sale. This commission is to comprise a due proportion of non-official natives of India, and the subject of the inquiry will prove to be one of vast importance, and of wide reaching influence on the welfare of India. The association issues a quarterly magazine, Abkari, so named from the Indian word, signifying excise system. Every issue testifies to the great interest involved, to the beneficent effect of the temperance work led by the association, and to the salutary progress which follows its labors.

THE WOMAN VOTE IN WASHINGTON.

DEAR UNION SIGNAL:—The women of the state of Washington have been quite aroused over the statement recently made by Dr. Buckley, that woman suffrage was tried in the territory of Washington and there was no particular interest taken in it, and that the female vote was very light. I am in receipt of several letters from that state, the testimony of which is quite contrary.

Mrs. Stella W. Traver, ex-secretary of East Washington W. C. T. U., now secretary of the state Baptist Board of Women's Missions, says: "My first vote was cast at Spokane in 1884. Although the day was unpleasant and the polling place unpleasant, quite a large number of the ladies voted. The following spring I was clerk in one of the wards in the city election, one of the judges being also a lady. The day passed very quietly and pleasantly and the representation of ladies was good. In June, 1886, I again acted as a clerk and by actual count one-third of the voters were ladies and to them was ascribed the victory on the local option fight. Depriving women of their ballot was shutting out much of the sunlight of prosperity in our young, growing state."

Mrs. Hattie Hill, superintendent of work in penal institutions in Eastern Washington, and president of Walla Walla county W. C. T. U. says: "As far as my knowledge goes, Dr. Buckley's statements are not true. The greater part of the women vote and take a lively interest in political matters. Some of us are still at it and will continue to be until the end comes. My motto is, 'Nothing is settled until it is settled right.' "

Miss H. Maria Peet, who has held many prominent offices in local, county and state unions, says: "I know that the women of Washington seemed to enjoy the liberty granted, and deplore the robbery of their rights. The intelligent felt it thoroughly, and expressed themselves as being wronged."

J. D. McIntyre, treasurer of the Central committee of the Prohibition party of Washington, states: "Any one who makes an assertion that the women's vote in Washington was light, does it either with the intention to falsify or from ignorance. Suffrage was taken from the women by the action of the liquor dealers of this state. I believe there are very few women who would not use the ballot if they had it, and consider it a great boon."

Mrs. H. Cowley, president of Spokane union, testifies: "I know that the women voted. There were fewer women than men who failed to vote. I was one of the clerks at one election and judge at another. I know women will vote, if they have the opportunity, and that intemperance would suffer from their voice had they a share in legislation."

Residents of Klickitat county, Washington, say: "We know that the Rev. Buckley's statements that no particular interest was taken in suffrage, and that the female vote was light, are utterly false. A deep interest was manifested, and the greater part of the women voted. Our women not only voted, but sat as jurors and clerks of election. The ends of justice were never arrived at with speedier precision." This was signed by thirty persons, representing all the different precincts of Klickitat county.

Other leaders, like J. W. Rouge, Judge Dunbar, Judge Strong and Rev. Bisbee, have written letters with similar sentiments to some of the daily and weekly papers. With so many loyal suffragists in the state of Washington, it will not be long before their women will again be enfranchised. CATHARINE WAUGH MCCULLOCH.

MISS ACKERMANN IN INDIA

(Concluded.)

DEAR UNION SIGNAL:—The vehicles of Jeypore are unlike anything I have seen; they are two-wheeled, with a dome-shaped canopy, an opening on either side, and are covered with bright colored cloth like heavy felt. The driver sits on the pole between two beautiful bullocks—the kind with a large hump on their necks; they are gaily decorated, their horns sawed off about half their length and painted bright green; most of them have a string of sleigh-bells around their neck and these creatures can be driven as fast as a horse usually travels.

With a native Christian and Bible woman I had a ride on an elephant. The driver sat on his neck just back of his ears. When all were seated the creature moved off, slow but sure; he took us up great hills and around curved places dangerous for a horse.

Five hours on an elephant proved very trying, the motion is even worse than a camel; and much the worse for wear I had tea in time to catch the eleven o'clock train for Bombay. Two nights and days by rail without a sleeper, after about eight weeks of heavy travel and constant speaking made it necessary to seek rest at once I had been invited to the home of the editor of the Bombay Guardian, Mr. A. S. Dyer, that fearless, brave man who tells the truth at any cost. I could not have come to a more delightful place or among more restful, helpful people. I had met Mr. Dyer in China with his great anti-opium petition, so it was a double pleasure to be with them. Mrs. Dyer is a wonderful woman with more energy and "go" than any woman I have met out of America. Sometimes her husband is called from home for months, but everything goes on just the same, the paper comes out on time, the editorials are just as fearless and clear-cut, and "shady" things in high places are denounced as sin in capital letters. The housekeeping goes on with perfect system; twenty-two guests were being entertained and no one perceived but it was the usual family; everything moved on without a jar during the days of their visit. It was a treat to "go marketing" with Mrs. Dyer; she knew the best of everything and the price. Who can say that business unfits woman for domestic duties?

I came to attend the Decennial Conference, and was invited to speak on opium and on temperance. I was very sorry to hear some of the workers say they did not require their native Christians to become abstainers. When the native Christian church opens its doors to the whisky bottle, they open to the darkest agency of hell, and deepest danger to this country. When some of the workers told how much they had been helped by government grants for their mission schools, it really seemed too bad that the Lord's work should be carried on by blood money, for English revenue here is from opium and rum largely. It is no wonder there are few conversions in the Christian colleges. The blessing of Heaven can never rest upon the educational work in this land until the missionaries are awakened to the evil of opium and drink.

The burning question of the conference was education, or I should say, "higher education as a missionary agency"; there were many objectors though these were not allowed full expression. If from that body of near five hundred missionaries there had gone forth an appeal to the Christian world for help a response in the form of thousands of dollars would have poured into this land for missionary work.

The papers just now have much to say about missionaries who are not abstainers, and a strong expression of opinion on the part of some has given rise to much "feeling" among workers. I have stopped in many missionary homes in this land and have met a number who could not see as I do. I always ask this question of such: "Brother, have you prayed about it? Sister, have you prayed about it?" and I have never yet found any one who had.

Now a word about this field; it is the needy field of the world for our W. C. T. U. work, and it can never stand till we have workers located here and literature for India. I wish the women would pray for India, that good women, well informed in the work, may be sent there. We have sent out enough women to promote other interests; those who come now must come commissioned to do our work, and I wish a cry from India could reach your ears. I wish I could come home and look into your faces to tell you what I have seen. I am sure India would then have a larger share of your prayers and energy than ever before. Our own people have need to be saved; there are seventy thousand men in the army alone.

JESSIE ACKERMANN.

BY MATILDA B. CARSE.

O Daniel, servant of the living God, is thy God, whom thou servest continually, able to deliver thee from the lions? My God hath sent his angel, and hath shut the lions' mouths, that they have not hurt me.—Daniel 6:20, 22.

On account of the ill health of our beloved president, Miss Frances E. Willard—who will not be able to return to this country until October—the dedication of the Temple will be postponed until her return. We hope that all unions and individuals who have pledged to raise $100 will use most strenuous efforts to have the sum paid up by that time. Let not our friends think from this announcement that it will be too late to send money after October. It will always be in order to send money until the last cent of indebtedness on the Temple is paid.

When the waves of sorrow break over the soul from whatever source, how sweet human sympathy is! To be the recipient of so many loving and sympathetic letters, as have been my portion of late, is almost worth going through purgatorial fires to secure. I wish to again assure my dear white-ribbon sisters how deeply I appreciate them. I read most of the letters with eyes dim with tears. I am especially grateful for the resolutions of love and confidence which have been forwarded to me from local unions, county, district, and even state W. C. T. U. conventions, and more than all am I gratified at the responses in money and pledges; never before has money come in so freely and rapidly. Readers can judge for themselves from a few of the gifts given below.

The employés of the W. C. T. U. coffee house, Minneapolis, Minn., show their love and appreciation by sending $100 for a tablet in Willard Hall, in honor of that noble white-ribboner, Mrs. E. A. Russell, who, for several years, has conducted the above institution with such marked success. Mrs. S. G. McFarland, from the Franklin union, Philadelphia, sends $100, and writes: "Our name is a good old name in Philadelphia, and worthy of the honor of being perpetuated. The money is the result of a mite-box social." Mrs. Abele J. Barker sends $100 from South Dakota. She writes: "The name of our union is the Ispwich W. C. T. U. We take much pleasure in having a share in this great enterprise; we feel very proud, indeed, of the beautiful Temple." In this amount is included a full Baby Band. Mrs. J. M. Waters forwards $100 from the Bozeman, Mont., W. C. T. U. This makes $125 this union has sent; besides, they have just ordered a new relay of mite-boxes. Mrs. Waters says: "The union voted at the last meeting to continue the Temple work as one of our departments, and I hope we shall keep it up until it is fully owned by the National. The wicked and cruel attacks on yourself have aroused hot indignation here in far-away Montana. . . . I believe it will rouse our women to come more generally and enthusiastically to the support of this great and holy cause." Mrs. Delle F. Evans, Temple superintendent, ninth district, Michigan, sends a check for $100 to place the name of Lucy F. Morehouse, Ludington, Mich., the loved president of the ninth district, Michigan W. C. T. U., on a tablet in Willard Hall. This is the second hundred dollars this district has sent. Mrs. Evans writes: "I should have been very indignant at the attack made on you, had I not known it was for some good purpose. I believe it was permitted by the Lord, in order that our women might be stirred to do more for the Temple. I am sure it will have that effect." The Y's of Charlestown, Mass., send $81, and promise to send the balance of their $100 pledge before the first of June. The W. C. T. U. of De Soto, Mo., send $50 on their pledge. The Green Bay, Wis., union sends a check for $45.50, which completes its $100 pledge. This money was secured through the mite-box system.

The New Orleans, La., W. C. T. U. sends $43 on its pledge. Mrs. Shove writes: "$8.90 of this amount was raised by Mrs. Walton, an aged lady and blind. She has more than filled her second mite-box, and says she can still do a little more." The Lucy Hayes W. C. T. U., Mt. Vernon, Ia., sends $43.40, which completes a $100 gift. From Cortland county, N. Y., comes $40 on a $100 pledge. Mrs. H. E. Harmon sends $25, the last payment on $100 pledged by the Livingston, Mont., W. C. T. U. The Watertown, N. Y., union sends $28.56 which completes its pledge for $100. In the letter containing the check was a set of resolutions passed by the union of confidence in the Temple enterprise and its founder. Granville, O., W. C. T. U., sends $18 on its $100 pledge. Mrs. P. J. Howard sends $15, the last payment on the same amount by the eleventh district, Mich., W. C. T. U. The women of the district fully appreciate the noble qualities of their president and now insist that the $100 they have sent shall go towards having Mrs. Howard's name on a tablet in Willard Hall. Mrs. Howard writes: "If we had not raised one hundred dollars, I think we could do so now in short order, for we are all so indignant at the attack on you and our beautiful Temple." The Shadyside union of Pittsburgh, Pa., has recently been formed. One of their first acts, due no doubt to Mrs. S. D. Hathaway, was to pledge $100 to the Temple of which $15 has just been received.

A two-cent stamp sent to Mrs. Matilda B. Carse, the Temple, Chicago, will secure a mite-box. Remember, any one placing in the box $2.50 from May 1, 1893, to May 1, 1894, will receive the lovely Columbian souvenir made of aluminum, with a cut of the Temple on one side and on the reverse the face of Miss Willard and the founder of the Temple, with suitable inscriptions. All money orders should be made out in the name of the treasurer, William D. Preston, and sent to our financial secretary, Miss Sara Johnson, the Temple, Chicago, Ill.

Signal Notes.

THE average weekly wages for women in Boston is $5.64, in New York, $5.85 and in Chicago $5.74.

IT has been stated that there are five thousand women engaged in the liquor business in Chicago.

LONDON is the largest brewing center in Great Britain, having one hundred and thirty-nine breweries.

IN Ceylon the percentage of those who live by agriculture is seventy, while in Great Britain it is but 15.44.

IT has been estimated that youthful consumers contribute one million dollars to the tobacco revenue of Great Britain.

THE Lancet is responsible for a comparison of beef and wine, which shows that the former has 207½ grains of nourishment in every 1,000 while in wine there is but 1⅓.

THE Church of England Temperance Society offered prizes to the Band of Hope children for the best essays on temperance and thrift. Nearly two thousand took part.

THE average number of divorces in the United States is 88.71 in every 100,000. France has only one-third as many. Ireland has the lowest number of any country, .28 in every 100,000.

THE cocoanut tree is a general utility kind of a plant as its wood, bark, fruit, shells and fibres are all used for practical purposes with one exception, viz, the fruit from which an intoxicating drink is made.

SAN FRANCISCO leads the van of saloon-cursed cities, having one saloon to every ninety-three persons. Albany and New Orleans follow with one to every one hundred and ten and one hundred and twenty-one persons respectively.

FIFTY thousand children in one hundred American schools have been examined, and the result is rather sad, for six thousand exhibited bodily defects, three thousand were dull minded and a large number showed abnormal nervous development.

THE Free Church of Italy recently held its nineteenth annual general assembly. Twenty-six regularly constituted churches were represented and fifty-one groups dependent on them as well as eighty places which come under the influence of Bible and tract distribution. Two Bible women are employed.

SOME practical suggestions as well as illustrations were given recently by an eminent English archdeacon to the question, "How do you encourage temperance and total abstinence?" He gave as an illustration, the plan adopted in a large parish in Cambridge, where the society is divided into classes, something on the Methodist principle. Each class has a name, a leader, a banner and a strong esprit de corps. This plan is a great moral support to the converts who are constantly visited by their leaders and comrades.

A Novel Treatment for Asthma has been offered in the application of bags of ice to the spine. This is made on the theory that Asthma is a purely nervous disease. So distressing is this disease that use of this most severe means for even temporary relief, is not to be wondered at. It is well, however, to know that there is a pleasant, convenient and sure cure for Asthma, which has behind it the accumulated proof of twenty-three years. We refer to the Compound Oxygen treatment of Drs. Starkey & Palen, of Philadelphia. The high standing of these physicians, and the wonderful value of their common sense Home Treatment, is as easy of demonstration as the multiplication table itself. Read a specimen letter:

Compound Oxygen has done everything for me as a sufferer from Asthma. My children would have been without a mother if I had not used Compound Oxygen, as my physician said it was the last resort for me, my lungs were in such a state from repeated congestion; left lung was of little use; so many air-cells closed. I have gained thirty-five pounds since its use. My physician recommended it, or I should now have been in my grave.

MRS E. N. HUNT, New Rochelle, N. Y.

My wife has suffered for ten years from Asthma, and each spell was gradually getting worse. I had tried, it looked to me, every remedy in the world, but it continued to get worse. I saw your advertisement, and sent for a Home Treatment of your Compound Oxygen. When it came my wife did not like to try it, having been deceived so often, but finally she agreed to try it. From the first she began to improve. In less than two weeks she was able to run from the dining-room to our room, which is about twenty steps—a thing she had not been able to do for ten years. Now she is as free from Asthma as any person in the world, and it is all due to your Compound Oxygen Treatment.

Accept heartfelt thanks,

G. W. BOOTH, Guntown, Miss.

Every Asthma sufferer should investigate this remedy and avail themselves of this cure. Write to-day. Address Drs. STARKEY & PALEN, 1529 Arch Street, Philadelphia, or Chicago, San Francisco, New York, and Toronto, Ont.

The play that evening was Macbeth,
And Uncle Josh with bated breath,
Had watched with eyes amazed and keen
Until the famed Sleep-walking Scene;

When Lady Macbeth strives to blot
From her stained hands the damned spot,
And as she washed them in the air,
And cried out at the blood still there;

Then Uncle Josh asked one near by,
"What makes that woman swear and cry,
An' wring her hands an' go on so?
What's on 'em I'd jes' like to know?"

"It's Duncan's blood," the man replied,
"She strives the fearful stains to hide."
"Why don't she wash her hands, b'gosh!
With Ivory Soap?" cried Uncle Josh.

SINCE OUR LAST ISSUE.

The Italian ministry has resigned.

The Presbyterian General Assembly is in session at Washington, D. C.

The World's Press Congresses opened at Memorial Art Palace, Chicago, on Monday last.

The ninth annual session of the National Editorial Association closed its meeting in Chicago last week.

Queen Victoria's birthday, May 24, was celebrated with the usual festivities throughout the British Empire.

A woman suffrage bill, granting women the privilege to vote at school, village, and city elections passed the Michigan house, May 19.

The Spanish Infanta Eulalie, representing the Queen Regent of Spain, arrived in New York last Friday, the guest of the United States government.

The national meeting of the Dunkards, or German Baptists, occurred at Muncie, Ind., last week. Twenty thousand people were in attendance last Sabbath.

Believing that the gates of the Fair were to be opened Sunday contrary to law, the Baptist Church Union has withdrawn from its part in the World's Fair Congresses.

The Cumberland Presbyterian General Assembly, convening at Little Rock, Ark., last week passed a resolution without a dissenting vote, protesting against the opening of the World's Fair Sunday.

The World's Columbian Exposition kept its gates closed last Sunday, pending the action of the National Commission on the resolution of the Chicago Directory to refund the gift of Congress and open the Fair.

Action was commenced last week by the state of Illinois against the Distilling and Cattle-feeding Company, known as the "whisky trust," and capitalized for fifty million dollars, for the purpose of destroying the monopoly.

The new officers of the International Council of Women elected last week are Countess of Aberdeen, England, president; Mrs. May Wright Sewall, United States, vice-president; Madame Marie Marten, of France, recording secretary; Mrs. Eva McLaren, England, corresponding secretary; Baroness of Gripenberg, Finland, treasurer.

THE W. C. T. U. lecture bureau is to be located at National Headquarters this summer, and the secretary, Miss Lucy Anthony, should be addressed at room 1115, the Temple, Chicago. Miss Anthony is delighted with the prospects that are opening up before the bureau and with the impetus that has been gained from the Woman's Congresses. Mrs. Fenwick Miller and Mrs. Ormiston Chant, of England, are the latest accessories to the bureau.

THE headquarters of the W. C. T. U. in South Africa is the Huguenot Seminary, Wellington, Cape Colony, started nearly twenty years ago by two graduates of Mt. Holyoke. More than a thousand young women have attended the school, which the Rev. Arthur Pierson calls one of the miracles of missions and the light of Cape Colony. The colonial secretary also bore similar testimony to this institution saying in Parliament that no institution had done more for South Africa. The colonial government has offered the school twenty-five thousand dollars on condition that an equal amount be raised from other sources. To raise the conditional twenty-five thousand dollars, Miss Bliss, one of the founders of the seminary, is now in this country.

THE young people's societies of the West Side of Chicago are again strengthening their borders against the foe of rum. They held one crusade of a month early in the spring and last week another well-planned campaign was opened under their auspices, led by John G. Woolley, the eloquent and effective orator. These meetings will continue a month, the first two weeks in the Western Avenue M. E. Church. Mr. Woolley will also conduct the noon prayer-meetings in Willard Hall.

MRS. SIBLEY, president of the Georgia state W. C. T. U., has an admirable reply in the Wesleyan Christian Advocate, Atlanta, to Dr. Candler's article which was the subject of one of our editorials last week. It is dignified in tone, disclaims that the W. C. T. U. is a supplicant for indorsement, and protests against the injustice which condemns as an unpardonable sin the discussion of woman's suffrage as a possible way out of the toils of the liquor traffic. At the same time, it is thoroughly Christlike in spirit; it does not return railing for railing, but is the "soft answer" which should "turn away wrath."

THE fifth annual report of the Bureau of Justice of Chicago bears witness to a most noteworthy effort to aid the "fatherless and the widow" and any who are oppressed by injustice and selfishness. It has among its main objects "to assist in securing legal protection against injustice for those who are unable to protect themselves; to take cognizance of the workings of existing laws and methods of procedure and to suggest improvements; to propose new and better laws and to make efforts towards securing their enactment." There is sad need for such work as this, and where it is worthily carried forward, as in this case, should have not only the indorsement but the pocket sympathy of law-abiding and law-protected citizens.

IT MAY be a surprise to some of our readers to know that even if the Fair be opened on Sunday, one exhibit, and that a German, will be closed. This is the gold and silver exhibit in the Manufactures Building and represents fifty-two German factories. The exhibit is in charge of a young German Methodist, a man only twenty-two years of age, but who was selected for the position, as would naturally be supposed, because of his preëminent fitness for it. He is a man of great ability, unquestionable integrity and speaks seven languages. The only condition on which he would accept the position was that in case the Fair was open on Sunday he should have the right to close his department on that day. He insisted that the condition should be in writing and acknowledged before a notary public.

JUNE 9 is the W. C. T. U. day of the week of the Temperance Congress of the World's Exposition. Earnest efforts are put forth to make it a day of interest and of blessing to all who may attend, and it is hoped that a white-ribbon host of magnificent numbers will choose that date for their Chicago visit. Our beloved leader cannot be with us! The Father has called her aside, to tarry awhile with Him, and lays upon us the faithful performance of duty not lessened, but the rather increased by her absence, and in her disappointment nothing can more cheer than the knowledge that the clans are aroused to new activity and are "in one place of one accord," gathering inspiration from the Great Leader who through the Spirit will make us mightier in His service, while we wait His loving will. Please remember, June 9, 1893, every W. C. T. U. woman is specially invited to the gathering which will be held in the Halls, "Columbus" and "Washington" at the Memorial Art Palace. Our best speakers and singers and poets will be there. Daughters of the King from the wide world over, with their Mother of the Crusade whom they love (Mrs. Eliza J. Thompson, Hillsboro, O.), and brothers, too, honored and kind, will joy together for the victory the Lord hath promised and will give to His own.

CHICAGO is verily the center of the universe just now, at least intellectually and socially; we are not so certain about the moral focus. Congresses and receptions are so abundant that attractions often prove distractions because of their overwhelming number and variety. It is hard to "hold the even tenor of one's way" in the midst of so much excitement and so many rare opportunities. Hardest of all is it to edit a "World's and National official organ" in the very heart of this great stir and not fill its pages with matter pertaining to the Exposition and its wonderful Congresses. It will be very difficult to please all our readers this summer. Some desire that for the next five months we shall publish full proceedings of the Congresses and descriptions of the Exposition; others prefer that our paper be filled only with W. C. T. U. and other temperance matter. It will be our endeavor to compromise these two desires by noting briefly each week the meetings of special interest to women and the chief events on the Exposition grounds, devoting the majority of our space, as usual, to the almost boundless concerns of our own great organization.

DR. KATE BUSHNELL and Mrs. Elizabeth Wheeler Andrew were the chief speakers at the World's W. C. T. U. meeting which closed and crowned the three days' session of the B. W. T. A. Council, May 2–5. Lady Henry Somerset presided and Miss Willard sat at her right, but having been forbidden to make a formal address for some months to come did not participate in the proceedings. Exquisite baskets of flowers were presented to the two leaders "from the provincial delegates." The "stand-by" hymns of the World's W. C. T. U. were sung: "There are bands of ribbon white around the world," "Some glad day," "We all belong," and "How firm a foundation, ye saints of the Lord," closing with the parting hymn, "God be with you." Representatives were on the platform from Canada, France, South Africa and Syria, besides Mrs. Barnes, of New York, Miss Gordon, of Boston, Miss Hood, of Chicago, and British women from every leading city of the Kingdom. The meeting was organized by Mr. H. J. Osborn, who has not his peer in that most important line of temperance work. Our British friends understand more perfectly than any other people that a meeting if it is to be a good one does not "happen" but is "caused" to come to pass.

ONE of the most far-reaching and important congresses of the World's Congress Auxiliary is the one to be held June 2-3, to which "all European societies for abolition and state regulation of vice, all Social Purity and White Cross organizations of all countries, and all churches, philanthropic and rescue associations in sympathy with its objects, are invited to send five or more representatives." The second day of the congress will be occupied by the National W. C. T. U. Social Purity department, of which Dr. Mary Wood Allen, Toledo, O., is superintendent and to whom all correspondence respecting this day's program should be addressed. Other social purity societies will affiliate and some of the subjects under discussion will be: Children's Rights and Teachers' Duties; What shall be taught and who shall do it? The Mother's Privilege; Causes which lead to Immoral Lives; Heredity in its Relation to Immorality; Marriage and Divorce; Reception-Homes for ex-convicts. These and kindred topics will be presented and discussed by such world-known reformers as B. O. Flower, editor of Arena; C. M. Woodward, St. Louis University; Elizabeth Cady Stanton; Anthony Comstock; Chas. Crittenton; Elizabeth B. Grannis; Earl Barnes, of Leland Stanford University; Rev. B. F. De Costa, Mary A. Livermore and others. Mrs. Helen G. Ecob, of Albany, N. Y., will present a paper on "Morals in Dress." Much interest has been created in reformed dress by the Women's Congresses just closed, at which a number of prominent women appeared in sensible costumes of attractive devices.

OUR SOLDIER DEAD.

BY HARRIET FRANCENE CROCKER.

There are no flowers too sweet to strew above them—
Brave hearts that lie in silent, dreamless sleep,
No garlands bright enough for us who love them
To lay with reverent hands at head and feet.
There are no songs too solemn or too tender
For us to sing above their graves to-day.
Oh, could they only know that we remember
The brave, brave boys who proudly marched away!
Oh, could they only know that ever brighter
As years roll by, their heroism shines;
Oh, could they know that all the world is lighter
Because of them for whom the laurel twines!

We who are left—how do we do our duty?
As well as they—our valiant soldier dead?
To us the symmetry and perfect beauty
Of our dear land is given to guard instead.
Ours now to shape the course our ship is steering,
Ours now to watch with ever earnest gaze,
Our privilege to see our nation nearing
The glad good times that wait the coming days!

ROSES FROM POPLAR PLACE.

A Decoration Day Story.

BY ELIZABETH CUMINGS.

"Ma, Grandpa Emmet's had a stroke."

"Who told you so?"

"Phebe Martin. She said Katie Emmet told her last night grandpa fell down cellar, and they can't make out whether he had a stroke and fell down stairs, or whether he fell down stairs and so had a stroke. But he can't move his laigs." Janey Doty's serious gray eyes rested lovingly on the withered old face on the pillow near by. She had spoken low not to disturb the sleeper.

Mrs. Doty craned her neck and peered out through the closed blinds at the little brown house next door. Yes, there was Dr. Tuttle's chaise at the Emmet gate. "Don't speak of it so your grandpa'll hear you," she cautioned. "He's mighty weak. 'Pears like his breath ain't more'n an inch long, and you know his deefness is jes' like Grandpa Emmet's. He allus hears what you don't calculate to have him."

It was early May and even Poplar Place was beautiful. Of course I mean what there was of it. The Mud Valley railroad shifting yards shut it in at the south. At the north rose the vast expanse of the Pawpaw distillery, owned by Schmactenberger, Preuckler & Klemm. There were the two brown houses facing the east, and before them stood four rugged poplars, or cottonwoods, ragged and shabby in summer, but now beautiful in exquisite tints, and misty with cotton fleece, their spotted boles gleaming in lavender and fawn tints. Over the way was the bare, cinder-paved expanse, behind the Fifth Ward public school. Dogfennel and pepper weed thrust itself up along the fence, and pusley gathered about the telegraph poles, but nothing could live in the school yard proper. In such a neighborhood you can easily see that the people in the two brown houses must be a great deal to each other one way or another. Grandma Emmet and Grandma Doty had been stepsisters, and though not related by blood, so very fond of each other their sons had been like brothers. But one day there had been a terrible explosion in the big distillery, and the two sons had been almost instantly killed. The boys' granmothers had died soon after, and now in each brown house was a grandpa, and all day long the sewing machines buzzed and hummed, for the two mothers eked out their incomes by making overalls.

One day, Mrs. Emmet, coming home from the overall factory, passed the Schmactenberger place, and Mrs. Schmactenberger obligingly gave her a handful of flower bulbs the gardener was about to cast on the ash pile. "Dey wass nottin'," said the good-humored distiller's wife, as she passed them over the fence. The Schmactenberger house was spacious, and of gray stone, with a fine stretch of lawn on either side of it, the distilling business being one which employs few men, and while paying out little, save to the United States government, returns two hundred per cent for the money invested. Of Mrs. Schmactenberger, who was an ignorant, pretentious Hessian peasant, Mrs. Emmet did not think, but of the fine home and its belongings she thought much, and the bulbs had in her eyes an extrinsic as well as an intrinsic value, and when directly after Grandpa Emmet had set them out, she saw Buster, the Doty rooster, scratching them up with his big yellow claws, she rushed at him with far more vim than she would have shown in protecting common bulbs.

"That rooster's a perfect nuisance," she declared to Janey Doty, who happened to be shelling peas on the Doty back steps. "If I kep' fowls I'd keep 'em at home."

Now Grandpa Emmet had a mongrel little dog named Pink, who barked in season and out of it, and buried bones and tracked up the respective verandas of the two brown houses with perfect impartiality, believing them both under his protection. Joe Doty loved Buster, who was a game cock, and though he was secretly fond of Pink, he revenged disrespect to Buster upon the dog, and after a little a chilliness, and then a coldness, that became more and more wintry, grew up between the little brown houses. Tho two mothers no longer exchanged cookery receipts and Butterick patterns. The two grandfathers no longer spent the evenings side by side, shouting reminiscences at each other, and Joe Doty and Sam Emmet openly quarreled, till one day Grandpa Doty told Grandpa Emmet he was going to have a line fence. "I'll have it bull high and pig tight," he said, tartly, "and we'll see if we can't have a little peace."

"If you and Joe'll mind your own business and keep with your fowls on your own side of the line there'll be no trouble, fence or no fence," retorted Grandpa Emmet, hotly.

Of course the fence went up, and it was close and high. The pity of it was it cut straight through a perfect thicket of roses. Pawpaw is a bower of roses in May, and in all the city none were more lush and healthy than those about the two brown houses. Those on the Emmet side were for the most part pink or red, and those on the Doty side were yellow or white, and the offering the two grandfathers had been able to make to the Grand Army Post Decoration Day had been among the finest. At one time during the war Pawpaw had a camp, and among the evergreens of Graceland lay many soldiers. The two grandfathers had served in the same regiment, and as we grow older we cling more and more closely to those who remember the same past we do, so the more and more they missed each other, the more and more cold the old fellows became till they scarcely spoke, and passed each other with curt little bows.

The fence, perhaps, disturbed the rose roots. The first year the grandfathers took separate baskets of roses to the armory the blossoms were imperfect and stunted. The second year an army of worms and bugs appeared, and perhaps because the north wind did not have its way on one side, nor the sun have its way on the other, many of the rose canes died. The next spring care was taken to preserve the bushes which of old had taken care of themselves and given lavishly. Mrs. Doty bought whale-oil soap and Mrs. Emmet bought tobacco soap and white hellebore and as yet the leaves were fair and green. But there were no signs of buds, and the children were watching their tulips and lilies when Grandpa Doty, from wetting his feet doctoring the rose bushes in the dew, was taken with pneumonia, and Grandpa Emmet, coming in with wet slippers after putting hellebore on his bushes, slipped on the cellar stairs and fell against the stones, striking the back of his head a tremendous blow. For two anxious weeks the worms and bugs thought the coast was clear for them. Then Joe Doty, feeling that much rested on him, rose at four o'clock and went out to make war upon them. After him went Janey, and Sammy Emmet hearing them, got up and went out with his sprinkling pot.

"I'm dreadful sorry about Grandpa Emmet," said Janey, for an instant forgetting bygones. She was near a big knothole and could see Sammy very well. "Grandpa Doty is very sick, too, but the doctor thought last night he was some better. It hurts him mighty bad to breathe."

"I know," said Sammy, who was croupy. "I'm glad he's better. The doctor says Grandpa Emmet was hit awful. It isn't a stroke. Lots o' bugs your side?"

"Plenty hanging around," said Joe, applying his eye to the knothole. "If 'twas burdocks they were after I'd understand it, but roses don't need to be killed."

"That's so," said Sammy cordially, and the next minute Katie, who had come out and had been listening, thrust two hyacinths through the convenient hole. One was pink, one cream colored.

"They are Grandpa Doty's favorites," said she. "Put 'em in a glass by his bed."

"Who spoke first?" asked Mrs. Doty when she saw the flowers.

"I don't know," said Joe, "I guess it happened."

The comrades at Post Kearney missed the two old fellows greatly. No one could tell a story better than Grandpa Emmet. No one could sing a song with better effect than Grandpa Doty, and as for speechifying and retrospectively "giving it" to the enemy, they had no equals. Each had a brother-in-law lying in the Pawpaw burying-ground who had served under Stonewall Jackson. Their wives had always decorated those lonely soldier graves, but the wives were gone and the two old fellows had felt very virtuous when they had carried their roses past the dust that had worn the gray, and heaped them upon dust that had worn the blue. To praise the valor of one's foes is indirectly to praise one's self, but to heap roses on his grave, to the neglect of our virtuous friend, is to give the reward of merit to the wrong man.

Many were the inquiries at the two brown houses, and when it was known that the old gentlemen hoped to be out on Decoration Day, Captain Jenkins proposed that the post hire a barouche and two white horses to convey them.

"Don't believe 'twill work," said second lieutenant Stark. "Last year, you remember, they didn't march together, nor the year before that. Brought their posies separate, too. Guess there's a coldness 'tween 'em."

"Shucks!" said the captain.

No one stays within doors in southern Indiana from the first of May to the last of October, who is not kept there by some absorbing avocation. It is too pleasant to sit in the sun or in the shade with the soft, sweet wind lapping your cheeks, and the instant Grandpa Emmet could stand on his feet and get into his clothes, he was out on the porch. When the sunshine had heartened him up a bit he went feebly down the steps and around to the gate where he could command the Doty door. Grandpa Doty was not there and he hurried as fast as he could back to his daughter-in-law's sitting-room.

"Where's Roger Doty?" he demanded. "Why isn't he a-sitting out a-reading the Herald? He allus has read it just this time goin' on fifteen year."

"Well, he's been pretty sick," said Mrs. Emmet. "I didn't tell you, father, on account of not knowing what was the matter of your head. We was afraid it would stir you up, and—"

"Ummmm!" was the old man's comment. "Guess I'll go out and see how the roses are a-comin' on."

Meanwhile almost the same dialogue was in progress at the next house, and when Mr. Emmet bent to examine the pink or crimson buds on his side of the high fence who did he see through the big knothole but his old crony bending over his white and yellow favorites. Grandpa Doty hadn't on his farsighted glasses, and his ears were dull, but he heard a step, and remembering the hyacinths he called out, "Mighty pretty mawnin', Janey, honey, and a mighty fine crop o' roses in prospect this a-way. What's over that a-way?"

"Tom Emmet and a right smart of rose buds," replied Grandpa Emmet applying his eyes to the knothole, and then, because they could not wait to go around to the gate the two old fellows put two fingers each through that hole and shook hands as they could, the tall fence between them.

Decoration Day dawned cloudless and never had the rose bushes done so well. One reason was that the tall fence had been carefully removed from that part of the yard, and the sun and north wind had it all their way. The barouche and white horses came, and it was a sight to see the roses heaped about the two old comrades who sat up very straight and stiff, and with an air that would have become two generals.

"Roger," said Grandpa Doty, bending just the width of a hair, "this is a day to let bygones be bygones, 'pears to me, and you were allus more forgiviner'n me at bottom."

"Not a bit, Tom, not a bit," dissented Grandpa Emmet, putting out his under lip. "But as you say about bygones, why, let 'em go. A man can't be forever thinkin' o' what happened yesterday, if he's to get any sort o' a squint on to-day."

"Just so," assented Grandpa Doty, cocking his head on one side, "and I will say, Tom, you've allus worded my thoughts better'n I could myself; and some circumstances and matters, human nature bein' what it is, and we bein', as you may say, poor worms of the dust—the best on us—have taught me to feel that when things is past they are past, and this day bein' a day when a man ought to feel himself a sojourner and a pilgrim a-needin' a mighty deal of consideration for his own faults an' failin's, it's been borne in on me that we'd ought, for the sake of Jane and Maria, our departed companions, if not for the sake of being fair to other folks' idees of what's duty and so forth, to de-corate—that is—to—"

"Jus' my thought, Roger. Jus' exac'ly my thought," interposed Grandpa Emmet with emphasis; and while the comrades were busy among the flag-hung graves, the two old friends bent above two mounds marked only by very simple stones.

"Say a prayer, Roger," commanded Grandpa Emmet, "you are a church member."

Grandpa Doty's face flushed. "We don't pray out of our own heads, Tom," he said deprecatingly, "and I have a mighty poor memory."

He took off his hat. Above him a tulip tree rustled softly. "Our Father, who art in heaven, hallowed be thy name. Thy kingdom come. Thy will be done on earth as it is in heaven. . . .Forgive us our trespasses as we forgive those who trespass against us."

"Amen!" exclaimed Grandpa Emmet who had been reared in the Methodist connection. "Amen," echoed Grandpa Doty and then above each quiet sleeper's heart they laid roses white and red.

"Whyee!" exclaimed Lieutenant Stark who had come up, "them's rebs."

"That's all right," said Grandpa Emmet pulling himself up. "We're de-corating them as brave men and brothers."

"And in memory of bygones as is bygones," added Grandpa Doty. "Private bygones atween Tom an' me, as is to-day forever buried."

HILLSBORO CRUSADE SKETCHES.

III.

Story of Saloon Visitation.

BY ELIZA J. THOMPSON.

At the time of the "new departure" on the part of the ladies of Hillsboro, there were four hotels, four drug-stores and thirteen saloons where intoxicating liquors could be obtained, there being little hindrance save the conscientious scruples of individual cases!

When the "Praying Band," as it was called in ridicule, first started out upon its divinely appointed mission, as the procession of somber looking beings passed up High street, from the church where their first meeting of consecration had just been held, Dr. Dio Lewis was driven slowly by on his way from Colonel Trimble's home to Washington Courthouse, as the ladies afterward heard, for it is a noticeable fact that he passed unobserved by the women whose hearts and thoughts were upon the work before them, and upon the only Friend whose power could make that work available.

On the following morning, the 25th, many of the earnest women and quite a goodly number of zealous brethren assembled promptly at nine o'clock in the Presbyterian church to renew their consecration vows; after a season of fervent prayer, song and testimony, it was voted to respect a previous appointment for religious services in the Episcopal church—quite a number of our band being members of that church, and their rector, Rev. John Ely, one of our loyal supporters. It was also thought wise to give to our families the attention due the established usage of Christmas Day. Therefore, after adjournment, an informal prayer-meeting was held which strengthened the hearts of all greatly and better prepared the women for the services of the following morning.

The cold, clear, crisp morning of the 26th dawned upon us with a deep, sparkling snow upon the ground, but paths were shoveled and swept by new hands that morning, and as we passed, heads were uncovered and earnest benedictions showered upon us by many a manly heart, which dared to be on the right side. The nine o'clock prayer-meeting was opened by Scripture reading, prayer and song; earnest exhortations and words of hearty support and encouragement were offered by Dr. McSurely and others.

The committee of visitation, after singing a hymn, adjourned to meet at the same time and place the next morning; then forming in procession it visited hotels and saloons in the following order. Quoting from minutes:

"Mrs. Thompson was appointed to present appeal at hotels and saloons." "The first call was made at the Uhrig saloon on East High street. There we were met by smooth words and fair promises, but no signatures." "Kramer House, proprietor—not at home." "Ellicot House—the polite landlord said he did hope we would succeed, but could not close his bar, unless the others would." "The kind proprietor of the Woodrow House half agreed to give up the miserable business, and said he certainly would if the other hotels of the town would close up."

It was quite evident to the minds of the ladies that the question with these gentlemen, turned upon the pivot of popularity and financial success and not upon any innate love of the curse, for the fact was too apparent that the effects of liquor-drinking had proven the hardest part of a landlord's office.

Fortified with hope in the evident unrest of these men, who were building upon sandy foundations—their hope of gain—our next call was at the saloon of John Bales. He was cool and polite, treated the subject matter of our visit in a purely business way, proposed selling out his entire stock, billiard tables and all at two-thirds of invoiced value, and—sell no more liquor! As this was quite out of the line of our warfare against spiritual wickedness in high places, we turned our faces towards the first-class saloon (as it was called) kept by Robert Ward on High street, a resort made famous by deeds, the memory of which nerved the heart and paled the cheek of some among us, as the seventy entered the open door of the "witty Englishman" (as his patrons were wont to call the popular Ward). Doubtless he had learned of our approach as he not only propped the heavy door open, but with the most perfect suavity of manner held it until the ladies all passed in; then closing it, walked to his accustomed stand behind the bar.

Seizing the strange opportunity, the leader addressed him as follows: "Well, Mr. Ward, this must seem to you a strange audience! I suppose, however, that you understand the object of our visit." "Robert" by this time began to perspire freely, and remarked that he would like to have a talk with Dio Lewis. Mrs. T— said: "Dr. Lewis has nothing whatever to do with the subject of our mission. As you look upon some of the faces before you, and observe the marks of sorrow, caused by the unholy business that you ply, you will find that it is no wonder we are here. We have come, however, not to threaten, not even to upbraid, but in the name of our divine Friend and Saviour, and in His spirit to forgive, and to commend you to His pardon, if you will but agree to abandon a business that is so damaging to our hearts and to the peace of our homes!"

The hesitation and embarrassment of the famous saloon-keeper seemed to afford (as the leader thought) an opportunity for prayer; so, casting her eye around upon that never-to-be-forgotten group of earnest faces, she said, very softly, "Let us pray." Instantly, all, even the poor liquor-seller himself, were upon their knees. Mrs. McSurely, wife of the Presbyterian minister, was asked by Mrs. Thompson to lead in prayer, but she declined. The spirit of utterance then came upon the latter, and, as a seal of God's approval upon the self-sacrificing work there inaugurated, the Holy Spirit touched all hearts. As we arose from our knees, dear Mrs. Doggett (now in heaven) broke forth in her sweet, pathetic notes, and all joined with her in

"There is a fountain filled with blood,
Drawn from Immanuel's veins,
And sinners plunged beneath that flood,
Lose all their guilty stains."

The scene that followed, in a most remarkable manner, portrayed the spirit of our holy religion; poor wives and mothers, who the day before would have crossed the street to avoid passing by a place so identified with their heartaches, their woes and their deepest humiliation, in tearful pathos, were now pleading with this deluded brother to accept the world's Redeemer as his own. Surely, "God is Love!"

Shortly after the ladies retired from this their first saloon prayer-meeting, a message from Dr. Lewis, at Washington Courthouse, was received by Col. Wm. H. Trimble to this effect: "The women over here are terribly in earnest." As the report of union in this strange work first greeted our ears and strengthened our hearts, "Praise ye the Lord" seemed more and more a fitting prelude to our "Magna Charta"—the 146th Psalm—and we entered upon the Saturday morning prayer service with renewed faith and courage.

Dr. Mathews, president of the Hillsboro Female College, the renowned and venerated educator of woman in our community for so many years, presided over the meeting, and spoke to our hearts such words of earnest commendation and sympathy that the "doubting ones" could but have exclaimed, with Thomas of old, "My Lord and my God."

Wm. H. H. Dunn, the druggist, who was not at his place of business on the morning of the visit by the "band of ladies," sent in his reply to their "appeal." It read as follows:

LADIES:—In compliance with my agreement I given by this promise, that I will carry on my business in the future as I have in the past; that is to say, that in the sale of intoxicating liquors I will comply with the law, nor will I sell to any person whose father, mother, wife or daughter send me a written request not to make such sale.

There was some discussion as to whether Mr. Dunn's pledge should be received as satisfactory. Remarks were made by the gentlemen as well as the ladies, but it was soon apparent that there were mothers in that audience who could never vote to have "his business" carried on "in the future as in the past." Action was therefore deferred.

Next in order came a message from Mr. Bennet, the Master of the Hillsboro Grange: "Say to the ladies for me, God bless them, and poor man that I am, I will back them with fifty dollars if it is needed."

It was resolved at this Saturday morning meeting to hold a mass temperance meeting in the M. E. church on Sunday evening, December 28, and a committee of three ministers, Rev. Dr. McSurely, of the Presbyterian church, Rev. Cowden, of the Methodist, and Rev. John Ely, of the Episcopal church, were chosen to take charge of said meeting, inviting both ladies and gentlemen to speak. Rev. Ely was also requested to invite Father Donahue, of the Catholic church, and his temperance society to join us in our work.

After uniting in a fervent prayer and singing part of a favorite hymn, the committee adjourned to meet on Monday morning, at the same time and place. Procession then formed, and visits were made at two hotels, and three saloons. One of the saloon-keepers expressed a great desire to get out of the business. With this encouraging prospect we ended the first week of the "Crusade" in Hillsboro.

Hillsboro, O.

LUCY LARCOM.

BY ESTHER T. HOUSH.

It is the lives like the stars, which simply pour down upon us the calm light of their bright and faithful being, up to which we look, and out of which we gather the deepest calm and courage.—Phillips Brooks.

When the sad tidings came that dear Lucy Larcom had gone away from human life, those beautiful words of Phillips Brooks repeated themselves over and over to our consciousness. Was it not a striking coincidence that upon opening "A New England Girlhood," the first sentence that met our eyes was this: "We cannot look honestly into ourselves, without acknowledging with humility our debt to the lives around us for whatever of power or beauty has been poured into ours"? Debtor the world is to-day to these royal souls who have literally strewn the earth-way and the heaven-way with light and beauty.

There is something entrancing as well as absorbing about the study of Lucy Larcom's life. You are filled with wonder, delight, gratitude and love. It was a high privilege to know her and a blessing all womanhood may have to know about her.

The Beverly home had welcomed eight children before Lucy came, in 1826. The family name was traced back to Britain and thence to the La Combes of France, but of heritage she boasted not, save that her ancestors were honest, hard-working, God-fearing people.

She was born a poet. This is proved by her memory of baby thoughts: "Sitting on the floor in a square of sunshine made by an open window, the leaf shadows from great boughs outside dancing and wavering around me, I seemed to be talking to them and they to me in unknown tongues, that left within me an ecstasy yet unforgotten. Those shadows had brought a message to me, from an unseen somewhere, which my baby heart was to keep forever. The wonder of that moment often returns. Shadow traceries of bough and leaf still seem to me like the hieroglyphics of a lost language."

And this was almost before she could walk. There is no explanation to give of such experiences, except the soul is the "breath of God."

Lucy was sent to school when two years of age. "Aunt Hannah" was the household guardian angel of the neighborhood, coddling the babies, and teaching them to spell and read in the New Testament, and keeping them safe while the overtaxed mothers performed their domestic duties. Lucy's "first verse"—and that was considered a great acquisition—was, "Let not your heart be troubled. In my Father's house are many mansions." Her thoughts about it were wise beyond her two and a half years: "The Voice in the Book seemed so tender. Somebody was speaking who had a heart, and who knew that even a little child's heart was sometimes troubled. And it was a Voice that called us somewhere; to the Father's house, with its many mansions, so sunshiny and so large. It was a beautiful vision that came to me with the words, I could see it with my eyes shut. . . . The vision gave me a sense of freedom, fearless and infinite. What was there to be afraid of anywhere? Even we little children could see the open door of our Father's house. . . . . The spacious mansions were not far away. They were my home. I had known them, and should return to them again." Thus was established in her soul a faith in the Unseen that never was dimmed.

Miss Larcom says the "must have" of her life was poetry. She meant by that the spiritual conception of the higher life that always surrounds the lower. Other people might see only the prose; Lucy saw that none the less that she saw the poetry the more, for she thus defines herself: "To me the reverent faith of the people I lived among, and their faithful, everyday living, was poetry: blossoms and trees and blue skies were poetry. God himself was poetry. As I grew up and lived on, friendship became to me the deepest and sweetest ideal of poetry. To live in other lives, to take their power and beauty into our own, that is poetry experienced, the most inspiring of all. . . To care for poetry in this way does not make one a poet, but it does make one feel blessedly rich."

It is remarkable that among her first formed sentences were these lines:

"My father and mother
Shall come unto the land."

She hummed them so constantly that her brother wrote them down with chalk on the underside of a table, where they remained for years. None knew where she heard them, but they seemed a prophecy of her life, her latest poem containing the sure hope of heaven, and her last book being fitly called, "At the Beautiful Gate."

She was fond of hymns, the rhythm, the pictures and suggestions, and learned many in church when too young to understand the large words the minister used. She liked "the climbing and flying hymns," the glad hymns, the hallelujahs, and those that had mountains or seas or flowers in.

Lucy did not love to work. She went with the rest of the children to weed the garden, but soon slipped away under the apple trees "to hear the birds sing." She did not care that she had only "a tarnished copper cent," while her sister had two or three bright ones. She had what she wanted most, a nearness to the heart of nature. Blessed child! She was a very little girl then.

But she knew girls must learn to work, and as her older sisters had learned almost the only trade open to women at that time, tailor's work, she thought "the chief end of woman was to make clothing for mankind," and when only six years old, led along by her sister as they went to church, she looked at her father from heels to head, and thought, "How tall he is! and how long his coat looks! and how many thousand stitches there must be in his coat and pantaloons! I suppose I have got to grow up and have a husband, and put all those stitches into his coat and pantaloons. Oh, I never, never can do it."

And she never did, but she was as useful in other ways. She loved to knit, because she could read, except "when there was widening or narrowing to be done."

Lucy made her first rhymes at seven, and afterward wrote little books of ballads illustrated with colors which she "squeezed down into the cracks of the garret floor."

There was one little sister born after Lucy, making ten "blue-eyed babies" that blessed the Beverly home. "None too many," the mother declared, even when compelled by the father's death to leave the sacred home and take her little ones to Lowell, that she might earn their living by keeping a boarding home for mill girls. Lucy attended school for a while, but in 1835 began her work in the mill, glad to help earn money. It was such a little—only a dollar a week besides her board, but it helped mother.

Writing verses was her pastime. She made small account of it, thinking "they were in everybody's mind and anybody could write them who chose." She began while in the mill to fit herself for a teacher "or to write, as the way opened." Her sister Emilie worked also in the mill, and was a great help to Lucy, as she was a close student, always having a book about her. She suggested the little fortnightly paper, "The Diving Bell," to be made up of mill girl contributions, all without name. It was soon understood who wrote the verses.

Two magazines published by the girls at the mill were the outgrowth of literary societies in the churches. The Operative's Magazine was finally merged in The Lowell Offering. This continued until about 1846. Emilie and Lucy both wrote acceptably for these magazines. In later years Lucy was assistant editor of Our Young Folks, and for a year or more its editor-in-chief. Probably it was there that she wrote,

"And I, for one, would much rather,
Could I merit so sweet a thing,
Be the poet of little children,
Than the laureate of a king."

The years between 1835 and 1845, spent at Lowell, had been improved in reading and study in every moment of leisure, and at twenty, Lucy must have been a cultivated and capable young woman, fitted by discipline and overcoming for the larger life that soon opened before her. No better proof is there of God's plan for His children than the ordering that came to Lucy. Her sister Emilie had married and her husband's health failing, they removed West, asking Lucy to accompany them. The mother had broken up the home and gone to Beverly to live with her older daughters, so there was no reason why she should not go.

Here, at Monticello Seminary, she was a student three years, defraying her expenses at first by helping in the domestic work, and afterwards, as teacher in the preparatory department. What she wrote was published with grateful thanks, that a writer does appreciate, no matter how great the need. Her first remuneration was five dollars for a poem in Sartain's Magazine.

Miss Larcom was too truly a New Englander to be at home in the West. She returned in 1852, enriched by her improved opportunities and prepared for the ten years of successful teaching that followed. She wrote "Hannah Binding Shoes" soon after her return, and by a singular circumstance became known through it to the reading public. The note to the editor was lost, the poem was published over a nom de plume of his choosing, and when she claimed its authorship she was denounced as a "literary thiefess," and had to come to her own defense. The curious incident gave the song a wide circulation.

The war won from her many patriotic poems, that ranked well with those of Whittier. The "Loyal Woman's No" has the ring of courage that would brave a battlefield.

"Not yours—because you are not man enough
To grasp your country's measure of a man.
If such as you, when freedom's ways are rough,
Cannot walk in them, learn that women can!"

During these years of the war she met her "first success." The Atlantic Monthly, James Russell Lowell, editor, accepted and published "The Rose Enthroned," which though without name, gave her a firm hold as a writer. It is a proof of the excellence of her work that the publishers of the Atlantic have issued her books from time to time, and consider them of lasting value. Besides her poems, which are variously and beautifully published, there is "The Unseen Friend," "As it is in Heaven," "An Idyl of Work," "Breathings of the Better Life," "A New England Girlhood," and choice books, selected and compiled by Miss Larcom, "Roadside Poems for Summer Travelers," "Hillside and Seaside in Poetry" and "Beckonings for Every Day."

Very precious seems the last book we can ever have from that careful and loving hand, "At the Beautiful Gate," containing her religious hymns and poems. The poems of Lucy Larcom! shall we not read them with increased interest now that the beautiful secret of her life is known to us? So many are joyous, like condensed sunshine and breezes:

"Have you ever heard of the Sing-away bird,
That sings where the Runaway river
Runs down with its rills from the bald-headed hills
That stand in the sunshine and shiver?
Oh, sing! Sing-away! Sing-away!
How the pines and the birches are stirred
By the trill of the Sing-away bird!"

Miss Larcom understood the prose as well as poetry of life. "Sylvia" is exquisite in word painting. The lover and the young husband called the fair girl, "Sylvia—my own magnolia flower," but as the years went on,

"Furrowed his brow became, and stern,
As his own farm-lands rough.
He called her 'wife,' in accents gruff.
Why should she for her girl-name yearn?
Was she not his? Enough.

"Enough! enough to fill the bound
Of woman's heart is he,
Who leaves no heaven-growth in her free,
Who guards not for her what he found
Her life of life to be?"

And not till "an early sleep came death, life's ache to drown," did he realize how he had defrauded his wife of the one thing she craved, his love—then he searched the sweet New England woods for the magnolia flowers and placed them in the dear, dead hands, with the cry of "Sylvia." "Her soul smiled back, she heard."

Miss Larcom's sister Emilie passed away before her last book was published—in the fall of 1892. "It has just missed her earthly approval," she wrote in dedication, and missed also "the personal word of benediction from our beloved poet Whittier," who had been her steadfast friend through all the years.

The mystery of life is solved for all these, the faithful sister, the sweet singer, Whittier, and for dear Lucy Larcom, who entered the "Beautiful Gate," April 17, 1893. Earth is richer for her life; heaven is nearer; life itself is dearer. What more fitting expression of our share in her now, than her own words to "Elizabeth":

"I cannot think that any change
Could ever thy sweet soul estrange
From the familiar human ties;
Thou art the same, though inmost heaven
Its wisdom to thy thought has given,
Its beauty kindled in thine eyes.

"The same to us, as warm, as true,
Whatever beautiful or new
With thy unhindered growth may blend;
Here as life broadens, love expands;
How must it bloom in those free lands,
Where thou dost walk, beloved friend."

COLUMBIAN CRUMBS.

The Woman's Congresses.

BY B. V. CUSHMAN, M. D.

Magnificent and unique as is the architecture of the World's Fair buildings, outstripping in size and beauty those of any former Exposition, as do these housings of industrial triumph, they are not the distinguishing feature of our great Fair. Heretofore progress has paraded solely upon the feet of material achievements, but now the world gathers to see her try her wings of spiritual and intellectual growth. The was signalized in the Hall of Columbus the morning of May 15. President Bonney "touched the button," the roar of oratory began, and the machinery of the World's Congresses was in motion. The polished rafters of the Halls of Columbus and Washington—for both had to be opened to accommodate the great gathering—were aflutter with the flags of many nations. Spanish and American colors predominated, although others were well represented. A gorgeous banner of gold-colored silk, upon which the Chinese dragon—a dangerous looking beast, with back like a saw, belly of flaming red and tail of bright green, was pictured as tossing the globe upon his "smellers"—hung in a conspicuous place in the Hall of Washington, confronting a shield, from which the British lion, rampant, glared defiantly. In the midst of these emblems of war there was peace, the keynote of the occasion being the unity of the spirit and the oneness of the race in Him who is Father of us all.

President Bonney, in his address, announced a new age and a new leader. His name is Peace. "Henceforth, excepting only the names by which the Prince of Peace is invoked, the mightiest word in all the languages is peace. In the name of this new commander we proclaim a universal fraternity of learning and virtue as the best means by which ignorance, misunderstanding, prejudice and animosity can be removed." The powers of evil may take alarm, for their downfall is at hand in the day when the good people of the world in large numbers espouse the positive side of reform and undertake to capture the kingdom of darkness, not by the sword of denunciation, but by steady shining. "Overcome evil with good," said the Conqueror Has it ever been overcome by any other means?

Many names mentioned of those who had helped on the plans for the congresses were living blossoms, but there was one rich sheaf of gathered grain. James G. Blaine's influence in the Department of State secured for the Congress Auxiliary its official recognition by the government. Cardinal Manning set his seal upon it by promising two papers, one for the Labor Congress and one for the Catholic. Lord Tennyson sent greetings, sympathy and the promise of a song for the Authors' Congress. A hymn was expected from Whittier. Ex-President Hayes had accepted the chairmanship of the Congress of Charities and Philanthropy; Phillips Brooks and George William Curtis were to have given of their respective treasures of thought and oratory. Turning from the glance backward and upward toward these glorified generals in the army of peace, President Bonney looks forward with prophetic vision, and sees the hosts of earth in finer armor fighting on moral fields and charging up the heights of intellectual achievement: "The piercing bayonet of perception and the conquering sword of truth will take the place of weapons of steel, and the artillery of argument will supersede the shot and shell hurled by the mighty guns of modern war." He sees a mighty pageant coming into view, "at its head a golden banner, bearing the golden legend of woman's progress." It has been Judge Bonney's pride to have the Woman's Congress lead all the rest in brilliancy and interest as well as in point of time. I must not forget to tell you that in his dream of fair women and brave men he saw "Temperance, greatest of mundane physicians, appealing to all mankind to shun the appalling miseries which intemperance entails."

After the president's address the platform was given to the ladies and the

was inaugurated. Mrs. Palmer in a few well-chosen words—her speeches are always like "apples of gold"—welcomed the earth and all that dwell therein, and made way for the energetic vice-president, Mrs. Charles Henrotin. That lady is the embodiment of brightness and womanly force, and in a few minutes told the strangers assembled all about the initiation and growth of "the Congress idea" of which I have told you before.

Mrs. May Wright Sewall delivered a finished address upon the "Solidarity of Human Interests," citing this occasion as an illustration of her theme. She linked together the "leaders of the woman movement"—Miriam, teaching Moses and training the world's greatest lawgiver, Sappho surrounded by her students, and the legion of modern women who are shaping public opinion, by their influence upon individual minds, into a golden chain of power.

The array of "foreign delegates" was extremely interesting. These women from over sea are just like us. The surprising thing about it is that in the upper air of high thinking so much of race characteristics drop away. Mrs. Nico Beck-Meyer declares that American women and Danish women have their eyes upon a common object, giving several illustrations of this community of thought and action, attributing it to "the One Spirit, that blows where it wants to." (Why don't we freshen our Scripture by interpreting it so simply?) None seem more "like ours" than the slender, vivacious, eagle-eyed Finnish women, of names unpronounceable by American tongue.

DRESS IMPROVEMENT.

No department conference was so jammed as was that of the National Council of women of the United States the morning they considered wherewithal shall we be clothed. Lucy Stone, her sweet face and shapely head set off by the characteristic white lace cap, that looks like the materialization of a halo, told of the early struggle, when women cast off their shackles altogether, adopting the hermaphrodite costume of Mrs. Bloomer. For three years she wore it, and then laid it aside because she suffered in spirit though enjoying great freedom in body. Experience has proven that woman can never be happy and hideous at the same time. Appropriately enough she was followed by Mrs. Frances Russell who explained that "beauty makes reform possible." Her own costuming that morning vindicated all she claimed. But she is statuesque in height and proportion. Given, Mrs. Russell's figure and we would all put on the toga. She dwelt in glowing terms upon the beauty of the body, when it is lithe, and its curves tender and delicate, indicating spirituality. "Only one thing is more important than a woman's clothes, and that is the woman," affirmed the lady. "Art means putting on something to make you look better." Mrs. Russell was especially severe toward the belt. "You can't have a complexion if you have a belt," was her terse way of saying that the color and texture of the skin depends upon free circulation of the blood. Then Mrs. Jenness Miller hopped upon the table which served to elevate the platform, looking like a robin after a shower. She was in rainy day dress, a tidy costume of dark blue cloth with Eton jacket and fluffy blue silk shirt. The distinguishing feature was the shortness of the skirt which just cleared the top of the high gaiter. She thinks this might be initiated as a storm costume. It does seem highly probable that if one of a hundred women would put on this dress for rainy days the ninety-and-nine might follow, when we remember the awkwardness of holding up umbrella and skirts at the same time, and there is no greater delusion than "skirts clearing the ground." Every one of us knows that four inches is the very lowest watermark in a heavy shower. Mrs. Miller also revels in a coat with pockets. "The inequality of the sexes begins in the pocket. The little boy has pockets. He fills them with things 'to trade off'—has possessions, and with them power."

Octavia Bates calls upon man to study women's dress from the hygienic standpoint—he has long studied it from the financial point of view—and aid in the evolution of styles that will not tend to nervousness and ill temper.

WOMEN IN MUNICIPAL GOVERNMENT, LITERATURE, ET AL.

I cannot give a flash apiece of all the gems of thought that have dazzled me in these days of the great Congress passing at the time of this writing. Mrs. Lindon Bates said: "Woman in the past lived the sentiments and ideals that literature expressed. To-day, a triumphant press crowns in her the symbol of its highest. Henceforth she shall both live and speak."

Ida A. Harper urged women to press to their proper place in city government. "Call on the great reserve force of women representing the elements now conspicuously lacking in municipal government, recognize their rights as citizens, let the best forces counteract the worst, and then we shall have a government by the people that will not be a failure."

Mrs. Lozier, in the same vein, said: "If political life and political privilege cannot be forced upon the unready woman we must exercise the divine patience of the true evolutionist, and work upon her will and her desire by the slow process of education."

Some delightful social functions have accompanied the congress. First, a large and formal reception in the halls of the Art Institute, where one thousand guests were introduced to the officers of the Auxiliary; on the following day at the West Side Woman's Club two hundred ladies "received" the distinguished guests. The reception given by the Woman's Press Association to the National Editorial Society and by the Woman's Club to the Congresses, were delightful, as the women had by this time come to know each other in the flesh, who heretofore had only "met in the ink," as one of them said.

EDITORIAL CORRESPONDENCE.

"It was a Famous Victory."

DEAR UNION SIGNAL:—First of all, how did the "British Women" (as the society is called in common parlance) "come about"?

In the spring of 1876 Mother Stewart, of Crusade fame, visited England, and as the outcome of meetings held in her honor, and urgent exhortations made by her and Mrs. Margaret Parker (who had led the Crusade in Dundee, Scotland,) the First British Women's Temperance Council was held at Newcastle-upon-Tyne. This call began as follows: "At the earnest request of the Women's Christian Temperance Union of America, conveyed to us by Mrs. Annie M. Wittenmeyer, its esteemed president, Miss Frances E. Willard, its corresponding secretary, and others, we hereby convene a meeting of women connected with the various temperance organizations in the United Kingdom." At this convention a constitution was adopted, officers elected, and the good ship "B. W. T. A." was bravely launched. From that time to the present there has been frequent interchange of letters, documents, and occasional visits from leaders.

In 1891 Lady Henry Somerset, accompanied by our own Mrs. Hannah Whitall Smith, came to us as delegates to the first Convention of the World's Women's Christian Temperance Union, which up to that time had been conducted by committees. In 1885 the British Women's Temperance Association by a vote at its annual meeting became affiliated with the World's Women's Christian Temperance Union; but from the first its executive committee, composed of women whose temperament and experience rendered them unsuited for so large an undertaking as was entrusted to their hands, has steadily antagonized the progressive ideas of their two leaders, first, Mrs. Margaret Bright Lucas and later Lady Henry Somerset, who came to her kingdom in May, 1890, a few months after the translation of Mrs. Lucas to a better world.

The foregoing statements are merely by way of explanation, my purpose being to give some account of the remarkable annual meeting that has just closed, by which Lady Henry Somerset has been triumphantly vindicated and reëlected to the office of president, carrying every point she made before the Council, and being fitted out with an executive committee, representative of the entire country instead of confined to the metropolis. The new members of this committee are, like their leader, women of progressive intellect and purpose.

With the considerateness which is a marked trait of her character, Lady Henry did not ask for the retirement of a single member of the committee by which she had been so heavily handicapped during the three years of her administration, but simply proposed a large addition of new members so as to make it more practically representative of the provincial branches as well as London, and to secure a wider outlook. She did not ask the Conference to take advanced positions but confined her efforts to improving the machinery with which they were to work. The last year has been most trying because the relations of the two parties in the B. W. T. A. were greatly strained. This situation was the more grievous because the temperance agitation in England has now culminated in politics and the government has made local prohibition a feature of its program; but no matter how golden may be the waving harvest if the reaper breaks down there is nothing so important to be done as to mend the machine and set it once more in motion. This is what occurred on May 4 and 5 in Memorial Hall, London.

A breakfast had been given on the day previous by Lady Henry to about two hundred of her supporters, at which her health was proposed by Mrs. Massingberd, a prominent member of the executive committee, who has warmly supported the policy of the "Young Chief," as English women love to call their leader. To show the spirit of Lady Henry's adherents I insert the little off-hand speech of Mrs. Massingberd, which was received with demonstrations of approval and delight:

MY DEAR FRIENDS:—I have the great honor of rising to propose the health, prosperity and success of our beloved president. I say "beloved" advisedly, because if she is not beloved she is nothing at all. None but those who have worked with her, day after day, week after week, month after month, on this terribly up-hill executive can know what she is and what she can be and what she has been to all of us; in no other way can they understand the tremendous work that she has done and is doing for her association. No, they must sit there with us, for only those of us who are on the executive can understand what she has gone through, what she has suffered, because she loves you, because she carries you in her heart, and because she will go on working at whatever she has set her hand to do. She has poured out her talents, her time, her money, everything, and the majority expects all this and a great deal more, for it requires that Lady Henry Somerset should be a wooden lay-figure, a puppet, that is pulled by a string whichever way one wishes. That is the sort of president the majority want to have, and that is the president we will not have. There are thousands (millions, may I not say, thank heaven!) who are perfectly fitted for that sort of task, but if you want a born leader, a God-inspired orator, then elect her, and elect her by a thundering majority! Let us carry her in on our shoulders; let us show men that women can be loyal to their leader; they say that loyalty has passed away with men; let us show that it is not so with women. Let us carry her in with an overwhelming majority. Let us, if need be, fight for her, but happily, that is not needed, but let us go down into the melee to-morrow, and drawing our swords of fact, argument and enthusiasm, let us cry, "A Somerset! A Somerset!"

Next morning came the "tug of war." The convention opened at ten o'clock and its doors had been so guarded by the executive committee (fifteen of whose twenty-six members have strenuously opposed Lady Henry), that even their president could not enter until she had presented a ticket duly sent her, to which her signature had to be affixed, and counterfoils also signed by her had to be torn off by the stewards, of which each entrance door had two! A journalist playfully paragraphing these facts declared that they should have required a photograph of Lady Henry to make the identification complete. It should be mentioned that until this year no such extreme caution has ever been exercised. Under the circumstances I would not embarrass Lady Henry by accompanying her to the platform and so quietly occupied a seat in the gallery to which I was admitted with other spectators by a ticket.

As all the arrangements were made by those who opposed Lady Henry, her brightening touch was nowhere visible, and to the eye of a white-ribboner the large hall looked barren, not a flower or a motto, not a banner or shield; everything was as unadorned as are the usual meeting places of men "in convention assembled," but one thing was evident, the meeting had well nigh doubled its numbers since last year. There is nothing that furnishes such an "arousement" as the prospect of debate and the opportunity of rallying around a leader who is worthy of our loyalty. I venture to say there has been more awakened thought, intelligent purpose and warmth of affection among the "British women," in this last year than during all the preceding years of their somewhat moderate history.

The first day was entirely devoted to the great debate. Mrs. Lloyd Jones, of Rhyl, Wales, wife of a Wesleyan minister, and a leading woman in the Liberal Federation that supports Mr. Gladstone and his politics, had been invited by Lady Henry to take the chair in her place. The choice of Mrs. Jones was acceptable to both sides, as she knew nothing, in detail, of the controversy.

The case was stated by the majority in the executive committee who brought forward five women whom they considered their best speakers. Their statements were in writing, and were given in a manner creditable to those who made them. Their points may be thus briefly summarized:

1. Lady Henry Somerset desired to introduce into the program of the society subjects which the majority of the executive committee did not consider germane to temperance work, which, according to their interpretation of their constitution, should be confined to the total abstinence propaganda; to the "one plank" theory they were devoted, and the "do-everything" policy was detested by them. American methods were not adapted to Great Britain

2. Lady Henry had shown more interest in the World's Women's Christian Temperance Union in England than in her own society.

3. She had communicated directly with the local branches (or unions, as we should say), rather than through the executive committee.

4. She had declined their offers of conciliation.

During this presentation of their case (which occupied two hours, and was listened to with the closest attention), the speakers were frequently interrupted by cries of "Hear, hear," from one side, and "No, no," from the other, besides receiving much applause according to the opinions of the different factions. Meanwhile, Lady Henry Somerset sat quietly at her desk beside the chairman, making swift notes of all the points brought forward, and when her hour arrived and she stood forward to reply, the scene was memorable. The galleries were packed with women representing both sides, and the floor was filled with delegates, while those on the platform were mostly her opponents, her ever faithful coadjutors on the committee being seated beside her, the entire number, including the president, being but seven. Women rose, staid British women, let it be remembered, who had never before made such a demonstration in any audience, waved their handkerchiefs and cheered—actually hurrahed—for their president. It was a scene long to be remembered, and one that must have put fresh heart into the weary, patient leader who was its inspiration.

One of the best philanthropic workers in England recently said to me when I was speaking of Lady Henry's power: "Why, did you not know that she is regarded as the pluckiest woman in England?" That plucky woman now stood forward with a pamphlet in her hand entitled: "Our Position and Our Policy, a Reply to charges made against a minority of the Executive Committee of the British Women's Temperance Association, by its President, Lady Henry Somerset, at the Annual Council Meeting, 1893." This pamphlet has 152 pages, of which 61 form an appendix for reference; the others contain her speech which is annotated after the manner of law books, every topic of which she treats being clearly shown in the index. This pamphlet was placed in the hands of the delegates, indeed of every person in the hall just before Lady Henry began. I epitomize the index of marginal notes:

1. Reasosn for the positions maintained in this "Reply"; 2. A divergence from strictly constitutional methods warranted in extreme crisis; 3. Motives for accepting the presidency; 4. The system of titled or monied figureheads degrading to philanthropy; 5. Record of work for the past year to indicate the President's purpose not to be a figurehead; 6. Opposition rightly maintained a sign of healthful life; 7. Unauthorized suppression of the official organ and its one-sided character: 8. Direct communication with local societies rendered necessary by impossibility of obtaining fair dealings from that organ; 9. Efforts of prominent members of Executive Committee to prejudice local unions and the public against the president; 10. Documents sent from the office of the British Women's Temperance Association without authorization and anonymously; 11. Mrs. Stewart's attack on the president of the World's Women's Christian Temperance Union in which she accused her of attempting through her "ambushed American emissaries" to capture the British Women's Temperance Association; 12. The Executive Committee decline to apologize for this letter or to censure its author; 13. Mrs. Foster takes a hand and in our official organ endeavors to undermine the National Women's Christian Temperance Union and its president; 14. Mrs. L. M. N. Stevens, one of the secretaries of the National W. C. T. U., General Neal Dow and Rev. Joseph Cook send testimony in rebuttal; 15. The Executive Committee suspend the affiliation fee of the British Women to the World's Women's Christian Temperance Union without cause; 16. Full history of the origin of the British Women's Temperance Association showing that the cry against Americans comes with poor grace from British women; 17. The Executive Committee refuse to permit the World's Women's Christian Temperance Union to take offices in the same building with themselves; other offices are engaged on account of this opposition; 18. Why the president's engagements are made from her own office; 19. The Executive Committee open a private office; 20. England's duty to the wider movement; 21. Omission in delegate's copy of annual report of president's work in America; 22. Our want of courtesy in return for American hospitality; 23. Efforts made to defeat the organization and work of the Departmental Committee; 24. The "Conciliatory Conference" held in March does not conciliate because unfairly called and packed against the president; 25. Absurdity of sending a deputation to the president asking for conciliation when the conference had just adopted by unanimous vote a resolution upholding the majority of the Executive Committee which is equivalent to a censure on the minority and the president; 26. The president declines a conference over which a man is asked to preside for the reason that she thinks it would hurt the cause of women if they were not capable of presiding over their own conferences; 27. Misrepresentation of President by members of Executive Committee in communications with leading religious and philanthropic papers; 28. Misrepresentation in the official organ intended to make out that the president speaks lightly of the Total Abstinence Pledge; 29. Is the president an autocrat?

Lady Henry proves that although the executive claims that she is doing great harm to the society by advocating the ballot for women as one of its planks, insisting that the temperance movement to be successful must stand by the party that takes up our cause, that same executive had, as far back as 1887, published a suffrage leaflet in the official organ and kept it on sale, entitled, "The Women's Franchise Bill." Another was issued in 1892 wherein occurred such passages as these: "Surely, friends, a new motive force is wanted to urge forward our movement; that force must be the power of the women's vote; it is woman who must settle the drink question. One vote has more effect in Parliament than a thousand signatures to petitions. Let the temperance women of the country unite to obtain the franchise as the quickest way to gain their end. The leaders of the temperance cause are all in favor of woman's suffrage. Mrs. Margaret Bright Lucas declared a good many years ago that until women have votes for members of Parliament we shall never get the temperance question properly settled." Lady Henry also proved that the opposing majority of the executive committee had sent out to electors and taken sides with the Liberal party against the compensation clauses and on other occasions. She then asked, "Why did the executive drop politics and suffrage?" and answered it by saying that she could not but believe this was done in order to have a "cause of war" with her and to minimize her influence with conservative women. But the chief bone of contention was, perhaps, the World's Women's Christian Temperance Union of which a committee had long existed in connection with the British Women's Temperance Association, but which under the present controversy has expanded into a more thoroughly organized form and put forth more aggressive efforts. This would never have occurred if the executive committee had coöperated with Lady Henry in her enlarged outlook for the society

HEROES.

BY HELEN M. COOKE.

They are the heroes on life's field of battle
Who march with hearts unflinching to Death's gate,
Bearing their weight of suffering uncomplaining,
Life's greatest lesson learned—to watch and wait.

They are the righteous whose brief lives are counted
Not by professions, but by thoughts and deeds,
That have no selfhood save their joy of loving,
That have no fear of priestcraft and of creeds.

They are the victors who themselves have conquered
And grasped the fullness of self crucified;
Whose wounded feet have pressed the sacred olives
And found new hopes in sweetest hopes that died.

They are the saviours who lift off the crosses
From human shoulders weaker than their own.
Who bear unmurmuringly their pains and losses—
With lives unsung and brows without a crown.

They are life's blessing, the great wondrous army
Of patient mothers! reaching through all time
With steadfast love so tender and so saintly,
Unreached by human words or poet's rhyme!

Will they be crowned sometime, somewhere I wonder,
These kingly ones, the sainted and the true,
That pass into the solemn vale of silence,
Beyond the darkness of our shadowed view?

TEASING.

BY MRS. G. S. BARNES.

The other day I overheard a black-eyed woman lecturing her husband as follows:

"My dear, I don't see how you can think it right to tease children as you do. You have made that child believe it is her duty to come and live with you because her father has two little girls and you none. No doubt she is having a real struggle between a sense of duty and love of home. It is a shame to torment children that way."

"Oh, fudge," interrupted her husband, "children are not so easily tormented."

"I remember how I used to suffer when I was a child. There was a young Irishman living near us who was the terror of my life. I suppose he was a fine fellow, but I would go a mile out of my way, any time, to avoid meeting him. He probably never dreamed of the dread his teasing inspired in me. I had been very fond of playing with his brother's little girls; but after he came to live in the family I couldn't be induced to go near the Maguires, unless I knew Jim was away from home.

"On one of those happy occasions I went there to spend the day, but just as we were in the midst of our first game of pullaway, he suddenly appeared. 'Hello, sis!' he called out to me. He was several rods away, but without waiting to snatch up my sunbonnet, I scrambled over the back fence and ran home at my highest speed. I feel sorry for myself yet, whenever I think how I was made to suffer by almost every grown person of my acquaintance."

"But you were a peculiar child," remonstrated her husband; "everything you have ever told me about yourself goes to prove it."

"No, I was not peculiar. There are thousands of little children that suffer as intensely as I did, just because people like to amuse themselves. Mrs. Grayson told me she didn't know what to do with Roy any more; the men on the street had called him a girl, and made fun of him because he wore kilts instead of trousers, till he was afraid to leave the house. She bought him a beautiful cloak, and he had cried himself sick because it was not a coat such as men wear. He said the men would call him a girl more than ever. Think of beings calling themselves men taking pleasure in tormenting a little child! 'It is a shame and a sin,' as grandma used to say.

"I always had a great love for music, and when I was a child enjoyed singing at my work or play; or I would have enjoyed it if I had been let alone, but I seldom tried it without some one saying, 'What is that strange noise I hear?' or 'What are you groaning about; are you sick?' till I grew to think I couldn't sing, and mustn't try. At the Normal, pupils were obliged to take vocal music, but though I did well in all my other studies, in music I was a total failure. The minute I was called up to sing an exercise, my confidence all left me, and my wits took flight. Prof. P— was one of the best instructors I ever knew, and I now know that I might have sung well if all hope and confidence hadn't been ridiculed out of me. I consider that a great wrong was done me."

"'Alas, for him who cannot sing,
But dies with all his music in him,'" quoted the husband with mock solemnity.

"Miss Willard says of her childhood," she continued without appearing to notice the interruption, 'that no right effort was ever discouraged, and no bud of aspiration ever chilled.' That is the kind of encouragement children should have.

"The first time I ever left home, for any length of time, my Aunt Janette invited me to spend a year with her, and attend school. To go away to school seemed to me the height of bliss, and I should have been supremely happy in my new school life if it had not been that Uncle George was an incorrigible tease. He was very dignified and grave looking, so I walked without suspicion into the snares that he set for me. He really made my life miserable.

"One day he asked me if I knew that spotted cows never have teeth in the upper jaw in front. I couldn't see the relation between spots and teeth, and told him I didn't believe it. It didn't occur to me to ask whether that were not true of all cows. He urged me to interview 'Old Spot' on the subject, and this I made several attempts to do, but her cowship didn't propose to be fooled with. Then he advised me to write to my father, who was a farmer, to see what he said about it. I was just simple enough to fall into that trap, too. Every day uncle would ask whether I had heard from my father, and would laugh till his sides shook. The story got out, and everybody had fun about it; it was even in the papers, and to this day I can't go to G—— but some one will grin at me and say, 'What about those teeth?'

"Just before going to aunt's I united with the Baptist church, and was very happy in my Christian life. Having been brought up among Baptists, I naturally thought all right-minded people belonged to that church. But Uncle George began at once to tease me about my church. I suppose he had no idea that I would take in earnest all he said. I was completely unsettled and very unhappy. I reasoned with myself that if the Baptist church was not the right church it was my immediate duty to find which was right and unite with it. While my mind should have been free and calm for study, I was worrying over doctrine, and full of distress lest I must leave my own, dear church.

"One night I dreamed that I went to heaven. The Saviour himself met me at the pearly gate, and as we walked toward the throne, I said to myself: 'Now is my time to settle this church question,' and I said: 'Lord, there are some questions I have long wished to have settled, and first of all, what church on earth is nearest right?' I waited breathless for the answer. He gave me a kindly, quizzical look and said:

"'Not the Baptist, by any means.'

"I was so startled I awoke in a cold perspiration,—oh, you needn't laugh; it is no laughing matter to me. You and Uncle George and others like you will have to repent of the sin of 'hectoring' little children, and simple-minded people like me. It is a sin, a 'mighty' mean one, too. The savage tortures his unhappy victim, and teasing is a relic of that same barbarism. I say it is a sin that you'll have to repent of before you die, or you'll hear the Lord say to you at heaven's gate what I dreamed He said of the Baptist church: 'Not right, by any means.'"

PROFESSOR DRUMMOND AND THE COACHMAN.

BY M. J. MIDDLETON.

On one occasion while he was in this country the Professor related a story which teaches the frequent opportunity of speaking words of suggestion and encouragement to persons who, although desirous to do right, are perhaps too weak to be firm and faithful to resolutions. And as we think of the good we may have the opportunity of doing by improving every occasion, we feel that all these instances are incentives to Christian work everywhere.

Professor Drummond was staying with a lady whose coachman had signed the pledge, but afterward had yielded to the temptation to drink again. As the Professor was about to be taken to the depot by the coachman the lady said to him:

"Now this man will drive you to the train; say a word to him if you can. He is a good sort of a fellow, and really wants to reform, but is weak."

While they were driving along the Professor tried to think how he could introduce the subject, when suddenly the horses bolted. The driver held onto the reins and manipulated them well. The carriage swayed about and the Professor expected every moment to be upset, but presently the man drew the horses up, steaming with perspiration, and said:

"I say, that was a close shave. Our trap might have been smashed into matenwood, and you wouldn't have given any more addresses."

"Well," said Professor Drummond, "how was it that it didn't happen?"

"Why," was the reply, "because I knew how to manage the horses."

"Now," said the Professor, "look here, my friend, I will give you a bit of advice. Here's my train coming; I hear you have been signing the pledge and breaking it again. Now I want to give you this bit of advice: throw the reins of your life to Jesus Christ." And he jumped down and got into the train.

The driver told afterwards that it came upon him like a flash of lightning. He saw where he had made a mistake, and from that day he ceased to try to manipulate his own life, but gave the reins to Jesus Christ. There are many of us who can take the Professor's advice and also learn the same lesson.

MENTAL SHORT-SIGHT.

BY ELIZABETH CUMINGS.

If I fail to nod at my next door neighbor when he has nodded at me, he is wont to bring me up with the question, "Why, what's the matter with you?" though he knows full well I see my nearest and dearest but as shadows without my spectacles. But when I have attacks of the insidious mental infirmity which corresponds to my physical defect, alas, no one warns me that I am enwrapt in the trifles in my hand, and am not seeing the blue heights upon my horizon, and as I look about my neighborhood and my town, I note that short-sight of the mind is almost endemic, as the doctors say, among women.

When the average man has been given all the credit he deserves, and some he does not, the fact remains that the income which he receives for his labor and which supports his family he considers peculiarly his own. Whether he be right or wrong is outside the present question, but the effect of this notion of his is to make the average woman, his wife, have a one-sided notion of values, and to hold dimes over-precious and her own labor at nothing. So we have the spectacle of women sewing themselves ill making over their old gowns, and spending nearly the price of new material in rubbishy trimmings to cover the marks of piecing and old stitches, and the still more trying spectacle of women using three or four dollars worth of groceries and coal, plus no end of muscle and nerve-force, to earn a dollar and seventy-five cents for a church or a cause. In their blind struggle for financial freedom, to give as heart and head prompt, women have saddled themselves with the church kitchen, a contrivance admirably adapted to give the minimum of return for a maximum of effort, and which should receive the name it deserves, "drudgery extension."

The result of this mistake is not alone backache and vexation of spirit. Out of it has sprung a false idea of the real function of the church. The education of the spirit in spiritual things and organized labor for souls runs the danger of exhaling in a restless activity after pennies, and a church work, falsely so called, which is but another name for church entertainments, which convert that organization into a social club, with attendant heartburnings, envyings and ambitions. Dr. Holland used to say that women stand between men and God; they seem just now content to stand between men and the church range. We women need to study arithmetic, especially profit and loss, and we need, I say it with humility, far-sighted spectacles of the sort Sam Weller called "double hextra magnifiers."

POSSIBLE AND COMING.

BY FRANCES E. WILLARD.

I believe the core and centre of the dress question in our day to be purely commercial. In other ages there were other reasons for our bondage; but in this money-loving age, great manufacturers and merchants put their heads together to widen the market for fabrics of all kinds, and they change "the fashion" that clothes may sooner become out of date so that new ones must be bought. This is at the basis of the cry that crinoline is to be re-introduced. It is for this reason that bustles go out and come in, and that bonnets change their periphery from the size of a coffee-cup to that of a cart-wheel. It would be greatly to the advantage of women if they were permitted to pay a tax to the manufacturers, merchants and modistes, and then go on and dress themselves comformably to reason. "Some sweet day, by and by," when there are enough women who do reason, the merchants and manufacturers will in vain seek to hold them under the present bondage of false hygiene, false taste and false morals in dress. Some day every child that is born will find not only that its coming has been prepared for by its mother, but by that greater mother now so severe, but then to be so reasonable and kind—society; food, clothing, shelter will be assured to every human being in exchange for a few hours' work each day. We shall then be able to give our attention to the higher development of mind and body, to ethics, esthetics and religion; to nature, invention, and the amenities of life; to the uplift of the races that have not yet reached our level; and to the study of animals, so that they will be developed, and very likely the more intelligent among them will learn to speak, and to be vastly happier and more rational than they have ever been. At least I like to think about these things and help them to become, "so far as in me lies."

A SPRING SONG.

LD Mother Earth woke up from her sleep,
And found she was cold and bare:
The winter was over, the spring was near,
And she had not a dress to wear.
"Alas!" she sighed, with great dismay,
"Oh, where shall I get my clothes?
There's not a place to buy a suit,
And a dressmaker no one knows."

"I'll make you a dress," said the springing grass,
Just looking above the ground;
"A dress of green of the loveliest sheen,
To cover you all around."
"And we," said the dandelions gay,
"Will dot it with yellow bright."
"I'll make it a fringe," said forget-me-not,
"Of blue, very soft and light."

"We'll embroider the front," said the violets,
"With a lovely purple hue."
"And we," said the roses, "will make you a crown
Of red, jeweled over with dew."
"And we'll be your gems," said a voice from the shade
Where the ladies' ear-drops live—
"Orange is the color for any queen,
And the best that we have to give."

Old Mother Earth was thankful and glad,
As she put on her dress so gay;
And that is the reason, my little ones,
She is looking so lovely to-day.

A DECORATION DAY AT HOME.

BY ADA M. MELVILLE.

"Oh, hum! I don't want to stay here—I don't! I don't! I want to go with the rest, I do! Just see that blue sky, and the bluffs are covered with flowers—and—and— Well, what's the use of fussing? The blue sky isn't all over at the cemetery, and I'll see if I can't act more like a fifteen-year-old girl than a five-year-old baby, so there, now!" and pretty Jessie Armstrong stamped one foot so emphatically that she scared the white kitten lying asleep in her lap.

"Talking to yourself, Jessie?" asked her mother, coming out on to the wide veranda and sitting down on the step beside her daughter.

"Yes'm; sputtering a little because I cannot go over there," waving her hand to the green hills in the distance, on whose sides, among the shadows, rested those who had gone home to God. "The soldiers' graves will be beautiful to-day," continued the girl. "Every one I know is taking flowers, and there never were quite so many flowers before as there are this year. Oh, why did I sprain my ankle just now? I don't believe even you can find any good in such a catastrophe as that. But I'll 'be a dood dirl,' as Baby Bell says. Where is she? Asleep? I can take care of her, anyhow, these days, when I can't hobble around much, so my pain will mean some rest for you, motherdie!"

Just then pattering feet were heard in the hall behind them, and Baby Bell, fresh from her nap, ran with outstretched hands and gurgling laugh to throw herself pell-mell against mother and sister.

Decoration Day was always a happy time in the pretty little town where Jessie and Baby Bell had always lived —a happy time, and yet a tenderly sad one, for there were a great many graves where boys in blue and boys in gray were laid. People will never forget how bravely soldiers fought, North and South, so many years ago, and every one loves to help to cover the quiet graves with beautiful flowers.

Mrs. Armstrong went back to the work that was awaiting her, while Baby Bell and Jessie sat together. Pretty soon a little boy about Bell's size peered through the fence palings, and said in a timid voice, "H'lo!" "Hullo!" answered Bell, "what you want, little boy?" "Nothin'."

"Run down to the gate, dearie, and let the little boy in."

"All right!" answered Baby Bell in her sweetest voice and went down to let in the little visitor. He had a tiny wooden sword in his hand and a bit of bunting floated from his cap.

"Don't you want some flowers, little man? Are you going over to the cemetery to-day with all the rest?"

All her answer was a shake of the boy's head, which set his curls dancing in the breeze.

"You've got a sword—are you going to be a soldier?"

His blue eyes danced. "Yes," he said, "grand-dad was a soldier and so was Uncle Jack, and I'm goin' to be one, too!"

"Good for you. Whom will you fight, my man?"

"Bad men—I don't know—" swinging his sword in the air, "every one what ain't good. Say!"

"Say on."

"Can I have some of them?" pointing to some nodding rosebuds on a beautiful plant Mrs. Armstrong brought out into the sunshine. It was Jessie's one pet plant and had "wintered" so well that it was rewarding her with clusters of pink-touched buds.

"What do you want them for?"

"Mother likes them for grand-dad's picture and Uncle Jack's. They're dead."

"And they were soldiers?"

"Yes'm."

"And hasn't mother any flowers for their graves?"

"They're buried far away—I don't know where, but she puts flowers on their pictures."

"Mother!" called Jessie, "I believe I can hobble over to Mrs. Stone's—she lives across the way, you know. I want to help her have a little bit of Decoration Day at home," she added, in a lower tone, as her mother came to the door. "I think she's real poor, and I'm sure she's lonesome to-day. Will you lend me your strong arm? I'll take her some roses and some of those wild flowers the boys gave me yesterday. Get me the scissors, will you, Bell, dear, and we'll give the soldier's boy some lovely roses."

And that was how it happened that Jessie sat in Mrs. Stone's little parlor, with Baby Bell beside her, while the tired woman sat down to talk to her bright-faced visitors.

"I couldn't go to the cemetery to-day with the others," explained Jessie, "and Bobbie was telling me that you are an old soldier's daughter."

"Yes'm. I lost my father and my eldest brother in the war. There they are," pointing to two pictures that hung on the wall, with some dried ferns from the year before still clinging to them. "They went away, and never came back; we don't even know where they are buried. But I know they died fighting and with their faces to the front!" and her eyes flashed, even while the tears came into them.

"Ma! ma!" shouted Bobbie, dashing in just then—for Mrs. Armstrong had kept him behind to fill his hands with flowers and ferns that had been given to Jessie the day before—"here's some flowers for grand-dad and Uncle Jack's pictures! My! don't I wish I was a soldier? Put 'em up, ma, quick! Do you s'pose they know you're decoratin' 'em?"

Bobbie's mother looked very happy as she put the flowers in place. When they were all arranged Jessie said: "Please do not let me keep you from your work. Baby Bell and Bobbie and I will sit here and tell stories, seeing we can't go out on the hills with the others. What stories do you like best?"

"Fightin' kind," said Bobbie.

"Nice kind," said Baby Bell. Jessie laughed and then she said gently, "Well, I can please you both, I think." So she began. It must have been a beautiful story, for when it was finished Bobbie clapped his hands and jumping up and down, cried, "Goodie, goodie, goodie! I just knew the bad old king would get killed. I'm going to fight all the bad kings when I'm a man. What was that feller's name?"

"I know," said Baby Bell softly. "He was old King Alcohol. He's just dreadful!"

"Who's King Alcohol?" said Bobbie, for he did not understand. You see, Jessie had a white ribbon in her buttonhole, and Baby Bell wore an L. T. L. badge. They knew about King Alcohol, and Baby Bell helped tell Bobbie. He listened very hard and when the story was ended he looked up at the pictures of "Grand-dad" and Uncle Jack and said, "Now I know what I'm going to do. I'll be a soldier and help kill that wicked king. Will you help?" looking at Baby Bell.

"'Course I will!"

Then Mrs. Stone came in and Jessie and the two children listened to the story of the two who went off to the war "and never came back."

"You've made the day brighter for me, miss, and I heard you telling the children about the whisky business. I'm glad to have Bobbie know it from the right side. He must grow up to be a temperance man."

"And I'm goin' to fight, mother, and she's going to help."

After a little longer visit Jessie went back to her own veranda feeling that Decoration Day spent at home was not so bad after all, especially when she had won such a stout-hearted little recruit for the Army of the Right as Bobbie was sure to be. May he grow up into a real soldier fighting in the army of the Lord, against all the wrong things in our beautiful world! And may Bell always help him to be brave and true.

DEAR BOYS AND GIRLS:—Here is a sweet little flower poem sent by a little Cozy Cornerer, Delight Mellowsweet, of Thomaston, Me. She calls it CONTENT.

Checkerberry bright and red,
Nestling in your mossy bed,
Among your leaves so green.
Aren't you lonely in the forest drear?
You need sunshine warm and clear
To make you grow.

Spoke the berry from its bed,
"I am quite as large and red,
As my sisters in the clearing,
And no softer bed, I ween,
Than my mossy one of green,
Can be found.
My Father placed me here
To comfort and to cheer
All I can,
So I'll not complain.
But come sunshine or come rain,
I'll be content."

It is well named, is it not? Yours, to learn lessons from the flowers,

WHAT SHALL WE DO WITH OUR CITIES?

That our great and ever-growing cities, with their abject poverty and fabulous wealth, their vast criminal classes, their corrupt government in the hands of the worst political "rings," are a growing menace to our national life and to our civilization is a generally acknowledged and widely deplored fact.

It has been shown that almost none of our great men have been born and reared in cities. Almost without exception they have come from the country. To the country alone must we look for the supply of our best brain and heart. But this hope is threatened, for the cities, like a great maelstrom, are sucking everything into their vortex. More and more our people are deserting the country for town and city. The time is not far distant when, if the present tendency continues, our rural population will consist entirely of foreigners. What then? Is there nothing before us but swift and sure destruction? Is our nation and our civilization doomed to death? We do not believe it. There are those who think that as the nations of old rose, fulfilled their purpose and died, so our own nation is going the way of all the earth. How, then, are God's purposes for the race to be accomplished?

The decay of civilizations involves long periods of degeneracy, of moral, intellectual and spiritual death. In them the race loses most that it had gained, and goes back to its primitive conditions to begin over again. The death of nations and civilizations has been indeed a terrible necessity to make way for a newer and a fresher life, but if God's plan for the race, as revealed in Christianity, is ever to be accomplished, decay and death cannot be perpetually recurring features.

Those who see the future in the past, forget entirely that the present has an element which the old civilizations had not; that into it has been injected "the power of an endless life"; that behind and beneath it stands the one who said, "I came that they might have life, and that they might have it more abundantly." How, then, are we to read the signs of the times? What is their portent? That the facts are threatening, the dangers real, we cannot doubt.

What shall we do with our cities? is a question which we must answer. We do not hope in one article to solve what thus far has baffled the best thought of the world but only to add our little to what must at last swell the sum total of the triumphant reply.

It is well to note, first, what we can not do. If the trend of events teaches anything, it teaches unmistakably that we can not eliminate the cities. We must purify them or die, for cities, good or bad, we are bound to have. Our civilization is a civilization of cities and such, in the nature of the case, it must continue to be. The movement of our people towards the cities bespeaks the genius of our civilization and it is as idle to urge them to betake themselves to rural life as it would be to undertake a revival of the feudal system, or preach a new crusade for the capture of the holy sepulchre.

The causes of this irresistible tendency of the times are not far to seek. The development of literature and art and the discoveries of science have sent a thrill of intellectual life to the lowest depths of society, and humanity is awakening to the truth that "man shall not live by bread alone." Moreover, man is regaining his long-lost rightful authority over nature and all of the resulting privileges can be fully enjoyed only when men are associated together. There are those who see nothing but hopeless degeneracy in the fact that our young people are no longer satisfied to live the lives of ceaseless toil for mere physical existence which their fathers and mothers lived before them; and that they desert the farm for the town and city. We do not so regard it. They often fail utterly of the ends they seek but the impulse which drives them forth is the demand of the famished intellect for food. It is not so much the revolt of the physical against the excessive burdens laid upon it as it is the revolt of the higher nature—the divine in man.

Much is rightly said of the mad race for gold, characteristic of city life, but the same spirit manifests itself in the country in a different but scarcely less harmful guise. The scarcity of money in most farming communities and the meager returns received for farm produce, have made life, too generally, in our rural districts, one hard struggle for existence. Out of this condition has grown inevitably the habit of saving for the mere sake of saving, even when the necessity has been removed. And where this spirit rules, the intellectual and esthetic natures die of starvation. How often we find even wealthy farmers who cannot be induced to go to the expense of giving their children a college education, who spare grudgingly, if at all, four cents a week for a religious newspaper, who give the merest pittance to the support of the gospel and towards benevolent objects, who regard books and pictures as superfluous extravagancies not to be thought of. This condition of things is not a cause for censure, much less for contempt, but for pity. It results necessarily from causes for which the victims are not in the least responsible. Nevertheless these things are so and it is because they are so that the young people of the present generation are forsaking the farm. If we would remedy the evil, we must look the cause squarely in the face.

Cities must continue to exist. Paradoxical as it may seem, it is nevertheless true that they are both a menace and a necessity to our civilization. The problem before us is not how to eliminate them but how to neutralize their evils. But neither can we dispense with the country. The broad fields of grain must grow broader, the cattle upon a thousand hills must become more numerous, for, though the physical must abdicate its supreme place, it must still exist. In some way the country and the town must be elevated together. In a new sense, we must attain that ideal existence which unites "the advantages of both city and country."

A movement has been very generally advocated of late, and here and there experiments have been made of farm villages. The purpose is to gather into one community the scattered farm populations while at the same time they are within easy reach of their farms. We believe this is a step in the right direction and will so greatly improve the conditions and tendencies of rural life that much of the cause which has driven young people from the country will be removed, but something more than this is needed to bring about the other necessary element which shall render farm life more attractive and secure to farmers their rightful proportion of the results of their labor.

As to the problem of the cities, we believe that more even than in that of farm life, the experiments have thus far been only tentative. The missions, the college settlements, etc., will have their part in the solution, but it is in the cities that the great battle for prohibition is to be fought. It is comparatively easy to pass and enforce prohibition laws in rural districts but in the cities the hosts of Satan make their desperate stand. Thus far they have triumphantly held their own, and great cities ruled by the liquor traffic will forever be the open mouths of hell.

Nor is this all, radical changes will have to be made in our social system itself before great cities can be other than centers of corruption. A system whose corner-stone is selfishness, in which each man's loss is every other man's gain, and vice versa, is not a system which will endure the massing together of hundreds of thousands of human beings. In the problem of the cities as in the problem of capital and labor we see the handwriting on the wall declaring to our existing social system, "Thou art weighed in the balances and art found wanting."

"REFORM" THE DRINK TRAFFIC.

In an article in the North American Review for May, entitled, "The Possible Reform of the Drink Traffic," the Rev. W. S. Rainsford says: "Temperance agitators fail because they attempt the impossible. They seek to root out alcohol;" and again, "I do not know of any temperance movement that meets the inevitableness of the use of alcohol squarely. The Prohibitionist refuses to draw any distinction between the moderate and the immoderate drinker."

Admitting all that the "learned doctor" says, the difficulty with the "temperance agitator" and "Prohibitionist" is solely in his bringing up, and is so bred in his bone that he is as unable to free himself from his fanatical views as Dr. Rainsford thinks modern civilization is unable to tear itself away from alcohol. These temperance people have been brought up in the doctrines of Christianity, and notoriously the difficulty with that system, the reason why it fails in its conquest of the world is that it attempts the impossible.

Had its Founder only had the wisdom not to seek to "root out" all evil from the human race, but simply to "reform" it, had He but taken a "common-sense view" of the situation, and made a compromise with the devil, perhaps His system might have been before this accepted over the whole world, but, like the Prohibitionist, He refused to draw any distinction between "moderate and immoderate" sinning; He even went so far as to class the hater of his brother along with all murderers, "moderate and immoderate."

Like the Prohibitionist again, He "ignored the past of the race, history with Him counted for nothing," and calmly saying, "the things that are impossible with men are possible with God," He kept steadily on His way, holding His "position of fanatical hatred" toward sin to the last. What wonder that He met an ignominious death on the cross and that His gospel has not yet, after nearly two thousand years, conquered half the world? It is useless to hope that the followers of such a Leader can be induced to take a "moderate view" of the liquor curse or of any other crime against God and man.

But there is one point which might comfort the doctor a little if he would consider it. It is this, that these fanatics are the only ones who are ever willing to do anything. Dr. Rainsford thinks that if we could but "once move" the "moderate-minded men who deplore drunkenness, but who know that for generations to come we cannot eliminate it," who "cannot consistently support any of the present temperance movements, for they themselves are not prepared to banish alcohol in all shapes from their lives," if we could but get these people started, then he thinks we should be on the way to accomplish some permanent temperance reform.

Perhaps so, but just here the doctor's own knowledge of history is deficient. If he will but search the records, he will find that this class of persons has never been started in the whole history of the race; that always it has been the "fanatics," the people who attempted the "impossible" and who obstinately persisted in the determination to "root out" the evil instead of making terms with it, who have turned the world upside down and brought about its great revolutions.

We cannot but think that Dr. Rainsford is making the very common mistake of being too impatient for results. Jesus Christ never told His disciples to accomplish anything. He did give them some very clear and specific directions as to the lives they should live and the kind of men they were to be, and He bade them go into all the world and preach the gospel to every creature. But the results were to be left to Him. Looking back over two thousand years of history we can see that, though their task looked like a hopeless one utterly without promise of results, nevertheless the preaching of that gospel has "lifted empires off their hinges and turned the stream of centuries out of its channel." But had the disciples started out with the definite plan to accomplish just those results, and unless they could see the objects accomplished in their own day felt that their work was a failure; had they, in order to reach their ends, changed the message delivered them by the Master and compromised with the prince of this world, they had utterly failed of their purpose.

In his anxiety to reap the harvest at once, Dr. Rainsford is making the fatal mistake of letting the end justify the means. If it is right for churches and church members to establish eating houses in which wines and other "light" drinks are dispensed, then the question of their doing so becomes a mere matter of expediency; but if, as the temperance agitator believes, alcoholic beverages of every kind are a snare of Satan and all traffic in them evil and only evil, then the only attitude for the Christian reformer to take is that of "destroying the trade, root and branch." He has no more right to open such a "public house" in order to draw men from the worse grog-shops than he has to take the life of his neighbor by administering chloroform in order to save him from the brutal knife of another class of murderers.

"The ordinary temperance reformer and temperance politician cannot be induced to look favorably on any scheme of reform," for to his view the means proposed by these "reformers," respectable wine shops run by "moderate-minded" people, are but feeders to the saloons. We may not succeed in our day in "rooting out" alcohol, but we shall continue to fight the battle out on that line, and that victory overwhelming will be ours in the end, we doubt no more than we doubt that "God is God."

THE WOMEN'S FORUM.

We question if the famous Roman Forum, in all its centuries of eloquent expression, ever discussed themes more vital or varied than did the Woman's International Congress in Chicago during the seven days of its forum, May 15–21, 1893.

The entire compass of THE UNION SIGNAL would fail to contain the formal addresses of this momentous meeting, not to speak of the scores of unwritten addresses and interesting impromptus. Even a list of the names of those in attendance would occupy a half dozen of our pages, for it was estimated that ten thousand women made up the average audiences. Two large halls, seating three thousand each, eight smaller halls, holding four hundred each, and numerous spacious corridors comprised the audience rooms of this unique gathering. Evidently, the powers in authority had not anticipated such an enormous attendance at the opening Congress, particularly as it was a "woman's meeting." The provision for doorkeepers and ushers was very inadequate at first, but some improvement in that direction was noticed towards the end of the week. But we marvel that everything worked so well when we consider the newness of it all. The Art Memorial building, in which the meetings were held, had never before sheltered an audience, and the large body of workmen had scarcely left its halls when the ladies walked in. Indeed, some of them did not leave at all, much to the regret of speaker and would-be listener, for the sound of the hammer, the dragging of ladders and tramp of feet on the tin-covered roof was slightly distracting. But the earnestness and eloquence of the speakers and the patience and good-nature of the audience overcame all these small (?) disadvantages. The women had the place of honor in the opening of the Congresses, but it is one that cost them dear in the loss of golden thoughts and nerve force.

The formal opening of the World's Congress Auxiliary occurred at ten o'clock Monday morning, with its president, Charles C. Bonney, presiding. After delivering his notable address President Bonney introduced Mrs. Potter Palmer, president of the Woman's Branch of the Congresses, who spoke brief but beautiful words of welcome and announced the opening of the Woman's Congresses. Mrs. Palmer was followed by Mrs. Charles Henrotin, who delivered an elaborate address and introduced Mrs. May Wright Sewall, chairman of the Congress committee as well as president of the National Woman's Council. At the conclusion of Mrs. Sewall's comprehensive review of the work of the Congresses, a large number of distinguished foreign representatives were presented. A public reception was held in the afternoon and the evening session was devoted to the further introduction of foreign guests. At this remarkable assembly were represented, by well-known women's names, the following countries: England, Germany, Belgium, Denmark, Scotland, Sweden, Switzerland, Austria, Finland, Greece, Spain and Bohemia.

On Tuesday, the complicated and well-managed machinery of the great Congress was set in motion and for five consecutive days, "mind not matter" was the practical motto, on some days twenty sessions being held. The societies represented and the topics discussed were as wide in range as the diversity of women's interests and opinions. A partial list of subjects will best illustrate this: The Civil and Social Evolution of Woman, The Evolution of the Business Woman, Woman as a Political Leader, The Moral Initiative as Related to Woman, Ethical Influence of Woman in Education, Woman in Municipal Government, Position of Woman in Civil Law, Woman in Science, Woman the New Factor in Industrial Economics, The Solidarity of Human Interests, Women in Spain for the last Four Hundred Years, Woman's Position in South American States, Woman's Place in the Legitimate Drama, Woman in the Stock Company, A Century of Progress in Canada, Women in Bohemia, Woman's Marriage Prospects, Kindergarten Progress, Woman as a Religious Teacher, Woman's Place in Hebrew Thought, Woman in the Pulpit, Club Life Among Women, Inalienable Rights of Authors, Commercial Value of Literary Work, The Catholic Woman in Temperance, Woman's War for Peace, Woman as an Explorer, Status of Utah Women, Woman's Trades Unions, Domestic Service, The Family Claim, Coöperative Housekeeping, Progress of Education, The Wage Question, Ethics of Dress, Necessity of Dress Reform, Physical Culture a Necessary Preparation for Correct Dress, The Economy of Woman's Forces Through Organization.

We suggest to "sweet girl graduates" that a selection from the above list of subjects would be equally as profitable to themselves and pleasing to their fond audiences as the abstruse and well-worn themes, "Beyond the Alps lieth thy Italy," and "The Night Brings out the Stars."

Among the societies represented were the National Council of Women, Woman's Christian Temperance Union, Women's Christian Association, Order of the Eastern Star, Woman's Press Association, Woman's Physician Association, Woman's Suffrage Association, Sorosis, Wimodaughsis, Woman's Relief Society, Kindergarten Union, Loyal Women of America, Baptist Missionary Society, Centenary Association, Young Ladies Mutual Improvement Association, Universal Peace Union, Woman's Indian Association, Protective Society of Authors, Association of Collegiate Alumnæ, and Columbian Household Economic Association.

While the W. C. T. U. was well represented, the absence of Miss Willard was a cause of keenest regret, and many an auditor outside as well as inside of W. C. T. U. ranks felt that the most magnetic presence among American women was missing. Miss Willard's name was frequently mentioned and none other received such spontaneous and hearty applause. "Our women" were in attendance in large numbers, and such leaders as Mrs. Lathrap, Mrs. Hoffman, Mrs. Stevens, Mrs. Woodbridge, Mrs. Leiter, Mrs. Ormiston Chant, Mrs. Margaret Parker, Mrs. Buell, Mrs. Carse, Mrs. Nichols and Miss McDonell were prominent among the speakers of the week-day sessions.

It may be a partial view but it was shared by hundreds that the W. C. T. U. mass-meeting Sunday afternoon was the best of all the Congresses. Eleven speakers of renown contributed to this "feast of reason." They were Mrs. Chant and Mrs. Parker of England, Mrs. Hoffman, Mrs. Dickinson, Mrs. Nichols, Mr. Woolley, and Mrs. Barker, Mrs. Foster and Miss McDonell of Canada, Miss Yates and Dr. Anna Shaw. These speeches were all "off-hand," and we regret that a lack of a stenographer as well as lack of space prevents a full report of this electric and inspiring program, which was truly spontaneous, having been arranged only the day previous. But white-ribbon women are always ready and generally at their best in impromptu. Mrs. Woodbridge presided with a grace all her own, Mrs. Stevens read the Scriptures and Mrs. Carse led in prayer.

The enfranchisement of woman was the most popular theme of the Congress, and naturally Miss Susan B. Anthony and Lucy Stone led the discussions. Aside from several addresses in different sessions Miss Anthony was frequently called for, and once even addressed an immense crowd on the stairs which was unable to gain admission. Her reception was an ovation, and she must have felt that after forty years of pioneering, her hour of recognition and triumph had tardily arrived. "We have tried repeatedly," she said, "to keep the woman's rights question in the background, but we can't succeed; the women will talk about it. Of course I am delighted. This Congress will advance woman's cause one hundred years, because it will impart learning in every department of life in which man has always reigned, but to which woman is and always has been eligible. I cannot evince by any words the satisfaction I feel in seeing such an admirably officered organization as ours claiming the attention of the civilized world as it is now doing."

The closing sessions of the general Congress on Sunday were, of course, religious in character,—a regular service was held in the morning, Rev. Anna Shaw preaching the sermon. In the evening a sacred concert was given, the composition and execution of the music, both vocal and instrumental, being entirely by women, and including the first large harp orchestra ever presented in America.

We cannot forbear a word of praise to the general committee in charge of this wonderful Congress. Mrs. May Wright Sewall, president; Mrs. Rachel Foster Avery, secretary, assisted by Mrs. Potter Palmer, Mrs. Charles Henrotin, Mrs. Isabella Charles Davis, Miss Lucy Anthony and a score of others. The two first mentioned ladies have devoted nearly a year's time to the enlisting of foreign delegates and the public press, and to the working out of the voluminous programs. The successful completion of this vast undertaking is a monument to their mental comprehension and executive ability. In the name of women, THE UNION SIGNAL extends profound thanks and earnest congratulations.

Frequent glimpses of the "new chivalry" are caught from correspondents' letters. Here is one: "I go this afternoon as a delegate to our state convention. I suppose some would think me a fair sample of the woman's rights woman, leaving five children to go to conventions, but I have strictly obeyed the Bible injunction in this case, 'wives, be in subjection to your husbands.' This is the third consecutive year that I have been urged to go as a delegate and this year, in advance, my husband said to me, 'If they want you to go this year, you go; I will see to the children.' So I meekly 'obeyed.'" Are there not more such husbands in white ribbon homes than in any other?

They built a church at his very door—

They brought him a scheme for relieving the poor—

Let them work for themselves as he had done,a
They wouldn't ask help of any one

So he passed the poor with haughty tread—

And he scorned the good with averted head
He wasn't in it.
When men in the halls of virtue met
He saw their goodness without regret;
Too high the mark for him to win it—

St. Peter received him with book and bell;

Such an "eruption" of woman has not been known in the annals of time as the Art Building of Chicago witnessed last week. The suffrage congresses were the most popular. Policemen had to be stationed at the doors of their halls to keep the crowds back. "We didn't need policemen once to keep the women out of a suffrage meeting," somebody said on a platform the other day, while hundreds were being turned away. "Anthony! Anthony!" was the cry, and as soon as "Susan B." stopped speaking she adjourned with the overflow to another hall. She deserves this "bread . . . . after many days." The suffragists certainly "worked up" their program with splendid zeal and effect. It is said Miss Anthony, Mrs. Rachel Foster Avery and Mrs. Carrie Lane Chapman were the prime movers. The women are come—not "coming."

One of the finest tributes ever paid to our organization was that of Mrs. Mary Lowe Dickinson's at the mass-meeting of the W. C. T. U. Sunday afternoon in connection with the Woman's Congress. It was this: "That the Woman's Christian Temperance Union sits to-day, sceptered and throned and crowned at the center of the world's encircling organizations of women, is not so much because its battle is against the foe of childhood and motherhood and the home; not because its grand crusade is one of rescue to lost manhood; not because of its hundreds of thousands in numbers, or the multiplied agencies of its numerous departments of human helpfulness, as it is because it has struck this one chord to which the hearts of women answer. It made a Union. That was great. It made a Temperance union. That was greater. It made a Woman's Temperance Union, and that was greatest. But it made a Woman's Christian Temperance Union, and that, and that alone, made greatness in any degree possible to all the rest. Nay, I dare go even further (loyal subject though I am and not unmindful of the royal presence) I venture to say that not even such masterly and magnificent leadership as this white ribbon army has known, could have borne its victorious banner to the gate of every welcoming nation, or have lifted the towers of yon fair Temple to the sky, had not the hearts of the women of the world been already the temples of the living God. It was the voice of Christ that called together the white-haired and white-souled women of that first crusade, and it is the Christ in the union, the Christ in the temperance and the Christ in the woman that has been, in all this movement, the secret and source of its success and power."

ON DUTY.

CALIFORNIA.

BEARING HARD ON THE LIQUOR TRAFFIC.

California is pushing forward the temperance battle most valiantly, and the 4,700 members of northern California, with the hosts in the South, with prohibition as their shibboleth, are pressing on to victory.

Mrs. B. Sturtevant-Peet, called by the "bear state" women "Our Saint Peet-er," labored indefatigably at Sacramento, the state capital, for the bill for school suffrage for women, assisted by Miss Sarah Severance, Dr. Lomax, Mrs. Van Pelt, Rev. Ada Bowles, of Boston, Jennie Phelps Purvis and others, and at last it was passed, but alas, was vetoed by Governor Markham. The women, while sorely disappointed, will press right on, and the next legislature will see a bill for full suffrage. The liquor dealers tried also to pass a uniform license bill, which would force saloons on every locality in the state, entirely doing away with all local option. But the Woman's Christian Temperance Union were on the alert, and by their splendid organization were able to muster up an immense petition against it and it was voted down by a big majority. Miss Willard has truly said that "organization makes the difference between a mob and an army."

Mrs. Mary Clement Leavitt, honorary president of the World's Woman's Christian Temperance Union, is arousing great enthusiasm throughout the state by her masterly arraignment of the liquor traffic and the Christian voters who uphold it. Possessing a polished and cultured mind she brings argument, science, observation, wit and pathos to bear, and thus touches every intellect before her in some vulnerable spot. As the first round-the-world missionary of the white-ribbon movement, she holds a high place in the hearts of all.

California seems specially blest, for on April 17, Miss Jessie Ackermann, the second round-the-world missionary, returned to her home in the Golden State after an absence of seven years. Intrepid, patient, plucky, this young woman went out like the disciples of Christ with "neither purse nor scrip," and without any cost to the National or World's treasury has achieved wonders in temperance work. She has given lectures on oriental women, herself appearing in native costume while abroad, and will continue the same kind of work in America. She especially requested that no reception should be tendered her, much to the disappointment of her friends, who wished to show marked attention to this comrade whom they "delight to honor," but as the last memory she had of her native land was a prayer-meeting at temperance headquarters, 132 McAllister St., Mrs. D. J. Spencer and Mrs. Henrietta Brown, state secretaries, arranged an impromptu prayer-meeting as her initial greeting, and a large number of W. C. T. U. friends were present, among them Mrs. General Bidwell, who came from Chico to welcome the wanderer home. Miss Ackermann, by invitation of Mrs. Anna Riggs, president of Oregon, is lecturing in that state and will labor on the Pacific coast till time to go to National and World's W. C. T. U. conventions in Chicago in October.

Major and Mrs. Scott are still "holding the fort" for temperance and also moving on the enemy's works and wherever they go new unions spring up and new members join the Grand Army of Reform, the temperance G. A. R. Both of them are well informed on every phase of the temperance question.

Mrs. Emily Pitt Stevens, National organizer, has recovered from the nervous prostration, occasioned by her hard organizing trip last fall, and has been lecturing in Tulare county with her usual success. She always arouses enthusiasm as she portrays the tragedy of drink, and every word and gesture become unconsciously dramatic from intense feeling.

Mrs. Henrietta Skelton, our temperance Chancellor Bismarck, also a National organizer, is working with accustomed vigor and success and her wit is a mighty force for our struggling cause. Mrs. Emma Pow Smith, state organizer and author of the temperance story, "Chrysolite," has succumbed to nervous prostration. Too much admiration cannot be bestowed on these patient organizers, who go out into the most discouraging fields "for collections" which often means money out of their own pockets instead of in it, and yet they bring in hundreds of new members annually.

Mrs. Nellie B. Eyster, the scientific temperance lecturer, wins golden plaudits from every tour in the state, and so bright are her physiological dissertations and so winsome her manners that the little folks swear eternal hatred to cigarettes, opium and drink. The Demorest medal contests are being pushed most vigorously, and Miss Helen McLain, state superintendent, and Miss Winnie Morris, state superintendent of Y work, are doing wonders along this line. Little folks by the score are winning the dainty souvenirs. Among "the signs of the times" are the numerous votes being polled for women school directors.

As the evangelistic department is the corner-stone of temperance work, all the W. C. T. U. fraternity will rejoice at the great success attending the revival meetings of evangelist Charles N. Crittenton, whose generous offer of founding five Florence Crittenton homes under W. C. T. U. auspices, was greeted with such enthusiasm by the Denver Convention. God is using him wonderfully, and thousands are won to Christ by his loving appeals. The Oakland W. C. T. U. gave a delightful recital, with Miss Sylvia Chapman, reader, which netted a goodly sum for the San Francisco Florence Crittenton Home. A book, being prepared by M. G. C. Edholm, on Florence Crittenton missions, is to be published by the W. T. P. A. Mr. Crittenton is deeply interested, not only in saving the drunkard, by moral suasion and by legal prohibition, but he is vice-president of the California Beneficent Home for the cure of the liquor and opium habits, which is located at W. C. T. U. state headquarters. Mrs. James A. Jordan, of Boston, is president, and is a most liberal giver to this form of temperance work.

Mrs. Mary E. Teats, state superintendent of social purity, formerly National superintendent of prison work, is arranging a state social purity convention to be held in Oakland. Her great experience in this line of work renders her services invaluable. Jennie Smith, railroad evangelist, paid a flying visit in the state and received a warm welcome. She held several very enthusiastic meetings among the railroad men. The Southern Pacific is specially careful of the sobriety of their employés, themselves providing a delicious noon-day meal in order to combat the free lunch of the saloon.

Among the resolutions passed at the last state executive meeting was one of confidence and love to Mrs. Matilda B. Carse, who may feel that she has the unswerving loyalty of the California chapter. Dr. Carrie F. Young, one of the veteran anti-slavery and temperance agitators was recommended to white-ribboners everywhere, and as she is especially fine in the physiological aspects of the drink habit, unions wherever she travels should avail themselves of her lectures. The press leaflets from Miss Lodie Reed, National superintendent of press, and Miss Irene Fockler, associate, will surely bring forth grand results.

Santa Clara county won a great temperance victory when they carried the day for the saloons to be closed on Sunday. That is a half loaf with no poison in it. Mr. Edward Evans, well known as the reformer who is engaged in the laudable work of uniting all reformers in one party, held an interesting meeting along that line recently in Oakland.

Before closing this letter a little tribute of praise must be paid to my mother, Mrs. Lucy Gow Charlton, who passed from earth to heaven April 5. For years she had been an ardent member of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union of Omaha, Nebraska, Oakland, California, and St. Louis, Missouri, being a member at the latter place at the time of her death. The greatest cross of her life was the being laid aside from active temperance work by nervous prostration, and yet she always could cheerfully say "He doeth all things well."

Earth seems very lonely without the inspiration of her loving presence, but heaven seems very near and very bright because she is "over there." Thank God! for a religion that through our blinding tears, we can sing, "O grave, where is thy victory? O death, where is thy sting?"

GEORGIA STATE CONVENTION.

The state convention held in Macon, April 25–28, was a success, and inspired the faithful workers to more devoted service than ever. The persecution to which our organization has been subjected in this section recently has not harmed us. On the contrary, our loyal women have been led to feel that they must put forth the more strenuous exertions because of attacks from the outside. As trained veterans on a long march, who have been going in disorderly fashion along the road, when a sudden fire from an unexpected enemy breaks upon them, instinctively close ranks and fall into step, so our white-ribbon division in Georgia has closed its ranks under the uncalled-for attack which has been made upon it. Several members testified that they should not have felt they could attend the convention had not this persecution made them feel that they must be present.

One of these sisters told an amusing anecdote, which she said illustrated the W. C. T. U. A farmer had an old blind mule, which fell into a pit. Thinking the animal not worth the trouble of getting out, the owner decided to bury it where it was. Accordingly, load after load of dirt was hauled and dumped onto the mule, but every time he shook it off and tramped it under foot, until at last, when the pit was filled, the mule walked out in triumph.

Mrs. Sibley, our wise, far-seeing state president, presided with the dignity and the unfailing good temper characteristic of her. Led by a leader so generous in her treatment of opponents, so appreciative of the good qualities of both friends and foes, so considerate of the views of all, so wise and moderate in all her measures, the Georgia state union has nothing to fear from any quarter.

Progress along all lines of work was reported, though in some sections of the state cyclones have for the time put an end to philanthropic work of every kind except that of caring for those left destitute by these terrible visitations.

The good people of Macon opened their hearts and homes to the convention with true southern hospitality.

It was expected that the convention would be held in the Mulberry Street Methodist Episcopal Church South, but as revival meetings were in progress there the convention met in the First Baptist church. The last night of the convention, however, the Methodist church adjourned its services in order to attend the convention, thus showing their good will and proving that the W. C. T. U. has still staunch friends in the Methodist Episcopal Church South.

Among the many interesting incidents of the convention none surpassed Mrs. Sibley's graphic account of the struggle for prohibition in her own city of Augusta. The members of the union there determined to spend election day in prayer, some of them at the polls and others in the church. When their purpose became known, threats of all kinds came to their ears. Among them that one saloon-keeper had said he would egg them. The day before the election, however, this saloon-keeper, who had been the jailer, went to Mrs. Sibley's son and said he understood that this report was around and added: "I never made such a threat and I would thrash any man who attempted it. I know your mother's work in the jail and I have too high a respect for her to do anything of the kind. I have said though, that I will use the brass band to defeat the women." No better illustration can be found of the way in which our many-sided work wins us friends from every quarter.

When election day came, Mrs. Sibley was astonished at the number of women who dared to face the contempt and insult which they had every reason to suppose awaited them, and march to the polls. When they got there, the crowds of men, friends and foes, made way for them and stood with uncovered heads while they passed to their places. Soon after the women began their prayers, the brass band marched over and struck up its din. The sheriff, however, obliged them to stop, but all day long the band drowned out the hymns. There throughout the day, these faithful women stayed praying and singing, while on the other side of the building, money bags were shaken in the faces of voters. There they stayed, while Christian men walked by them in sound of their prayers and songs and voted that the whisky curse should remain in their town. Is it any wonder that Mrs. Sibley said that whatever doubts she had felt before about the wisdom of woman's suffrage were put to flight by that day's experience?

When the election was over and good men and bad had united in fastening the liquor curse upon the city of Augusta, all gathered around and joined with the women in the closing hymns. The secular papers of the city said afterwards that it seemed more like a camp-meeting than an election. Not a demonstration followed the victory. Not a shout was heard, no drunken carousal disgraced the city, but quiet and order prevailed as if the victors were ashamed of their success and did not wish to declare the side on which they voted. The like of this election, we venture to say, this nation has never seen.

When our convention adjourned, the W. C. T. U. of Georgia could repeat the words of the apostle, "We are pressed on every side, yet not straitened; perplexed, yet not unto despair;" and "Though sorrowful we are alway rejoicing."

WHITE-RIBBON NEWS.

Cyclones have swept through portions of our territory, leaving ruin and devastation in their path. In contrast, Mrs. S. M. I. Henry, one of the brightest stars in the W. C. T. U. galaxy, has flitted through our fair land, leaving "our cause" uplifted and advanced. We regret that we have no data from which to particularize concerning her campaign.

Our territorial president, Mrs. Nellie Sheplor, has been busy in the field. She visited the union at Jukor, and gave a public lecture to the representative people of the town; ten new members were added as a result. She also lectured at Choctaw City, forming a union of nineteen members, ten women and nine men. At Frisco, our banner temperance town, a large audience greeted her Saturday night; on Sabbath morning she occupied the M. E. pulpit, and on Sabbath evening held a children's meeting. She has also given W. C. T. U. talks at country school-houses. Mrs. Sheplor has a license from her quarterly conference to exhort. We wonder what the grave heads of the general conference will think of our young territory Methodists taking such advanced steps upon the "woman question"?

Mrs. Emma Miller, our territorial organizer, has been busy in her department, having organized unions at Perkins and Evansville, both of which are officered by bright, progressive women, who are creating prohibition sentiment by their works. Mrs. Miller has also had opportunities to address a number of Sabbath-schools upon temperance work. In one place a large list of names was secured to our Great Petition. The Stillwater union is making prominent its jail and L. T. L. work.

The Guthrie union has added a number of names to its membership, some of them were secured by house-to-house visitation. The Guthrie union is fortunate in having the ministers of its various pulpits pronounced temperance workers. Rev. Bosworth, of the Congregational church, gave for the benefit of the union a stereopticon entertainment entitled the "Bottle Nymph" in which the different stages of the drunkard life are portrayed, a talk being given on each scene. Rev. E. F. Boggers, of the Christian church, is strongly allied to our cause; recently a stirring temperance program was rendered in his church on Sabbath evening.

The Willard L. T. L. of Guthrie is increasing both in numbers and interest under the management of its efficient superintendent, Mrs. Nellie Swan. They are taking up medal contest work, have raised two dollars for the Willard fountain and have $3.66 from their Temple mite-box, which is a beginning for Oklahoma for $100 for the Temple. We are anxious to do something for that temperance Mecca, especially since its noble founder has been so maliciously maligned.

The legislative committee under the leadership of Mrs. M. A. Copland did earnest and faithful work the past winter during the term of the legislature, for temperance and suffrage. They did not succeed in getting what they asked for, but rejoice that the gambling bill was passed.

The Oklahoma city union has taken upon itself a new lease of life, having elected Mrs. W. W. Storm, an earnest white-ribboner, its president, and voted to meet one hour each week. A contest for a Demorest silver medal, in charge of your correspondent, was held in a country school-house this winter. Miss Myrtle Meloy won the medal, reciting in an impressive manner "Parallel Parables," by John G. Woolley. The presentation speech was made by Mrs. Sheplor. The class was composed of five girls and one boy; each one received a beautiful bouquet tied with white ribbon.

MICHIGAN ETCHINGS.

The year rounds up to full completeness, and this month, April, sees the last of the twelve district conventions (second, fifth and sixth) being held these last days. Their programs were received several days ago, and were very full of material for good conventions.

The following items have been furnished me from the sixth district by their recording secretary, Mrs. Van Every: The meeting was at Pontiac, in rooms made beautiful by the superintendent of flower mission who lives there. The meetings were helped by the attendance of Dr. and Mrs. Reynolds and several clergymen. Disappointed in outside talent on account of sickness, the evening was acceptably filled by Mrs. Garner, the president, and an original poem by the secretary with music by local talent of a high order. Ingham is the banner county, the president writing: Four hundred and thirty-one members in county, moneys raised, for all calls, four hundred and forty-six dollars. The banner union in this county is Lathrap, at North Lansing. Among the superintendents the report on franchise, by Miss Sayles, was said to be the most condensed and yet told it all. Sisters, aim for this power in all lines of our work, multum in parvo. The papers were all good and bristled with thought and argument. "Our Ideals," by Mrs. Giles; "Why We Work," by Mrs. Aldrich, and "Evangelistic Lines," by Mrs. Shepherd. The Bible reading, "Satisfied," by Mrs. Andrews, was highly commended. Mrs. A. J. Shepherd, Commerce, is the newly elected president. Twenty copies of THE UNION SIGNAL are taken.

The Monroe county convention in the second district was a success. They have raised their one hundred dollars pledged for the Temple. The report from ten unions showed good work done. A medal contest occupied the evening.

From Lansing comes report of their central union, which gave a reception to new members with light refreshments served. They tied on the white ribbon and signed the pledge. They hold gospel meetings on Sundays and voted to again publish names of saloon-keepers and their bondsmen, "with a view to keeping the names of self-respecting men off saloon bonds."

From Wyandotte, first district, comes word of "holding the fort" under adverse circumstances. They have eight subscribesrs to THE UNION SIGNAL; organized an L. T. L. of one hundred and fifty members; had two medal contests and proved on all lines "God helps those who help themselves."

From Detroit comes the word that Mrs. Lillian Hollister has been elected president for the tenth time of Detroit Central. One of the Y's writes from Laingsburg: "We have held a successful 'indigo social.' Now what is that? Well, after the program which contained a 'Blue essay,' the guests contested to see who could form the most words in five minutes out of 'indigo social.' The prize was a bottle of blueing. The highest number of words was forty."

Morehouse union of Muskegon, ninth district, has opened a coffee house. The women at Evart, distributed one hundred and fifty copies of The Young Crusader. The witty superintendent of press work in this district writes: "Several new local superintendents have been appointed, no 'nervous prostration' to speak of and the work is progressing in a healthy manner."

Kalamazoo county convention held at Cooper "was a grand good one." A paper was read, "Why am I in the W. C. T. U.?" which is to be published in our state paper. The response to the address of welcome was given by a Y worker. The second evening a lecture was given by Prof. Dickie, a ringing, clear-cut prohibition talk that the people who heard will not soon forget. These dear women showed their appreciation of their efficient county president by reëlecting her and pledged her one hundred dollars for services the coming year. I close my letter with text on sixth district program: "A wonderful and horrible thing is committed in the land. The prophets prophesy falsely and my people love to have it so, and what will ye do in the end thereof?"

WEST VIRGINIA.

INTERESTING REPORTS

Are at hand from the different places visited by Miss Vandelia Varnum, of New York. When the question came up before the state officers, about engaging her services for work in West Virginia, it seemed like a big undertaking considering it from a financial standpoint. This state has very few unions which can raise the required funds for good speakers before they begin their work. Most of them have to depend on the collections and the generous contributions of friends. But our state president's faith is such that she will go ahead, even if alone, in her undertakings.

Miss Varnum had been in the state before, and needed no introduction. Engagements were made for her at Fairmont, Ritchie county, New Martinsville and other points. Unions whose enthusiasm had waned, were revived and new ones organized, both in W's and Y's, and the report of West Virginia at the next National convention will show a decided increase in membership.

A report from New Martinville says that they have held their second Demorest medal contest and the union is increasing in membership and interest. The late election there resulted in a victory for the "drys."

Wheeling union held a contest at Thompson M. E. church, Island. A good audience and much interest was manifested. This union is contemplating permanent headquarters. During this month the different pastors have promised to preach temperance sermons. W. C. T. U. meetings are held weekly in the evenings at the different homes of the members. Refreshments are served and good interest kept up. Miss Varnum has been engaged to speak in the opera house.

Mannington, which was reorganized by Miss Varnum, is doing good work.

Our state superintendent of Y work has been wisely selected as editor of the new prohibition paper, The Corner Stone. Mrs. Morrow was formerly president of the normal at Fairmont and is eminently fitted for this new position. She is now filling a week's engagement in state W. C. T. U. work. The Corner Stone, with Capt. Frank Burt, as proprietor, will be located at Wheeling and from present indications will be one of the best prohibition papers published. Miss Varnum will have charge of the W. C. T. U. department.

Mrs. Jennie Sisson, state president, is filling engagements at Littleton, Palatine, Fairmont and Headsville. The district conventions are being held and preparations made for the state convention which will be held at Grafton, June 21–23.

Mrs. Helen G. Rice, who is well known in this state, has been engaged by the W. C. T. U. for the Prohibition assembly meetings at Moundsville. The directors of the assembly have given the W. C. T. U. the forenoons of the ten days' meetings and a good program has been arranged, with Miss Lydia J. Newcomb, Miss Varnum, Mrs. Hoffman, Mrs. Rice and other prominent W. C. T. U. ladies to take part. A gold medal contest will be one of the features.

A petition was presented to the legislature by our state superintendent of that department, Mrs. J. M. Lee, asking for a reform school for girls. The state, some time ago, provided one for the boys. The bill was introduced by Senator Gall, and despite the good efforts made for its passage, it failed.

A better report could have been made of work done during the winter, but the very severe cold weather we had, and the recent rains, seemed to have had bad effect on the ink of our reporters from the different unions, and I have not had reports from some of the unions which have been doing excellent work.

STATE EXECUTIVE MEETING.

The executive committee of our state W. C. T. U. met at Omaha, April 27 and 28, and were most delightfully entertained by the Buckingham union of that city. The meetings were held in the First Baptist Church, lunch being served by the ladies of the union each day. A spirit of earnestness and energy characterized the work of the committee, and a large amount of needed business was happily disposed of.

The report of Miss Kearney's work in the southwestern part of the state proved so acceptable that a motion was promptly made to continue her, if possible, in the field, working in the thirteenth, fourteenth and fifteenth districts. Miss Kearney has been at work but a few months, but is greatly liked as a speaker and has organized many unions and L. T. L's.

The subject of furnishing a room in the Temperance Hospital was discussed. Several dollars in money were raised on the spot with the promise of furnishings of various kinds, books, pictures, etc. Let all Nebraskans take note. In case of sickness or accident at the Exposition, you may find a place of refuge in the Nebraska room of the National Temperance Hospital. But that you may be sure not to be disappointed, send immediately one dollar—or more—to Mrs. O. H. Jones, Hastings, Neb., and any other donations you may wish to give.

Mrs. Bittenbender's resignation as state commissioner W. C. T. U. exhibit was tendered the committee. Mrs. Bittenbender has been laboring for the past year in this department, with the result that a W. C. T. U. exhibit will be seen in the Nebraska Building, of which we shall not be ashamed. Before retiring she made a gift to the W. C. T. U. exhibit of a pamphlet of thirty-two pages, "The History of the Nebraska W. C. T. U. Department of Legislation and Petitions," which is comprehensive and instructive, as well as interesting, and should be in the hands of every wide-awake W. C. T. U. woman. They may be obtained of Mrs. Bittenbender, Lincoln, Neb., at fifteen cents each, two copies for twenty-five cents, or ten copies to one address for one dollar. The net proceeds on all sales are given to the fund for the exhibit.

Mrs. G. W. Clark, of Omaha, reported that the Open Door, of which she has been for so long a time superintendent, had passed from the supervision of Buckingham union into the hands of an incorporated body of Omaha citizens. A board of managers has been elected, consisting of eight women and seven men, the mayor of the city being one of them. Five ladies are members of the W. C. T. U., Mrs. Clark being one of them, and retaining her active interest while being greatly relieved of much of the burden of care which has heretofore rested upon her, and which came so near overwhelming her the past winter.

The great need of a better state of finances was so apparent that the finance committee reported a recommendation that unions sending delegates to the next annual convention be instructed to increase the state dues from thirty-five cents to fifty cents per annum. The twenty-five cents per member free-will offering was also urged upon unions.

Many good words of praise were given the state paper, The Union Worker, and to advance its interests in a practical way, Mrs. Susie Knotts Dailey was appointed as special representative to canvass for subscriptions and advertising. The aim is to reach a circulation of 2,000 before next fall.

A most delightful reception was given the executive committee and all the unions of Omaha and South Omaha by the Buckingham union, at the home of our beloved state treasurer, Mrs. M. M. Lantry. A genial hostess, lovely flowers, beautiful music, and a large gathering of W. C. T. U. sisters made the evening too pleasant to be soon forgotten.

The Sunday-school department under the superintendency of Mrs. Luella P. Hartley, of Lincoln, has been doing active work. The recent temperance Sunday was very generally observed. Many ringing temperance sermons were given the people. A Congregational minister in Hastings declared that any member of his church who signed a saloon petition for license must remove his name within ten days from the petition or the church roll, or he would no longer remain pastor. Much strong temperance sentiment has been created and strengthened by this grand rally of the churches.

The fourth district held its convention in David City, with fifty delegates and visitors present, the state president and treasurer being among the number, also Mrs. C. E. Howe, of Missouri, who is doing some good work in this state. The convention assumed somewhat a suffrage tone, there being a paper by Mrs. M. E. Reynolds, of Fremont, giving her experience as a member of the school board of that city; a paper by Mrs. D. P. Austin, "The Duty of Women Relative to Franchise," and one by Miss Mary Watson, "The Ballot for Women," which was followed by an interesting discussion, the whole proving so satisfactory that it is the decision of the fourth district that they will always have a "suffrage evening" at their future conventions.

Mrs. M. S. Putnam, our veteran white-ribboner, has been "riding the circuit," holding conventions in the district and counties over which she presides. Chester county had a very profitable convention, having also the presence of Mrs. Hitchcock, who gave two excellent addresses and a parliamentary drill. Eleven new members were added, eight of them honorary. Mrs. Putnam was also present at the Saline county convention, giving an address. This was a most stirring and helpful convention, held at Tobias, Mrs. Miller presiding. The Tobias American, with rare courtesy, had a reporter present, and, on the last evening, as the session closed, distributed copies of its paper to the ladies. Mrs. Miller was re elected president.

Clay and Adams counties have held their annual institutes. These differ from conventions in that no business is done, but our work in its various phases is taken up and discussed, after the manner of a school institute. Mrs. Putnam was present at the Clay county institute, which was held in Harvard. Mrs. Howe, of Missouri, delivered a lecture on the "Duty of Christian Voters," the keynote of the exercises being "Souls for Christ." Mrs. Gill, the county president, was presented with a gold watch and chain, as a token of the appreciation of her untiring efforts for the W. C. T. U. of Clay county. The Adams county institute was held at Juniata, a recently reorganized union. Great interest was manifested by the members; the audience was large, with a good proportion of men, who came out to hear the state president, Mrs. Hitchcock, and were well pleased. Mrs. Jones, editor of The Union Worker, was also present, and Mrs. L. E. Bailey, president of Webster county.

An unusual interest in suffrage work seems to be manifested among the unions this spring, perhaps because of the defeat of our suffrage bills in the legislature. It is a good omen, for equal suffrage must come before we can have prohibition. We are glad to work with our sisters of the suffrage societies.

NEWS IN A NUTSHELL.

MT. CARMEL, Pa., has an active W. C. T. U. whose labors are largely due to the energies of its president, Mrs. E. C. Tier.

THE address of Mrs. C. E. Bigelow, treasurer of the National Temperance Hospital, is 539 W. Adams St., Chicago, instead of 639 as printed.

EL RENO, Okla., W. C. T. U., at a recent meeting, passed resolutions of respect to the memory of Mrs. Sophia L. Sharpe, their late president.

THE Junior Y's—a maiden swarm lately thrown off by the Y's of Corvallis, Ore.,—are sending a delegate to the state convention at Astoria, Ore.

A MEMBER of the "veteran band" was Mrs. C. T. Meiggs Reed, of Fulton, Ill., whose life went out May 2, at the advanced age of ninety-two years.

LOUISIANA W. C. T. U., at its recent state convention, sent the following telegram to Mrs. Carse: "Louisiana W. C. T. U. send greetings, entire confidence and indorsement."

AN exemplary Christian and an active member of the W. C. T. U. and other societies, Mrs. Sallie W. Clouser, passed away April 4, at her home in Mansfield, Ill., aged fifty-two years.

THE W. C. T. U. of Corvallis, Ore., have been lately coöperating with a salvationist and his wife. Six weeks' evangelistic services have been held, with upwards of a hundred conversions.

MRS. AMANDA STRONG, president of East Washington W. C. T. U., has resigned her position on account of her removal to another state. After June 1 her address will be Philipsburg, Kan.

OSWEGO county's semi-annual convention was held in Hannibal, N. Y., May 4 and 5. In spite of rainy weather a good delegation of loyal women workers were present. Mrs. Susan S. Fessenden, of Boston, spoke on the "Government responsible for the Liquor Traffic," and her address was enjoyed by all.

MRS. L. E. BAILEY closed a course of fifteen lectures at Raton, in New Mexico, Sunday, May 15. Good houses and interested workers greeted her all along the line. Mrs. M. J. Borden, the Territorial president, is doing her utmost to build up the work in this mission field. Mrs. Bailey goes to North Dakota to fill a six months' engagement.

AT the meeting of the Board of Home Missions of the Methodist Protestant Church, at Pittsburgh, May 10, Mrs. Rev. Eugenia St. John, of Kansas, was elected to fill a vacancy in the board. This is probably the first instance in the history of this country where a woman has been made a member of any National board of a Methodist church.

MRS. L. E. BAILEY has organized a W. C. T. U. with ten members, at San Marcial, New Mexico, with the following officers: Mrs. J. N. Broylo, president; Mrs. A. M. Hunt, vice-president; Mrs. J. F. Sweeney, recording secretary; Mrs. O. G. King, corresponding secretary; Mrs. G. Anderson, treasurer. There are sixteen unions now in the territory.

PRIZES for the best essay on the "Effects of alcohol and tobacco on the human system," were recently offered by the Winnipeg W. C. T. U. to the school children of the middle grades. Over four hundred essays were handed in, so excellent that it was thought necessary to increase the number of prizes from two to twenty-two, the winners of the first two each receiving in addition a year's subscription to the THE UNION SIGNAL.

THE ordination of Mrs. Emily C. Woodruff to the ministry occurred this spring at the Congregational church in Little Valley, N. Y., where she had been doing the work of a pastor since last November. Mrs. Woodruff has been a very active and earnest worker in the W. C. T. U. of Tioga county, N. Y., doing very efficient work in the evangelistic and Sunday-school departments, as well as occupying the position of local president for the past two years. She is peculiarly fitted for the great service to which she has been called.

THE W. C. T. U. of Rapid City, S. D., are rejoicing over the good work accomplished during the two weeks' series of gospel temperance meetings conducted by National evangelist, Mrs. Anna M. Palmer. Three souls have declared for Christ, thirteen members were added to our union, and many Christians have been revived. Her Bible readings were considered by the pastors the best ever held there. Mrs. Palmer will remain in the Black Hills several weeks, Deadwood, Lead Hill City, Custer, Hot Springs, Sturgis and Hermosa having engaged her services.

A TEMPERANCE crusade has been organized at Owensboro, Ky., one thousand women having united in the movement. They will adopt the plan followed in the famous temperance crusade fifteen years ago, singing, praying and exhorting in front of the saloons. Owensboro has sixty saloons, and manufactures more whisky than any city of its size in the world.

LINCOLN'S favorite poem, "Oh, why should the spirit of mortal be proud?" has just been effectively set to music by Mrs. Eva Munson Smith, of Springfield, Ill., a well-known composer and superintendent of equal franchise for the thirteenth district. This song has been most appropriately dedicated to the old friends of the martyred president, Col. and Mrs. O. H. Oldroyd, until recently custodians of the Lincoln homestead.

"THIRTEEN bills prohibiting the sale of liquor in as many localities have been introduced in the Arkansas legislature. Should all the local option laws now pending become a part of the statutes, which they undoubtedly will, the territory in Arkansas in which the sale of whisky is prohibited by special acts would extend over an area aggregating about 3,927 square miles. There are 53,850 square miles in Arkansas, of which 22,877 are under prohibition rule, or if absolutely correct figures could be obtained they would show one half of Arkansas under prohibition rule. More bills affecting the liquor interests were introduced in this legislature than on any other subject. The dealers, both wholesale and retail, are much alarmed over the drift of legislation, and during the coming two years they propose to organize, and have something to say as to who shall be members of the next legislature in order to stem the tide which threatens to engulf their interests," writes an Arkansas correspondent.

MRS. SALLIE F. CHAPIN writes: "The South Carolina W. C. T. U. convention adjourned May 5, after a very delightful session. Mrs. M. L. Wells, our National organizer, who came to us fresh from working at the Louisiana and Georgia conventions, was right in the spirit and at her very best, which means a great deal. She is a great favorite, and at a convention a host in herself. She has promised both Georgia and South Carolina to come back for a month. My health being so poor, I felt sure another president was a necessity, and positively refused a re-election, but my resignation was rejected, and all discussion cut short by voting me back by acclamation. The corresponding secretary they left entirely to my choosing. The recording secretary is Miss Nettie Tarrow, Spartanburg, and the treasurer is Mrs. Julia H. Traxler. The superintendent of Y work is Miss Ellen Traxler, and our vice-president, Mrs. Wm. K. Blake, Spartanburg. We missed our dear Mrs. Gause more than my pen can tell. Resolutions expressing our deep sorrow were passed."

WORLD'S WOMAN'S CHRISTIAN TEMPERANCE UNION
FOR THE
PROTECTION OF THE HOME.
Addressed to the Governments of the World.

Honored Rulers, Representatives and Brothers:

We, your Petitioners, although belonging to the physically weaker sex, are strong of heart to love our homes, our native land, and the world's family of nations.

We know that clear brains and pure hearts make honest lives and happy homes, and that by these the nations prosper, and the time is brought nearer when the world shall be at peace.

We know that indulgence in Alcohol and Opium, and in other vices which disgrace our social life, makes misery for all the world, and most of all for us and for our children.

We know that stimulants and opiates are sold under legal guarantees which make the Governments partners in the traffic, by accepting as revenue a portion of the profits, and we know with shame that they are often forced by treaty upon populations, either ignorant or unwilling.

We know that the law might do much, now left undone, to raise the moral tone of society and render vice difficult.

We have no power to prevent these great iniquities beneath which the whole world groans, but you have power to redeem the honor of the nations from an indefensible complicity.

We therefore come to you with the united voices of representative women of every land, beseeching you to raise the standard of the law to that of Christian morals, to strip away the safeguards and sanctions of the state from the drink traffic and the opium trade, and to protect our homes by the total prohibition of these curses of civilization throughout all the territory over which your Government extends.

DRESS REFORM.

If interested send for my free illustrated booklet describing Healthful Dress for women and children. MRS. S. W. PIKE, 73 Madison Street, Chicago

It is evident that when in any country the methods of the white ribbon women are adopted by the great National society of women in that country, that society should affiliate directly with the World's Women's Christian Temperance Union which in itself is nothing more nor less than a federation of National temperance societies of women.

I ought to say that it is believed by all those who favor Lady Henry that the real reason of the difficulty is that having for many years controlled the forces of the society themselves, the majority of the executive could not brook the presence and work of one so earnest and determined as "her ladyship." They thought they were electing a titled leader who would simply preside after the English fashion at their great public meetings, leaving them to carry on the affairs of the society as seemed good in their own sight. On finding themselves mistaken in this they naturally resented her presence and interference, for it is a well-nigh universal law that no class of men or women part with power without a struggle to retain or regain it.

At the close of Lady Henry's address, which occupied two hours and sustained the earnest attention of an audience that had listened for two hours previously, there was another rousing cheer for Lady Henry, immediately followed by adjournment, and if ever a set of women went out from a meeting with "bees in their bonnets" it was our British sisters on this occasion!

After lunch there was another session of two hours or more, in which the debate was limited to five minutes and later to three minutes to each speaker, Mrs. Jones, the chairman, recognizing those who favored the different factions, and holding the reins of the Council with great intelligence and skill. The brief, epigrammatic speeches of a variety of women with a broad, Scotch accent; the quick, clipping style of the Welsh women; the deep tones of Cornwall; the burr of the North; the soft tones of the South, were all brought into the chorus of debate. It was most pleasant to one who for nearly twenty years had been in the forefront of women's conventions in every part of America and Canada, to note the self-possession and good temper manifested by these many disputants. Finally they adjourned to the voting-room, where three tellers from each side guarded the ballot box. Not a woman was allowed to enter who did not display credentials of the most undoubted character. Women went in six at a time, and the voting, which began at eight o'clock, was not over until well-nigh half-past ten. Meanwhile Lady Henry and I, fatigued with the day's doings, slipped away to her home, but we soon heard the roll of wheels, and such laughing, crowing and rejoicing at the front door and in the hall as showed plainly enough which side had won the day. Mrs. Hugh Price Hughes, Mrs. Walter Maclaren, Miss Florence Balgarnie, and many other leaders on Lady Henry's side, came to bring their greetings and congratulations. They said we had missed a great deal in being absent when the voting was announced, for such a glorification was never seen outside an American convention. The women clapped their hands, waved their handkerchiefs, pirouetted, embraced, cheered again and yet again, and ended, as all Women's Temperance Conventions do, by singing the doxology.

I ought to mention that during the entire proceedings not a reporter was anywhere to be seen, and he could no more have run the gauntlet of the custodians, the stewards and other good women on guard than he could have hoped to "climb the golden stair." It should also be said in justice to both sides that before the morning session was over I was, by unanimous consent, invited to the platform and received with the kindest cordiality.

The second day of the Conference settled down to business; it was perfectly evident that two-thirds of the convention were now Lady Henry's adherents, determined upon enlarging the executive committee by the election of such officers and members as she desired, and the appointment of a sub-committee of thirteen that should carry out the detail work. They also put into their constitution the words: "Federated to the World's Women's Christian Temperance Union" that there might never again be any doubt as to their relationship with us, and took a long step forward on the road toward the cosmopolitan spirit of solidarity among women and world-wide coöperation and good will. Every new departure is to be indorsed before it can be taken by the annual meeting which is, of course, the final depository of power. The executive committee consisting of about eighty leading women of the United Kingdom is to meet six times a year and to it the sub-committee, consisting of the five officers and eight members of the executive elected, must report.

It is my belief that the British Women's Temperance Association has entered on a great career of beneficent work, and that between the B. W. T. A. and the W. C. T. U. in all the English colonies and in America there will be henceforth the same warm and cordial bond that has from the first been cherished among all our societies, excepting the majority of the executive committee of the English society as it was made up until yesterday. It is pathetic to remember that in all ages different types of mind have seemed to be obliged to go different ways, but this has really been the foundation of civil and religious freedom, and doubtless to the end of the world it will remain true that "man's extremity" (owing to his limitation of thought, feeling and purpose) becomes "God's opportunity."

TEMPERANCE TEMPLE ITEMS.

BY MATILDA B. CARSE.

By faith he (Moses) forsook Egypt, not fearing the wrath of the king; for he endured as seeing him who is invisible.—Heb. 11: 27.

The following letter from Mrs. Livermore is like all her writing, clear-cut and to the point, full of broad magnanimity, worthy of emulation. She says: "The assault upon you has hardly created a ripple of excitement among us in the East, notwithstanding our papers abounded in 'specials from Chicago,' jeremiads concerning 'the disintegration of the W. C. T. U.' and lachrymal regrets that Mrs. Carse had undertaken to 'emulate great capitalists in the magnitude of her operations, when she had neither money nor financial backing.' I think the reporters who hurried round among the prominent W. C. T. U. people were a little surprised that they 'didn't scare worth a cent.' 'One story is good till another story is told' is the old axiom, and one of the reporters informed me that the one unvarying answer he received was: 'We are waiting Mrs. Carse's reply, she will make everything clear.' And it is the general verdict that you have done so.

"It amused me that any one was in such a state of mind over the 'gift fund.' What a hungry, unclothed, butterless, sugarless, tatterdemalion crowd the contributors to the 'gift fund' are, according to your defamer. I carried the heartrending description of them in my pocket for a few days, that I might show it to the handsomely dressed women and men whom I knew had contributed to the 'gift fund,' Mr. Faxon being one of them. It always caused a good laugh. There is one point concerning that 'gift fund' that I have never seen alluded to. I have never known a person who gave money for it who affixed a condition to its use, other than this: It was to be used for the Temple, and no one, to my knowledge, has stipulated how it should be used. If the gift fund has been used to pay interest, to buy up the stock, or to decorate Willard Hall, I doubt if there is a contributor who would object. I have asked scores of contributors, who, like myself, gave $100 to the fund, if they had dictated to Mrs. Carse, at the time of their donation, to what especial use their money should be put, and the unvarying answer has been in the negative. They were content to have you use it as you needed it. The people who contributed the money to the gift fund had the right to direct its disposal, and as they have left you to employ it as your needs and your judgment dictate, interference in the matter is wholly gratuitous.

"The attack gave you an opportunity to make a thorough exposition of your work, to submit it to the criticism of the public, and has done you good service. May you now be left in peace to carry out your great ambition of giving a million of property, clear and unincumbered, to the W. C. T. U. I was averse to the undertaking, in the beginning, as you may remember, but now that you are in it, I am doing what I can by buying the bonds, adding to the gift fund, and defending the enterprise to help you through. And it seems to me we must all do the same loyally and persistently—and if we cannot, then we must hold our peace, and not sow suspicion. And you will then carry your great enterprise safely through."

The following extracts from letters received in regard to the above subject from two of our great leaders will, we are sure, be read with interest by all friends of the Temple. Miss F. E. Willard writes: "I wish to say to you that your statement seems to me complete and will serve to put the Temple on a firmer basis than ever. How glad I am that all this difficulty did not occur until the Temple was solidly wrought into brick, stone and marble that nobody can controvert. This 'tug of war' had to come, and it enables us to know who are our friends and who are not. The good temper of your reply and its clear statements will have tremendous effect." Mrs. Mary T. Lathrap writes: "There is something electric about Mrs. Carse's reply; it lives and breathes and settles the whole matter with any one who wants the truth. Tell her that the effect of her answer is the same over the country as in Chicago, the guns are spiked and she may rest in joy and strength."

MUSICAL CHART OF SCALES AND CHORDS FOR BEGINNERS, by M. Anna McPherson, 1315 Capitol Avenue, Des Moines, Iowa. This chart, in size, 12x17 inches, handsomely printed on heavy paper, contains seven pages of matter for musical instruction. This matter includes over one hundred definitions fully illustrated, representation of piano key-board with explanations, the major and minor scales with their corresponding chords, giving the fingering, and a study in major chords arranged for accompaniments. The chart will, without doubt, prove helpful to those using it. Address communications to author as above.

SEED NUMBER ONE HARD is the title of a book containing six of John G. Woolley's speeches. Mr. Woolley stands among the few who can put old truths into such terse and striking form as to arrest and hold those whose ears have become hardened to the truth they have so often heard and as often rejected. SEED is bristling with good things. The author is broad. He deals sledge hammer blows right and left, afraid of none, calling things by their right names. He carries Christ into politics and politics to Christ. Every one who is on the Lord's side (and that is always on the temperance side) ought to know who John G. Woolley is and what he is doing. It may be news even to some who claim relationship to the W. C. T. U. that this good soldier of the Cross has a beautiful nook on this beautiful globe, called "Rest Island"—not a "cure" nor a "home," but, as the founder himself calls it, "another chance"; a place where sin-sick, drink-enslaved souls can go for rest; can go to get another and a better grip on life; and best of all a hold on Christ. Funk & Wagnalls have made a gift in toto of SEED, of which they are the publishers, to the Rest Island Mission, and every one who invests a dollar in one of the books, gives a dollar to a work that is patterned after the works of Him who came not to receive ministrations, but to minister.

Funk & Wagnalls, 18 to 20 Astor Place, New York City.

Houghton, Mifflin & Company have issued together in book form, two charming stories by Kate Douglas Wiggin, which have been running as magazine serials. These are, A CATHEDRAL COURTSHIP and PENELOPE'S ENGLISH EXPERIENCES, written in the author's quaintest style, with unexpected flashes of wit and humor that play over the commonplaces as summer lightning glorifies the most severe landscape. The CATHEDRAL COURTSHIP is indeed a courtship under difficulties. A Boston girl with an aunt as chaperon, sets out to "do" the English cathedrals. A very adroit young lover—lover at "first sight"—captures their written itinery which an ill wind blows beyond their reach, and shadows them from shrine to shrine, until fair and fickle fortune smiles on him and "forever after" Kitty and Jack make up their itineries together. Penelope's experiences are somewhat more staid. She is an artist who proclaims in the opening chapter that she is "short of thirty" and never to "be in love." In this strict temper she "does" England. The author knows of what she writes, for she draws faithful pictures of the inhabitants of the proud sea-island, pictures which when looked at through American eyes are often full of amusement. There is not much "love" in the story, but one spies the golden thread here and there until at last it forms a dainty loop and two more victims are ensnared for the remainder of their days.

QUARTERLY TEMPERANCE LESSON.

The Quarterly Temperance Lesson for Sunday, May 21, has been carefully prepared by Mrs. Helen G. Rice, superintendent of Loyal Temperance Legion work.

The topic is "A Warning Against Strong Drink," with the Golden Text: "Wine is a mocker, strong drink is raging; and whosoever is deceived thereby is not wise." Prov. 20:1.

The striking picture of the drunkard as shown in the Word of God (Prov. 29:33-35) though not pleasant to contemplate, is hideously true. An analysis of the portrait discloses six of its saddest features: Woe and sorrow; contentions; babbling; wounds without cause; redness of eyes. In verse 31 is revealed God's sure remedy for drunkenness, which is obedience to the strongest possible command, "Look not." In the following verse is the reason for this remedy.

For primary classes verse 31 suggests an object lesson for blackboard illustrations, from which a tactful teacher may evolve many impressive truths, and may emphasize the insidious and evil effects of the poison of alcohol. Pictures of insects which bite or sting may be drawn, and the fact developed that while some bites or stings, though painful, are not lasting in effect, other poisons will kill quickly, and that the poison of alcohol, which biteth like a serpent and stingeth like an adder, will kill if a man drinks it.

The lesson closes with a story for the L. T. L's upon the words: "Thou shalt not take the name of the Lord thy God in vain."

The Quarterly Lesson is issued, as usual, as a supplement to the May number of The Young Crusader.

TERMS:

For 100, 65 cents; 500, $2.75; 1,000 $5; The Young Crusader and the lesson will be sent on the following terms: For 100, $1; 500, $4.75; 1,000, $9; 2,000, $15; 5,000, $35; 8,000, $48. All orders between numbers named at the rate immediately preceding.

In the White Ribbon Banner, the official organ of the W. C. T. U. of Connecticut, a plan was recently presented for a special series of temperance meetings in the churches, with a view to a concerted presentation of gospel truth. It was suggested that at the conclusion of these services temperance leaflets should be distributed. We publish a series of leaflets called "Timely Talks," which are designed for this especial object. This series covers a great range of topics, aiming to touch all phases of the temperance question. We will send the entire set, 40 in number, for 15 cents. From these samples you can order especial numbers at the rate of 30 cents a hundred; $2.50 per thousand.

THE ADVANCE GUARD FOR MAY.

The Advance Guard for May is of especial interest to hundreds of the young people whose dimes have helped pay for the beautiful Willard fountain. This number contains a faithful representation of the sweet-faced girl who stands with outstretched arms to give a cup of cold water "in His name" to the thirsty people who during the hot summer days will bless the donors as they honor the grand woman for whom the boys and girls have given this blessed memorial. Read of other wonders of the White City in the Advance Guard and remember that for the nominal sum of 50c. you can receive that magazine an entire year.

WHAT MEANS THIS STONE.

A most beautiful booklet with cover having these words entwined with delicately tinted apple-blossoms, has just been issued.

The illustrations of the poem written by Mrs. Mary T. Lathrap on the laying of the corner-stone of the Temple were designed in Germany and lend an added beauty to the words, bringing out more vividly the prophetic vision expressed in the lines,

"We give thee to thy mission sweet,
With lavish wealth of love complete,
Nor count the sum.
Who knows but on the altar place
May shine the glory of His face
When Jesus comes!"

Visitors will find it very desirable to take home as a souvenir of the Temple. Mailed to any address, nicely boxed, for 60c.

A WONDER-TALE.

"Columbus: and What He Found," by Mrs. Mary H. Hull, is a wonder-tale filled with all the romance and truth of the great event of America's discovery, and told for young readers in a pure yet thrilling manner. There is already a large demand for this unique child's history among parents and teachers who desire to answer authentically all questions and controversies which come to the ears of children. Columbus will be always with us as much a feature in the future as Washington, being the step beyond Washington and the home-nation into the great mother, Europe, and the beginnings of the child Columbia. This book is filled with patriotic enthusiasm. Price $1.

CONSUMPTION CURED.

Having tested its wonderful curative powers in thousands of cases, and desiring to relieve human suffering, I will send free of charge to all who wish it, this recipe in German, French or English, with full directions, for preparing and using. INDEPENDENT ORDER OF GOOD TEMPLARS.

If you contemplate attending the meeting of the Right Worthy Grand Lodge of the World's Independent Order of Good Templars at Des Moines, Iowa, June 13th to 23d, and if you desire to visit Washington and the World's Fair at the same time, you should by all means travel via the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad. It is the only direct line to Chicago from New York, Philadelphia and Baltimore via Washington. All of its through trains from New York pass through that city and carry Pullman sleeping cars. For detailed information as to rates, time of trains and sleeping-car accommodations, apply to nearest B. & O. R. R., or to Chas. O. Scull, General Passenger Agent, Baltimore, Md.

CALIFORNIA.

The fame of the climate of California draws to that charming state new friends every year, particularly from sections where long, severe winters, followed by trying spring seasons, work such disastrous results among the weak and debilitated.

The great improvements in passenger train service, higher degrees of comfort in the cars, and shorter time required on the trip, combined with the cheapness of the excursion tickets now being sold to California and back by the Santa Fé Route make the journey agreeable and, one can almost say, economical. The many delightful resorts now established in California afford every comfort and luxury desired by the fastidious, and present unique attractions.

The Hotel del Coronado at San Diego, the Raymond at Pasadena, the Redondo at Redondo Beach and the hotels at Santa Barbara, Monterey, Riverside, Los Angeles and many other points, have grown as famous as any on the Atlantic Coast—and a fact that should not be forgotten is that they are resorts all the year around, although the greatest number of people from the East are in California between the months of November and May.

Write to John J. Byrne, Asst. Passenger Traffic Manager, 723 Monadnock Block, Chicago, Ill., if you are interested in California, and he will send you some reading matter.

Flower mission day will soon be here. Send for cards bearing selections from the Scriptures.

Signal Notes.

THE governor of Missouri has appointed thirteen women as notaries public.

THERE are two hundred and forty-two life-saving stations on the coasts of this country.

A MISSION among the Jews of Paris has been started and an interesting work is being done.

THE value of real estate owned by religious bodies in Boston is over fourteen million dollars.

A GLASGOW girl says that Y. W. C. A. means that no girl in Glasgow need ever be without a friend.

IT is said that forty-five thousand scholars from the Sunday-schools of the old country drift into intemperance every year.

THE Association of Economic Entomologists estimates that $380,000,000 per year is the amount lost from insect ravages.

ABOUT forty-five thousand men and women in Paris live on what others throw away, by collecting rags, paper, bones, etc., from the streets and dust boxes.

CONNECTED with the Y. W. C. A. of London are twenty-five institutes and evening rooms, twenty homes and restaurants and ninety-one other branches, making a total of one hundred and thirty-six, with a membership of fourteen thousand.

IT is encouraging to know that a Christian Endeavor society has been organized among the policemen in New York City. The movement originated with an English lady who has organized similar societies among policemen in Australia, Africa, India, Canada and England.

A WOMAN, a compositor on the New Albany Ledger, has recently been appointed state organizer of the Federation of Labor in Indiana. Her duty will be to travel about the state, address mass-meetings and organize associations of working people. She has supported herself since she was but a mere girl.

A SOCIALIST, in replying to Dr. Rainsford's church saloon scheme, said, among other things, that it would simply be the rich men of the city giving the poor man a better saloon than he now had to spend his wages and to become a slave to his appetites. First care for his intellect and morals, and then a man will find other things to do than to spend money on cards and liquors.

INQUIRIES were made of the tax collectors in five hundred towns in Maine as to the number of women tax payers and the amount for which they were assessed. The report showed seven thousand nine hundred and fifty-six women taxed, and the value of the property was over four million five hundred thousand dollars. One hundred and forty-six of the collectors saw no reason why these women should not have the privilege of voting at municipal elections.

THE Young Women's Christian Associations of the United States and Canada held their Fourth International Convention at Toledo, O., April 27-30. Two hundred and seventeen delegates represented sixteen states and provinces. In the report of the international committee it was shown that in the past two years, the time elapsing since the previous convention, associations had been organized in Harlem, Pittsburgh, Lowell, Minneapolis, Milwaukee, Detroit, Los Angeles, Indianapolis, Chicago University, Northfield Seminary, Leland Stanford, Jr., University, the state universities of Indiana, Texas and Kansas and many other important colleges and cities. The convention decided to accept the proposition of the British associations to unite with them in forming a World's Association.

While the Doctors are Doubting.

Scientists have discovered the germs of many diseases, but, unfortunately, not as yet the means of their destruction.

At present the culture and not the destruction of the deadly bacteria seems to absorb most of their attention.

However, they all agree that a well-nourished body and plenty of ozone offer decidedly unfavorable conditions to germ development.

While the doctors are in this state of uncertainty, and even longer, would it not be well for the patient to have recourse to the well tried Compound Oxygen, which is both germicide and revitalizer.

During the last twenty-three years it has cured cases pronounced incurable, and this statement is substantiated by the testimony of those who have tried it. It has witnessed the failure of "lymph" and "life elixir."

At any rate investigate the matter for yourself. Send for our book of 200 pages. It will tell you about this remedy, how it acts, and furnish you with many testimonals and records of surprising cures. We are permitted to refer you to the patients themselves. Book sent free. Address DRS. STARKEY & PALEN, 1529 Arch street, Philadelphia, or Chicago, San Francisco, New York and Toronto, Ont.

A WORD TO THE WISE.
CERTAIN ADVERTISEMENTS FROM TRADE RIVALS,
who fear the phenomenal success of

Van Houten's Cocoa

in America, contain innuendoes against it, and appeal to the authority of Dr. SYDNEY RINGER, Professor of Medicine at University College, London. Author of the Standard "Handbook of Therapeutics."

This eminent physician ACTUALLY writes as follows:—

"From the careful analyses of Professor ATTFIELD and others, I am satisfied that Messrs. VAN HOUTEN'S COCOA is in no way injurious to health, and that it is decidedly more nutritious than other Cocoas.—It is certainly "Pure" and highly digestible.

The quotations in certain advertisements from my book on Therapeutics are quite misleading and cannot possibly apply to VAN HOUTEN'S COCOA."

The false reflection on VAN HOUTEN'S COCOA is thus effectually repelled and the very authority cited to injure it, has thereby been prompted to give it a very handsome testimonial.

OUR flower mission work is an embodiment of three distinct ideas, each one of which has its own place in W. C. T. U. economy, but which are in no other department so perfectly blended into an harmonious whole. There is, first, the recognition of the beautiful as a part of God's purpose for the world; second, the recognition of pain and suffering as having also a place in His economy, and third, the blending of the two with the thought of a willing service of the strong and the beautiful to the needs of sorrow and pain.

MR. JOHN G. WOOLLEY'S leadership of the Willard Hall noon meetings is most acceptable to white-ribboners as well as to the large company of other Christian workers who gather in this already highly prized and beautiful little sanctuary.

A TELEGRAM from Mrs. Mary H. Hunt, received just as we close our forms, contains this bit of good news: "Governor of Connecticut has just signed a strong temperance educational law that can be enforced, which repeals the weak law of 1885, and retires its poor little state text-book that made the old law a dead letter."

THE text-card attached to the bouquet is the outward expression of His great "Word"; but "the word of God is not bound" even to the letter of the Scripture; and His Spirit speaks also through the flowers themselves, through the knot of white ribbon which binds them, and through the glad light in your eyes as you bear them to the suffering ones.

IT having been currently reported that there was a "split" in the British Women's Temperance Association, after the reëlection of Lady Henry Somerset, we are pleased to be able to refute the statement in toto. About eighty left the convention to consult about future action, but all returned and there was no "split" whatever. Lady Henry has created more enthusiasm than any other temperance leader on the British islands since the time of Father Mathew, and her work is but begun.

MRS. ELLA F. M. WILLIAMS, of Montreal, Canada, has issued her report as treasurer of the World's W. C. T. U. The report extends from November 11, 1891 (the date of the Boston convention) to November 11, 1892, and has been delayed because it was supposed, until our World's Convention was postponed from June to October this year, that the "Financial Letter" published last summer would suffice. It shows receipts to have been from all sources (dues, donations and Miss Willard's personal appeal) to have been four thousand, seven hundred and seventy-five dollars, and disbursements, three thousand five hundred and ten dollars, leaving a balance last November of one thousand, two hundred and sixty-five dollars. Mrs. Williams states: "Now that this fund is exhausted we are depending upon and confidently hoping for generous contributions from unions and individuals to take its place and enable us to send out more missionaries."

THE fact that Mr. Gladstone was received with cat-calls and hissing at a great reception at the Imperial Institute on May 17th is almost incredible to Americans. In the bitterest days of the Civil War, an armistice of politeness would have been declared at the doors of a social reception, no matter how large, and foes would have grasped hands as a token that they were at least human and well-mannered. It is probably true that in no other civilized country could such a scene have been witnessed. Like all other nations the English have the defects of their qualities, and their most pronounced quality is a certain sturdy, stolid, self-assertive pugnacity. This is a good backbone for a character that shall dominate, and insures what Tennyson calls "the wrestling thews that throw the world." An island people in the perpetual struggle to survive must become aggressive in brain and eye, in hand and foot, or it would never have arrived at empire as the British have done; but the small, sweet courtesies of life must, in the nature of things, be disregarded by such a race. We do not refer to individuals, but give this as a study of race character. There are no more considerate, tender-hearted, gracious-mannered people living than one finds in Great Britain; but it is not the national character. However, we must modify our criticism concerning the "ladies" (?) who ran up and "hissed" Mr. Gladstone, and the "gentlemen" (?) who "hooted" him in "polite" society, when we remember that liquors of all kinds were furnished to the thirty thousand guests, and that behind the scarlet counter there were four hundred attendants (women, be it noted), that the bar at which they served was divided into sixteen sections, and was nine hundred feet long, and that there were forty thousand wine-glasses, all well supplied with the beverages that "steal away the brain." But then, the pity of it, and the spectacle of it to heathen nations, the shame of it to Christian England, and to all who proudly call themselves a part of "the great Anglo-Saxon race"!

EACH flower-missioner who finds her way into the wards of a hospital, or who, with basket on her arm, penetrates, half tremblingly, some by-way of a great city; each one who takes of the outward gladness of nature to minister to the inward sorrow of soul, is learning these three lessons, which sum up the whole of God's teaching for humanity: First, God is gladness, and all real gladness is of God. Not alone that which the rapt saint recognizes as spiritual ecstasy, but the gladness of the great outward world—all innocent joy and beauty, whether it well up from the throat of a bird, the perfume of a flower, or the heart of a human being. Second, pain is only inverse gladness, the other side of the tapestry of life, the pause in the music which is necessary to the harmony, the minor chord without which all music would lose its charm. Third, the perfect flower of earth's and heaven's gladness is the ability to minister to others; that only is a real joy which is a shared joy; giving alone can link us to God whose gladness is an eternal giving. Therefore go forth in great joy, ye to whom has been committed this ideal mission. It is not a little thing you are doing. It is the "cup of cold water" spiritualized; the ministering to unseen, but none the less real, needs. Some disciples of stern utility may reproach you that you bear nothing more substantial in your ministry; they may suggest broth and flannels as the only real help. Another may reproach you that you deal not exclusively in "spiritual truths"; but He who said, "Consider the lilies how they grow" will not scorn your effort to bear the beauty and the gladness of the lilies into darkened lives.

THE more we reflect upon the magnitude and marvelous success of the woman's congresses, held in Chicago, May 15–22, the more pronounced is our admiration for the women's brains which planned and executed them. The wonder of it all grows as we look back to that great Art Palace, filled with thousands of brilliant, purposeful women, and resounding with sentiments ennobling and prophetic. The men's congresses which followed have fallen so far behind in point of attendance and enthusiasm, that the Art Palace is as dreary a place as Goldsmith's deserted village, and bears none of the signs of life and energy with which it vibrated during the initial week of the congresses. Hundreds attend its meetings now, where thousands attended then. What is the secret? We think twofold, first, the careful and prolonged preparation and thoughtfulness for details, so prominent in the women's meetings, have not characterized the subsequent gatherings, but second, and more vital than that, even, is the character of the subjects discussed. The woman's programs teemed with topics of current interest and the discussions were practical and vivacious, all leading towards a prompt and permanent solution. Yes, those women's congresses were wonderful and the wonder of them grows upon us. Six months hence we will write a more appreciative and appropriate paragraph about them than we can to-day. If the planet Mars were suddenly dropped at our feet, we would wonder and admire, but so small a proportion of it could we see at one time, that not until we could remove ourselves to a sufficient distance to look at it through a telescope could we rightly judge its dimensions and calculate its importance. The women have come to the front and they have come to stay

CHAPLETS for her to-day
And garlands in her name,
Let all the churches' altars blaze
Blood-red with fragrant flame;
Bring roses, royal red;
Bring lilies like the drift
Of northern snows, and from green beds
Pluck pansies for our gift.
Sift over her, oh, sun,
The gold of summer skies;
Shine softly, stars, above the grave
Where this dear sleeper lies!

Sunshine and song and flowers,
Green wood and waving tree,
The ocean's murmur, summer winds
And all things glad and free—
May blooms and songs of June
And all the lift and stir
Of happy, buoyant life and tune
Come with the thought of her.
Come with the thought of her
Who has them all to-day—
Treading the sunlit slopes
Of God's eternal day.

SCARLET GERANIUMS.

BY ELIZABETH CUMINGS.

"Throw 'em away, Hobbs. No, burn 'em up in the alley. No one I know wants slips, and we have all we want," and Mrs. Jobbley waddled up the broad stone steps to her great house as fast as her short legs would let her. She turned about when she had reached the top and added: "I guess burning is best. I don't want any trash about."

There were no flowers in the big round bed on the Jobbley lawn save geraniums of various tints of scarlet. They were Mrs. Jobbley's favorite flower, but old Jerry Hobbs snored with mingled scorn, stoutness and shortness of breath as he bent over them. "'Ateful things," he said to himself grumly. "Loud lookin' an' loud smellin'. Never seed nobody as liked 'em as want jes' like 'em."

Like all positive people Mr. Hobbs ran the risk of contradiction, and this assertion of his was immediately refuted, for as he flung a heap of the obnoxious plants into his wheelbarrow, a piping voice accosted him, "Say, mister," it said, "you ain't a-goin' to throw 'em away, be you?"

"Yes I be," he replied, shaking his head with an obstinate movement.

"Wouldn't any of 'em grow?" demanded the voice.

"All the sprouts would."

Two blue eyes gleamed at him through the hedge, and he could see a ridiculous brown straw hat and a cloud of brown curls. "Oh!" sighed the voice. "Oh, if they would, and they are to be thrown away—" It was evident courage was not equal to desire.

Old Jerry went to the hedge and bent far over it. "A little gel like you ought 'o 'ave 'art's-h'ease and the like on 'em, but them as likes g'raniums, likes 'em, an' that's all to it. You can 'ave all, or ary part o' the lot you like. Come in." He patiently cut the best young sprouts off the old plants and told his guest how to prepare the earth for them. "Wentilate th' bottom," he said, "an' don't flatter yourself you love flowers, if you won't take care for 'em. Love as won't take trouble ain't worth a bob."

In all Dobb's Court there was not so happy a child as Dilly Parker was that night. Her home was not what you and I would find cheerful or comfortable. Sun, rain and snow had stained the ramshackle house, and the clouds of sooty smoke drifting down upon it all day from Noxon's box factory, the Prairie leather works, and the Pawpaw rolling mills had combined with them to make it just the color of an old soap barrel. It was a miracle the chimney did not tumble down, and that the roof, the shingles stood up like scales on a fish after a knife had been drawn against them, did not blow away. But in certain ways it was the best house in the Court. If it was little, it had a bit of yard which not only held a clothes wheel, but a roomy coop in which lived at present a loquacious duck. Then, it was a very neat house. The windows shone, and so did the steps, and the poor curtains were as white as hands could make them. Better yet, only one family lived in it. Most of the houses in the Court held two or more. The widow Parker kept the wolf from the door by sewing, and it must be admitted he was kept much further away than when Mr. Parker was alive, though he had earned good wages when he chose to work. Grandpa Parker was able to do a little for the household, for he was an old-fashioned cobbler, who could put a patch on a shoe that would give it a new lease of life. As for Grandma Parker, there never was any one like her to make a little go a long way, but if it had not been for Dilly they would have had a dull, grumbly time of it in the clean, weather-beaten house. Grandpa had the rheumatism, and grandma the asthma, and Dilly's mamma had many headaches from staying in the house and sewing so much. As it was, they grumbled some.

"Plants are messy things," said grandma, when she saw how full Dilly's apron was of the slips, "and it looks to me 'sif them was all alike."

"The more bushes I have, the more flowers," said Dilly, "but they are not all alike."

"I should desire to know what you'll put 'em in," said her mother, "and where?"

"My goodness tur me!" snapped grandpa who dearly loved the off side of everything, "there's somethin' like a wagon load of tins on the Simmonses' ash pile, and I can melt off the cut-into end, and make holes with a nail in the bottom of 'em, an Dilly can scour 'em up; an' as for puttin' 'em, she can put 'em up chawmber where I work. Fus' in the north winder till they root, an' then in the south winder. I on'y wish't I was as sure o' gittin' rid o' the rheumatiz as them plants is of a place."

"And I won't let 'em make a mess," promised Dilly.

Geraniums are generous plants. Not a slip died, and soon grandpa's south window was a secret pleasure to all Dobb's Court. It was a sorry, shabby street closed in by the great box factory at one end, and lost at the other in a wider thoroughfare which crossed it at an obtuse angle. No one lived there who was not obliged to. The only sign of prosperity was about the brick block just at the turn, and that bore in its jug-trimmed windows the legend, "Rivenbecker's Place." A great round sign looked down the Court from the angle of its wall like a cyclopean eye, and announced that Milwaukee beer was for sale. It seemed to have a more winning power than the lamps twinkling in the poor homes—that sign, and the men who worked in the rolling mills in the next square, and the box makers and leather workers, and men who worked nowhere, patronized Rivenbecker to such good purpose he was able to set up a beautifully carved screen just inside his door to keep out inquisitive eyes.

The first plant that blossomed Dilly set beside her mother's window. Soon there were spikes of bloom to give away, and one went to Biddy O'Dowd who had something wrong with her back, and one to Tim McShane, who had been vaccinated, and one to Mrs. Griggsby who was slowly fading away with consumption. Mrs. Parker was a generous woman at heart, and her childhood had been spent upon a farm where there was always something to give away. Dilly's flowers began to have an odd effect upon her. She brightened up, not only because of them, but because they were a source of pleasure to all the Court. She felt a larger self-esteem.

Spring was coming. The maples far away up town were putting forth the points of their leaves, and the daffodillies were coming up. Down in Dobb's Court an occasional dandelion struggled into bloom. Perhaps the bursting of the box factory boiler was no worse then than it would have been at any time, but somehow in the spring the heart is more full of hope than at any other, and when Pat O'Dowd and Daniel Cox and John Griggsby were borne away to the hospital because too sorely burned to be attended to at home, and Peter Flynn was dug out of the debris quite dead, a gloom that could not find words settled down in the place. Dilly's flower-decked windows were the only bright spots there, and how glad she was to cut the best of the flowers for the sorrowing ones, and to send to the men in the hospital. Pat O'Dowd did not look a bit as if he cared for flowers, for he was a giant of a man, with a broad, coarse face. John Griggsby was lean as a wire, and had been one of Rivenbeck's best customers, and Grandma Parker sniffed at the notion that either of them would care for a bouquet. "Well," said Dilly, "it 'll show good-will, grandma, and perhaps for a few seconds it will keep them from thinking how smarty their burns are." So the flowers went.

"Houly Virgin! they pleased all who could see 'em!" cried Mrs. O'Dowd when she returned weary and flushed from her Sunday visit to her husband. "Ivery poor felley had his head twisted to look at 'em whin I wint away, an' I sez to Pat kind o' loud loike fur 'em all to hear, jist your very words, me dear, may th' heavens be your bed! an' sez I, 'They mane good-will, an' remimbrance from thim as is comfortable whilst yees are suff'rin,' sez I. An' whin I was fur goin', an auld mon wid a square jaw an' a twist av one eye, as was laid oop wid a laig twice broke from fallin' aff a ladder, the nurse woman said, an' some hurted in th' back beside, stopped me, an' sez he, 'Did ye say thim fluors came from Dobb's Coort?' An' sez I, 'Yis, please yer honor, ivery stitch av 'em from a neighbor's chile, a bit av a girl for whom they grow like pusley in the wrang place,' sez I. An' sez he, 'Has she big blue eyes that shine, an' brown curls?' An' sez I, 'True for yer she has.' 'Well,' sez he, 'thim there sprouts I give her from plants as was to be throwed away. Go and tell somebody what pleasure you've seed,' sez he, 'from things that are growed off leavin's. Tell somebody as 'll remimber,' an' thin he dozed aff loike for he was that wake a feather'd blow him over; an' whin I came home I stopped at Mrs. Whittemore's, one of me ladies as I wash for, to tell her av Pat, for she axed, an' whin I tauld her th' story, if ye'll belave it, sez she, a makin' much av what th' auld mon said to me, an' he most dead too with th' back av him, an' not quite right in his moind, sez she, 'Mis' O'Dowd,' sez she, 'ivery day I have a fluor to cut, I'll see to it it gives somebody pleasure, an' I'll not forgit thim as is sick, or poor,' sez she, 'an' me husband bein' Sunday-school superintindint 'll spake av it to his school,' sez she; an' noow ye can see whut a power av a way thim red posies av your have traveled, me dear, wid theer inflooance, for Mis' Whittemore has a gayrdin bigger thin this whole Coort, an' as fur kapin' her word, she's good as th' praste himself, though a Protestant, which to be sure you are, more's th' pity. Thanks to you, there'll be fluors all summer to th' hospital, which the Lord above knows needs 'em."

Dilly gave a little skip of happiness. "I thought I was happy when I came home with my plants," she said, "but it's pleasanter to give 'em away. I'm saving up slips to give now. Everybody'd give flowers who has 'em to give, if only the joy they bring was thought of."

"True for you, me little darlin'," said Mrs. O'Dowd, and leaning her hands upon her knees she rose heavily. "Sure whin I woke this marnin' I says to mysilf, 'tis a hard warld, an' I wish barin' th' sin av it, I was through wid it; but whin ye gave me th' pot for Biddy, an' thin th' foine bunch for th' byes at the hospital, an' I fin's 'em mendin,' an' all, an' I heard Mis' Whittemore talk, I sez to mysilf, 'Nora, 'tis no sinse ye 'av o' yer marcies.' Sure a body'd not belave the coorage there can be in th' remimbrance an' good-will av a fluor. Whut a warld 'twould be if thim as has would allays reach down pleasant like to thim as haven't."

LOST OPPORTUNITY.*

BY JENNIE CASSEDAY.

But yesterday, but yesterday,
She stood beside our dusty way,
Outreaching for one moment's space
The key to Blessing's hiding-place.

With wistful meaning in her eyes,
With radiance veiled in dull disguise,
A moment paused, then turned and fled,
Bearing her message still unsaid.

And we? Our eyes were on the dust,
Still faring on as fare all must,
In the hot glare of mid-day sun,
Until the weary way be done.

So fast and far she sped and flew
Into the depths of ether blue;
And we, too late, make bitter cry,
"Come back, dear Opportunity!"

In vain. The fleet, unpausing wings
Stay not in their bright journeyings;
And sadly sweet as funeral bell,
The answer drops, "Farewell, farewell!"

*This poem closed one of the last letters written by Jennie Casseday, sent to a Christian Endeavor Society. It will have all the preciousness of last words for all who loved her.

THE EVOLUTION OF THE NATIONAL W. C. T. U. FLOWER MISSION.

BY FANNIE CASSEDAY DUNCAN.

Did you ever think how long nature takes to round her creations to perfection, or through what painful stages her ripened fruits have passed on their way to maturity? Is it then a wonder that spiritual results must so often come through much travail?

I want to tell you to-day of the birth of the World's Flower Mission whose chief has lately passed beyond our touch, at least as far as her mortal body is concerned. It happened on this wise:

June 9, 1840, was Jennie Casseday's birthday—the day when, a wee infant, she first took on the outward form of that mystery which we call life. My fancy often travels back to that day and that wee babe whose future no one then divined. Then I think of her early years, happy years so soon shadowed, and then of her shut-in life with pain for a constant companion. "Not much of a boon, such a life as that, either to mother or child," says Ignorance looking on. "Talk to me of the fatherhood of God," says hopeless Unbelief; "what good could possibly come of tying a happy young thing like that to a couch?"

I remember her as a little child. She was so round and ruddy and sturdy that her big brothers called her "Dutch." That was her family name until she was nearly grown—until, in fact, it seemed pitiless to call her so. When she was well in her teens, her maiden aunt called her "Miss Gadabout," because she so loved to go into the world among her own kind and be a glad partaker in all the good times going. One thing I especially remember was her beautiful feet. They were exceptionally beautiful and she was very proud of them and loved to dress them beautifully. I often think of those feet—those plump, snowy, blue-veined feet that trod the earth so airily; those poor, twisted, patient feet that lay quite quiet on the bed for so many years, aching with pain; those, thin, homely feet, dumbly crossed in rest; aye, those transfigured feet floating upward to the golden streets of the beautiful city.

I knew her as a young woman, when she went in and out at her own sweet will; a trifle haughty she was in those days, perhaps, for she was young and life had then few reserves from her, but with a great fund of sympathy and kindliness deep down in her nature. Then came the sculptor with his mallet and chisel, sent to hew out of this fine marble the image of God, an image that was to be so noble and heroic, so clear cut and fine, so ideally beautiful, that it should stand as a model to all generations for all time. The sculptor's name was Pain. She told me long years after that he really was an angel, but that she did not then recognize him as such. Into a little corner of a little room he thrust her, and darkened the windows, and the work of transformation began.

Then came another period in this child's life, a period of adjusting. Such are critical periods. We never come out of them the same beings. When they are passed, something has gone out of us, or something has come into us, that has made us over again, or has made a new us. After a time even our faces have changed. A new light has come into them, or an old light has gone out of them; bitterness and cynicism have settled over them; or age and care have withered them; or sweetness and light have transfigured them so that they are like faces of angels. "The test of greatness," says one, "lies not so much with those after all who, being highly endowed, accomplish great things, as with those who still retain their greatness under narrowing conditions and influences." I think Jennie Casseday, honored, wept after, sung in two continents, was not greater, not so great perhaps, as Jennie Casseday under the anvil, shut out, shut in, in those years of pauseless torture and slow transformation. I was with her through that long dark night during which none of us could understand, and I was witness to the heroism with which she fought, for us as well as for herself, the battle with doubt and despair and black unbelief. Many and many a time arguments failed her own soul as well as mine, and then she would lay back exhausted with the double battle, the spiritual and the physical, and say only these words: "What I do Thou knowest not now, but Thou shalt know hereafter." Sometimes she would fortify us both thus: "If I knew, Fan, as well as God does, and as far, either I would be God, or He would not be God. Take my hand in yours and let us trust Him wholly." And thus the little grain rooted itself in the firm soil and prepared us both to withstand many a shock of the tempest.

A very favorite hymn of hers in those days was this, written by Cowper in the twilight of a departing reason.

"God moves in a mysterious way
His wonders to perform."

And especially the verse

"Deep in unfathomable mines
Of never failing skill,
He treasures up His vast designs
And works His sovereign will."

And so, trusting Jesus with all her might, she held on with a determination that knew no faltering, praying constantly and with every fibre of her soul, until out of that darkened chamber of travail there came a new being.

. . . . . .

Then, thus, in "the mysterious way" of God, she was ready to begin her life work for she had been "anointed with His odorous oil" to understand the mystery of sorrow and was thenceforth ready to teach. But how could she teach? She, "a little figure almost pitiful in its helplessness," and tied to a single corner in a room. What could she do to help in this great, busy, bustling world that rolls like a modern juggernaut, crushing out human lives with utter indifference? I will tell you what she did do, and there is no one of you that may not do the same. She did the thing that lay nearest her hand; she did it thoroughly and waited for the next thing to come along. In the first place she forgot self or put it away out of sight so that her room was a center of brightness where one and another grew to love to come. More and more she became an inspiration in the household. She rose above pain and weariness and mental depression, and gave to each one who came a ray of brightness, suiting, with fine insight, the gift to the need—to one a smile, because smiles were fitting; to one a tear, because tears were uppermost; for one an uplift, because burdens were weighty and few understood. And so, little by little, people grew to come to her and to go and tell others to come, Andrew telling Simon, and Simon, Philip, and Philip, Nathaniel, until the multitude thronged. But those who came were mostly of her own easy class and her heart yearned after the poor, whose burdens she knew were heavier, more real, more oppressive. Morning and evening she prayed for them, but that was all she could do—all, I think that she at first thought of being able to do.

And now, by these connecting stages we come to

THE STORY OF THE FLOWER MISSION.

Every week from its initial number, the New York Observer had come to our house, and Jennie Casseday loved to read it. Late in 1869 that paper was full of the story of a young girl, a Boston girl teaching at Roxbury, who, as she passed to and fro, noticed the great waste of flowers and fruits in the gardens of the rich, especially in summer when the owners were absent, and at a time of year when the sight of anything green and fresh, or the perfume of any flower that had survived the heat and dust, is so welcome to the inhabitants of a crowded city. This sweet young teacher fell into the habit, when she went home to Boston every Saturday, of carrying from Roxbury a basket of flowers and giving them out to the ragged children whom she met, and who always begged for "just one flower, lady, please." It was a simple act, simply done. Any one might do it.

This story fired the great heart of Jennie Casseday as she lay there shut out from flowers and freedom. She loved flowers with a love that never failed. Day and night she thought of the flower teacher of Roxbury; day and night, in thought, she followed her footsteps and the feet of those ragged waifs, and each day the mission seemed to her more beautiful, more useful, more feasible. She saw in it the quality that is twice blessed, blessing him who gives and him who takes. She saw that this was a form of ministry into which young ladies might enter—to their own everlasting good. She foresaw how it could and would penetrate every form of sorrow and poverty and uncleanness.

Thinking much of the Boston teacher as she went to and from Roxbury, the longing in Jennie Casseday's soul grew more and more intense to see such a work established in her own city, and she began to plan for it. When once the case was presented, there were found ready helpers, for the time was ripe in other hearts, too. Mrs. Wm. Warner came to the front as one specially gifted for this work, and together these brave and loving souls organized the Louisville Flower Mission, out of which has sprung the great body of flower missions that now girdle the world.

HOW THIS FLOWER MISSION BECAME A PART OF THE W. C. T. U.

I will tell in Jennie Casseday's own words. They are part of a letter written by her at the request of Rev. John Collins, secretary of the Society of Christian workers, this letter to be read at the national convention of that body in 1889. There was large demand for the letter and it was afterwards printed in a booklet.

"It was four years after the Louisville Flower Mission was organized that Miss Frances E. Willard was in Louisville attending a National Convention of the W. C. T. U. She was my sister's guest, and during the latter part of her visit—the very last morning—she asked me to tell her of my work. With that quick perception and ready insight for which she is so remarkable, she saw how it might be grafted on to temperance work and bring forth rich harvests of good. She rose to her feet exclaiming, 'I have an inspiration—it is to establish a Flower Mission Department of the W. C. T. U., and put you at its head as National Superintendent.' The very idea appalled me, and I felt that it was impossible for me either to take on more work, or to think of undertaking, from my little corner, a National Flower Mission. But it was another unfolding of 'God's thoughts,' and in a few months He opened my eyes to see His will for me. It has grown to large proportions as does all work that has God's call behind it. I have long since been taught of God to know that the very weakness which I believed would prevent is my greatest strength. 'And He said unto me, my grace is sufficient for thee; for my strength is made perfect in weakness, most gladly, therefore, will I rather glory in my infirmities, that the power of Christ may rest upon me.'"

This closes my tale of the Flower Mission, from its beginnings, away back in its formative stages in the life of a young woman. She herself said, in late years, that each sorrow and denial that had come to her was a link in a chain that brought her nearer to Christ and in more intimate communion with the suffering of mankind; and she rejoiced in each because it was this.

OUR FLOWER SAINT.

BY FRANCES E. WILLARD.

So the unresting year has swung us round again to the soft season of the flowers.

"Like the swell of some sweet tune
Morning rises into noon,
May glides onward into June."

How much has come and gone since last we celebrated the earthly birth of her who was more fair of heart than any flower she loved! How glad I am that her beautiful soul has been

Born into beauty and born into bloom;
Victor immortal o'er terror and tomb!

For the only changeless thing is change; "we are pilgrims and sojourners as all our fathers were;" the hymn that suits our circumstances best is "I can tarry, I can tarry but a night." Day is at hand and our chastened Evangel of Flowers has but passed onward into the heavenly sunshine. She is

"Forever and forever
With those just souls and true;
And what is Life that we should moan,
Why make so much ado?"

I never think except with "pure delight" of that great life so gently lived, that strong and saintly soul who found so heavenly sweet "the uses of adversity." To her all life was one to be lived out, in whatsoever world, with fervent faith, with restful reverence and loyal love toward God and man. She preached sermons more eloquent, from that little white bed, than bishops do in great cathe drals. Her psalm of praise was tuneful beyond the notes of orchestra or organ. Blessed "little sister," sweet "household saint" with smiling face and tender tones, you stand there beckoning with a lily in the little hand that used to ache as you wrote letters to us all dated "sick-bed."

The days drive on; the battle deepens; we have our work to do, but shadows as they lengthen point toward the growing brightness of the skies. "We follow that way" and it will not be long till we shall see how "fair against the sunset stands the figure with its beckoning hands" of our beloved and sacred queen of human flowers.

HER OWN PLEA FOR THE FLOWER MISSION.

Jennie Casseday once said to a doubting Thomas, who could see in a flower mission only a sickly sentimentality:

"I am one of those who believe that the ministry of flowers may lead to material improvement, to a higher civilization; that a bright, potted flower may demand of the most degraded woman a cleaner pane; the cleaner pane reveal the dirty surroundings, and so on to the use of the broom and the scrub-brush, until a new sanitation takes place and from this grow happier homes and improved lives. But after all, if permanent good is to be done, it must reach the inner life, the soul, and that can be accomplished only by personal consecration. The flowers are to be used merely as a wedge, the gift of them implies a compliment which the recipient is quick to recognize; and that creates self-respect which is the first step toward betterment.

"Think of one lying shut in with pain, surrounded with all the ill conditions of poverty, nothing to brighten or alleviate lonely hours, and of what it would be to have a tender-hearted woman or a bright-faced young girl come with a little knot of 'something white, something bright, and something sweet,' (my rule for making bouquets), and lay it on the pillow or in the hand. Imagine a hospital, with row after row of beds filled with sufferers. Fancy the flower-missioners entering the ward with baskets of heliotrope, rose-buds, sweet violets, lilies, many-hued and fragrant, fresh and cool with the dew of the day. See how eagerly pale hands are outstretched to receive them, with what glad delight they clutch the beautiful blossoms and press them to their faces, as if to drink in the message they carry.

"'They that can wander at will
Where the works of the Lord are revealed,
Little guess what joy can be found
From a cowslip out of the field.
Flowers, to these spirits imprisoned,
Are all they can know of the spring;
They brighten and sweeten the ward
Like the waft of an angel's wing.'

"Can you not see now where their ministry begins? Think, again, of the jail and penitentiary prisoners, forsaken, disgraced, disowned—what, dear, doubting Thomas, can you fancy must it be to these poor creatures, by the outer world neglected, to have gentle women come to them with flowers, and with words like Christ's? The subtle fragrance of the flowers brings to them tender associations of the old home garden, of mother and grandmother and days agone when all the world was fair to their innocent youth. Be sure the heart, in this softened mood, is ready to receive the words of God which are printed on text-cards attached to every bouquet or single flower. We do, and trust to the Holy Ghost to carry the message to the heart. Doing is our part."

THE JENNIE CASSEDAY FREE INFIRMARY FOR WOMEN.

BY JENNIE C. BENEDICT.

On the 17th of March, 1891, at a meeting of King's Daughters, held in the Warren Memorial church, the initial steps were taken toward founding a hospital for women, which should fittingly perpetuate the memory of Miss Jennie Casseday, to whom the city of Louisville owes so many noble charities and the King's Daughters their existence.

Nothing can better express Miss Casseday's appreciation of this movement than her letter written at that time:

"No words have ever been coined that half express my feeling for such an honor and token of your love for me. It is the most beautiful thing that has ever come into my life. I want to come to you to-day with an expression of the faith that is in me, concerning the infirmary. Because I believe that you are called of God to this work, and that the power of God is behind the call, 'I am persuaded that He is able to keep that which you have committed to Him against that day.' I pray more and more for the growth of your work, and the speedy accomplishment of your designs. 'In quietness and confidence shall be your strength,'—the quietness linked with no anxiety, no fear, no unbelief, but with uplifted faith, steadily marching on to the goal—

"'Remember that Omnipotence
Hath servants everywhere,
His methods are sublime;
His ways profoundly kind.
God never is before His time
And never is behind.'

It does look to me as if this is His time, and I believe with my whole heart in your success. I know 'our God will supply all your need, according to His riches in glory in Christ Jesus.' Just think of that 'according to,' and of 'His riches in glory.' There is no uncertain ring to that promise, for it is not probably will supply, or even may supply, but an absolute 'shall supply.' What? 'All your needs.' 'The earth is the Lord's and the fullness thereof . . . . the gold and silver are mine, saith the Lord, and the lot is cast into the lap, but the whole disposing thereof is of the Lord;' for—'Your Heavenly Father knoweth what things ye have need of before you ask Him.'"

With such words courage strengthened and faith increased, too much cannot be said of the earnest, faithful work done by the King's Daughters, undismayed by the many discouragements on every hand, until God crowned efforts with success. In less than a year thirty-five hundred dollars had been raised and the first payment made on the property, situated on Sixth street, a lot, 140x200 feet, on which stood a beautiful three-story double house, surrounded by large trees. Carpenters, painters, plumbers and paper-hangers soon made it one of the most complete and admirably adapted infirmaries in the South.

On the 12th of April, 1892, the Jennie Casseday Free Infirmary was formally dedicated and opened, fully equipped for the work it was destined to perform, with seven private rooms, beautifully furnished, and eight beds in the free department, where poor suffering women may have every attention free of charge. The best surgical skill and careful nursing, with well prepared food and comfortable clothing have been given to the patients in this department, and all have gone home to work with renewed strength and energy, and hearts full of appreciation and gratitude.

The Master has called Jennie Casseday to higher service in the King's palace, and her life and labors shall be perpetuated in this work she so loved and of which she was the guide and inspiration.

During the past year, ninety-eight patients have been admitted, thirty of these to the free department. As there is no endowment fund, the income from the private department has supported the institution entirely. There is a small debt on the property, and the building is not nearly large enough to supply the demand for room.

As soon as the necessary funds can be raised, comfortable rooms will be added for nurses and more rooms for free patients. The institution is too crowded now to afford a much needed reception room or a comfortable dining-room. The severe weather during last winter fully demonstrated the necessity for a furnace. The 9th of June brings to the minds and hearts of thousands of the readers of THE UNION SIGNAL, the one whose birth it registers, and whose beautiful life has been a benediction to so many. Will those who knew and loved Jennie Casseday and who feel an interest in perpetuating her memory, send a love token (however small) on the 9th of June, to the Jennie Casseday Free Infirmary for women, 1912 Sixth street, Louisville, Ky.?

HILLSBORO CRUSADE SKETCHES.

IV.

BY ELIZA J. THOMPSON.

December 27, 1873, we find recorded on the minutes of our "Woman's Temperance League," the first desire expressed on the part of a liquor dealer of Hillsboro "to quit the business." In a few days after that, two others manifested a willingness to be relieved! The ways and means were under consideration and well chosen committees were quietly entrusted with the cases.

In the meantime, the morning prayer-meetings were continued with increasing interest. The daily visitations of the band, now numbering over eighty, to "all places where liquors were sold and drank on the premises" were faithfully kept up. The mass-meeting in Music Hall, or in the M. E. church, several evenings of each week, were always well attended and of great interest to the public, as reports were made there by the zealous workers of incidents "along the weary way," and the speeches, prayers, and songs were of that enthusiastic order peculiar to the times.

January 3:—The morning prayer service was of a most impressive nature, and many reports from committees gave promise of good things to come. The committee which had been appointed to present the "Physician's Pledge"—Mrs. McSurely, Mrs. Thomas Barry, Mrs. Jessie K. Pickering, Mrs. James Patterson, Mrs. Wm. Barry, reported as follows: "Found the county medical convention in session, were presented to the convention and politely received." The object of the visit being made known, the physicians there present signed an approved physician's pledge to the number of seventeen of Highland county's most distinguished and useful physicians.

This was received with thanksgiving as those intrusted with the care of families know too well the fearful risk of intoxicating prescriptions from the family doctor, not to appreciate the value of such a victory.

When the hour for business had passed, and the usual visiting ordeal was in order, the ladies were most agreeably surprised by the announcement that they would be expected to call upon Col. Cook to express their thanks that he had closed the bar of the Ellicott House. After singing with an unusual amount of zeal, "Praise God, from whom all blessings flow," the procession formed, and at once proceeded to make this visit. The ladies were politely met by the genial landlord and his kindly wife, and ushered into the spacious parlor of this old and popular hotel.

During the conversation that followed, the Colonel complained that the temperance public had not stood by him, when, on a former occasion he had closed his bar, but patronized hotels where liquors were sold.

The leader of the band feeling the embarrassment of the situation, proposed that all should unite in prayer that the temperance people "stand by their colors" and with heart and soul sustain their brother in his effort for the right. It was most natural that an earnest petition should be added for the proprietor, who was bravely facing the losses, as well as the crosses of the situation. Blessings from full hearts were invoked upon the Colonel, his wife and his house, and, as that honest prayer was ended, all joined in a sweet song of thanksgiving and parted with the most cordial good feeling.

The Visiting Committee proceeded to call upon the other hotels that morning to secure, if possible, the consent of the proprietors to close their bars on the approaching Stock Sale-day, saloons were also appealed to upon the subject; some consented, others promised to be very careful in their sales! Our secretary furnished the following facts, after the Sale-day was over:

"The result of the day's work was most satisfactory; there was less drunkenness on the streets than had ever before been known on a Stock Sale-day, indeed, almost none at all!"

While all this was going on in Hillsboro, more pronounced victories were being achieved at Washington Courthouse, for news came to us about this time, January 3, that two of their saloon-keepers had made public and unconditional surrenders, and had confirmed their honesty by filling the gutters of that favored city with a mingled oblation of beer, ale, wine and whisky, and "Mother Earth" saved her sons many poisonous draughts by opening her own mouth for its engulfment. This report from Washington Courthouse filled the hearts of the patient toilers of the Hillsboro League with thanksgiving and renewed courage in the conflict, although circumstances by which the work in this community was surrounded, made it a regular siege—and further on a well-developed legal battle. Messages of congratulation were sent to our friends at Washington Courthouse and an invitation was moved and carried that some of them come over to Hillsboro while their laurels were fresh upon them, and give us the benefit of their victories.

Some matters of business were looked into pertaining to the charitable feature of our work; then it was determined to appoint a committee of three ladies to report to Mr. Dunn that the Woman's Temperance Association could not conscientiously agree to his last proposed "druggist's pledge," but instructions were given to this committee of Christian ladies, Mrs. Judge Evans, Mrs. Pickering and Mrs. Nelson, to convey to Mr. Dunn the good wishes of our society, with the sincere desire that he would agree to the uniform druggist pledge and thus remove one of the greatest stumbling blocks out of the way of our success in this community.

The band after singing most feelingly the hymn so expressive of their convictions that morning,

"Must Jesus bear the cross alone,
And all the world go free?
No, there's a cross for every one,
And there's a cross for me,"—

took up with renewed courage the sacred cross and proceeded to their work of visitation.

Passing along Main street, west of High, on that cold, snowy January morning, a sign, hitherto unobserved by the band appeared in view; it read: The Lava Bed; it was in the basement of a large business house; the proprietor's name was Joseph Lance. It only required a moment's reflection, and led by the regular officers of the band they descended the steep, snowy, stone steps to hold a prayer and song service on the saw-dust floor of that low down saloon! It was literally a low-down saloon, but the women recognized the fact that Joe Lance had a soul to be saved from the woe of making his neighbor drunken; so they felt constrained to give him their prayers and songs, their Scripture readings and their persuasion just as they had given them to those nearer the light of heaven, who were engaged in the same business. The poor fellow was taken by surprise, but was kind and respectful, and after the ladies left, had "strange thoughts" as he afterwards confessed.

Reports were now coming in from many quarters of the wonderful success of this "woman's movement" as it was called, and many who had been faithless were now saying: "It must be of God!" Messages from our association to Wilmington, New Vienna, Greenfield, and other places, were sent, and from them to us in return, until it really did seem that a chain of love for God and humanity was about to bind the hearts of Christians together for royal service for the Master! And although after twenty years we may well sing:

"It may not be my way,
It may not be thy way,
And yet, in His own way,
The Lord will provide"—

to-day witnesses:

"Bands of ribbon white,
Around the world!"

COLUMBIAN CRUMBS.

BY B. V. CUSHMAN, M. D.

As might be expected, one of the most remarkable productions presented to the Woman's Congress was from the ripe brain of Elizabeth Cady Stanton, her topic

THE ANTAGONISM OF SEX.

Mrs. Stanton accepts as authentic—and declares herself justified by careful historians in doing so—the accounts of the Matriarchate which have generally been regarded as myth. Standing at her point of view we look back into the dawn of the age and dare to believe that our eyes behold actual conditions rather than inverted mirage. We see woman reigning supreme, deciding not only the limitations of her own rights and duties but of man's also, and treating him with all the tyranny that the customs of the times warrant. This period lasted through many centuries, being traceable in the history of Aryans, Germans and Persians. In the fresh air and freedom of those times women were the embodiment of physical and mental vigor, while their affections were fed at the fountains of motherhood. Along the pathway of natural development, the supreme civilizing power has been centered in the wisdom and tenderness of motherhood. All the earliest attempts at civilization grew out of its necessities. The first homes were in the caves of the earth where women sought shelter for themselves and their children. Afterward they felled trees and piled them into huts in the sunshine. Woman applied her strength to agriculture, raising fruit and grains for her children, from whom she learned the use of milk, hence domesticated the cow and goat.

What was man doing all this time? Taking care of himself, a calling he has always industriously followed! He fought for food with his fellows and with wild beasts. Mrs. Stanton says: "He simply invented weapons of slaughter and warfare, while woman, handicapped as she seemed to be by child-bearing, became on this very account the main factor in human progress. The man's contributions at this early period are nothing as compared with the woman's. Her varied responsibilities as mother, bread-winner, protector, defender of helpless children raised her to intellectual and inventive supremacy, and made her the teacher and ruler of men."

Now I am sure you are "dying to ask," as I was, how did the world ever get so turned upside down as we find it in these later years? Well, in time as women added to the comfort and attractiveness of home, the better feelings of warrior and hunter were stirred; the mother naturally died before the son, the old home was broken up, and man found himself weary of battle and chase, and without a home at the age when most he needs its tender ministries. (For philosophy of this "yearning" consult the works of Samantha Allen.) He decided that he had better get a foothold in some family beside the one in which he was born. There sprang up in the male breast an unrest which is now correlated by the desire agitating the feminine bosom as woman contemplates the triumphs in legislative halls from which she is debarred. Men saw the good times women had and decided that they ought to be "in it." They wooed and of course won. Men and women exchanged vows of constancy and exclusiveness. The result was monogamic marriage. With the permanency of sex relations, the acquisition of property, and especially the possession of territory, it became necessary for groups of families to organize in defense of their property, and the male members of the community could best be spared. Little by little they encroached upon the domain of women until, at last, through many and protracted struggles they gained supremacy. Mrs. Stanton believes that the most dangerous and demoralizing, as well as the most bitter and invidious of influences tending to check human development has been this antagonism of the sexes. She believes it to be the "chief cause of the present chaotic condition of society. If the masculine and feminine elements are not evenly balanced we have just that disturbance in the world of thought that we should have in the material world, if it were possible to disturb the equilibrium of centripetal and centrifugal forces." Since each has known what it is to be sovereign and to be subject, both seem to be ready for the experiment of joint rule, and there is reason for believing that "as their interests are identical, their highest happiness is in their perfect union with each other, no longer rivals striving for supremacy, but mutual helpers to higher development, co-workers for a purer civilization."

This fine address closed with Wendell Phillips' prophecy: "The first glimpse we get of Saxonhood in history is that line of 'Tacitus in Germany' which reads, 'In all grave matters they consult their women.' Years hence, when robust Saxon sense has flung away Jewish superstition and eastern prejudice, some second Tacitus from the valley of the Mississippi will answer to him of the Seven Hills, 'In all grave questions we consult our women.'"

In direct line with the foregoing was the delightfully informal, but most instructive "talk" of Mrs. Helen M. Gardner in the rooms of the Committee of Science and Philosophy. This woman is "blooded" in every vein of her slender, finely built little body, being descended through her father from Oliver Cromwell, and through her mother from the Peels of England. Brain like hers is not grown in one lifetime. It is the product of generations of disciplined activity and adherence to right standards of thinking. Further she has the symmetrical development and balance resulting from years of conjugal happiness. I mention these facts not at all by way of personal glorification, but to give my reasons for counting her as capable of arriving at conclusions which may be accepted as authoritative, when she sets out upon a journey of investigation. Her topic was

SEX IN BRAIN.

She told us how she ran down Dr. Hammond's claim that in adults there are nineteen marks of difference between the male and female brain. She was acquainted with a prominent brain anatomist to whom she hied for facts. She asked him if any one had compared the brains of infants, suggesting that training might account for differences in the adult organ. To her surprise her friend knew nothing of these "marks" save by hearsay. They were not his specialty. Spitzka was the great authority in America: "He knows all about it and the rest of us take his word." She was again surprised that her friend declined to give her letters of introduction to Dr. Spitzka. He however introduced her to another brain anatomist. She passed from one to another until she had interviewed twenty of these anatomists, each telling her substantially the same thing, and each declining to introduce her to the famous Spitzka. Finally she determined to approach him alone and without credentials. She told him her experience. He insisted upon knowing what reason his confreres had given for not giving her letters of introduction. At last she told him they had said he was intolerant of ignorance; "and I am just as ignorant as I can be—and they are too," the little woman said.

"That's it!" he roared. "They don't want me to find out how ignorant they are. I am intolerant of ignorance that pretends to know; but what do you want to ask me?" She offered the slip of paper upon which she had written her questions.

"Who wrote these questions?"

"I did."

"Come back to-morrow at —o'clock."

She went, and continued going for fourteen months; during that time she did her sex incalculable good by demonstrating the fallacy of Dr. Hammond's argument which had so disturbed school boards and regents of colleges who were considering whether to open the schools of learning to women on equal footing with men.

The great anatomist told her that the "marks" were mainly assumptions, that no man could tell the male from the female brain, by inspection alone, that the assumed points of difference did not necessarily indicate inferiority in the female, and that as a matter of fact no man living could locate sex peculiarities in the human brain. Dr. Spitzka acknowledged that great inequalities exist however in the treatment of the subject, inasmuch as the brain of a prominent woman has never been submitted to test. We are pitting the contents of Webster's mighty cranium against the brain of the female tramp whose body remains unclaimed in the charity hospital. Even then the average difference in weight between male and female brain is but one hundred grammes. Weight, however does not figure, as the difference between Gambetta and Cromwell, both statesmen, was nine hundred grammes. One of the things claimed by Dr. Hammond is that the specific gravity of the feminine brain is less. Dr. Spitzka thought that not a strong bulwark for him, as it is known that in old age and dementia the specific gravity of the brain increases. Mrs. Gardner attacked Dr. Hammond's position opposing co-education in the leading magazines of the day, and finally challenged him to debate in Chickering Hall, the case to be left with a jury of experts of whom he should choose five and she five. He did not accept, but his "opinion" which had threatened to extinguish educational lights for ambitious young women was lost in "innocuous desuetude," while girls catching college step with their brothers, went forward to laboratory and observatory in the safest and quickest march human progress has ever seen, for I take it that not all other agitations combined have done so much for womanhood and humanhood as the co-education of the sexes.

Chicago, Ill.

SOUTH AFRICA AND TEMPERANCE.

DEAR UNION SIGNAL:—There have been so many good times and busy times in this country of late months, and I have "been in them" to such an extent there has been no time to stop and tell about it. This morning, however, with the boxes all packed and the last things ready to go to Johannesberg, "the mightiest city in South Africa," I sit down in the vine-covered veranda of my kind hostess for a mental recapitulation of the days since last I wrote you.

The southwestern section of the Cape Colony was visited in December. Your correspondent passed over some most picturesque country, ascending what seemed to be an almost vertical plane, and again descending mountains by the most zig-zag course. The road was often built through solid walls of rock and across sandy plateaus.

The warm weather had set in, and even the varied and unusual scenery could not recompense for the weary hours of travel in the jolting post-carts; but the kindly welcome and hospitable treatment at the end of every stage more than made up for the troubles en route. The meetings were chiefly held in connection with the Good Templar lodges, and the most that could be expected was to get the leading temperance workers to see that the W. C. T. U. would be an absolute benefit to all faithful temperance effort in every community. This was almost invariably accomplished, so that constitutions and directions for forming W. C. T. unions were requested, and the matter left "in soak." That is the best way to do things here. The people are quite intelligent enough to organize unions when they see the good of them, but if there is anything they dislike it is to be hurried, to be obliged to think or to work rapidly. Well, some of the most thorough work is that done most deliberately and calmly. It is simply impossible to hold meetings in the Colony during January. Indeed, I should advise that no attempt be made in that direction till the close of February. Of course for a stationed worker that does not mean idleness at all, and we can even record one W. C. T. U. and two total abstinence societies for men and women organized within this month.

The first visit to Bluemfontein was made the last week of February and a Y. W. C. T. U. was organized; also held a drawing-room meeting at the home of the president, Mrs. Reitz, and made a public address in the Council Chamber. I then went on, leaving membership rolls and some literature in the hands of ladies who had signified a wish, resolving to return this month to the meeting of the Grand Lodge of I. O. G. T. of Central South Africa and secure their indorsement to our Petition.

Pretoria is the capital city of the "Zuid Afrekan Republick" and contains about seven thousand white inhabitants. Mrs. Gray has organized a W. C. T. U. which has taken up several departments of work, most important of which is the evangelistic, services being held at the prison and among the poor of the city. Several successful socials and entertainments have been given. There is a fine "boys' brigade" in existence, the members of which subscribe to the terms of the Loyal Temperance Legion triple pledge. Among the girls is a society called "The Ministering League," which seems to have been organized from the different churches, but specially for mission work. I addressed the young people of both bands and also the Band of Hope in connection with the Presbyterian church of which Mr. Gray is pastor.

The W. C. T. U. arrranged for four afternoons, one of which was a "welcome meeting." Then there was a Bible reading, a method meeting and a drawing-room meeting. I count that these will all bear fruit. Then I spoke eight evenings, presenting on three of them the great Petition. Two of them were open lodge meetings and the membership indorsed gladly the request thus coming from the W. W. C. T. U.

It is twenty-four hours from Pretoria to Bloemfontein, and leaving the former early on the morning of the 13th of March I found myself in company with the Grand Chief Templar and other delegates to this meeting and preferred my request to be received as a fraternal delegate. This was most graciously and promptly granted and I attended most of the sessions, having the advantage of being also "a member of the order." It is certainly favorable to the temperance sentiment of the Orange Free State that the chief executive, President Reitz, took the chair at the mass-meeting conducted by the Grand Lodge and thus signed the statement setting forth the fact that the audience rose almost unanimously to support the Petition of the W. W. C. T. U.

The union organized at Bloemfontein the following Saturday, makes the third in this little republic extending over an area of 41,500 square miles and containing not more than 70,000 white inhabitants. The "Transvaal," as it was first called because settled by Dutch Boers, who "trekked" over the "Vaal River" to escape British rule, has two chief cities Pretoria and Johannesberg, the latter containing a population of some twenty thousand. This republic is about the size of the British Isles but the population all told is only 800,000, more than ninety per cent of which are blacks.

It has come to me as an absolute necessity that a W. C. T. U. training school be founded from which workers may be able to teach in English, Dutch, French and Kaffir, who shall be sent out, pushing right on up from Cape Town to Egypt, following the trend of civilization the moment the door is open. We must have men and women for this work, men and women who believe in the "doing-something policy." And we must have tons of literature in all these languages turned out rapidly on the field, just soon as these missionaries and organizers find out what is adapted. This will evangelize South Africa. No half, intermittent efforts will answer.

Some of the people say: "Civilization is making the world worse." What sort of a civilization is this? The W. C. T. U. is working with the power of God to take away the disgrace of such civilization. What are you doing to help? Is this a time to tear down your barns to build greater, when millions of souls are perishing and Christian law-makers are in conspiracy with the greatest liquor traffic there is? We have laborers, or can secure them, but lack funds. When our Lord commanded that the poor have the gospel preached to them He did not exclude the rich. He meant to honor this rich man by using his money and so make him "partner in the riches of his grace." The poor we have with us. For Christ's sake, do this work.

It will be reasonable. Five thousand pounds, only twenty-thousand dollars out of all the wealth of the United States would give this work such an impetus that the few white population who are in sympathy with us could continue its support. Two rescue homes could be founded and this training school supported in connection with a printing office, while a general secretary could be kept in the field. One man or woman could do this and be richer for the outlay.

Yours for the speedy coming of His kingdom,

ALICE R. PALMER.

Bloemfontein, O. F. S.

[P. S.—A letter has just been received from Miss Palmer, stating that she was holding a joint W. C. T. U. convention of the South African Republic and Orange Free State. ORIGIN OF THE PEACE DEPARTMENT IN THE W. C. T. U.

DEAR UNION SIGNAL:—To correct a misunderstanding as to the origin of the peace department of the W. C. T. U. the following history is given.

At the Ohio Woman's Christian Temperance Union held in Kenton, O., June 10, 11 and 12, 1885, the subject of peace was added to the list of departments of work, as will be seen, page 54 of the minutes of that convention, Mrs. M. A. Woodbridge being president at that time.

Hannah W. Blackburn, of Zanesfield, O., at whose request the department was created, was appointed superintendent; her work was to place the cause before the unions of the state—to enlist an interest in the department which shall aid in hastening the day when there may be established a Congress of Nations and Courts of Arbitration, whereby international and national differences may be adjusted without resort to arms.

After carrying on the work for two years the superintendent by resolution asked the state union, which was held at Springfield, O., October 4-7, 1887, to request the ensuing National Convention to add a peace department to its lines of work. This was granted and the president, Mrs. H. L. Monroe, was commissioned to bear the request to the National Convention.

The National president, Frances E. Willard, was present when the resolution relative to the peace department was read and adopted in the convention of the Ohio W. C. T. U. Therefore when preparing her annual address she gave the kindest indorsement to the cause in the following words:

A PEACE DEPARTMENT.

"Twenty-five years ago, when Mr. Alfred Love first advocated the principles of arbitration, it was said: 'As well might one attempt to drive a span of fiery horses with white ribbons.' But happily since then white ribbons have ceased to be the emblems of weakness.

"The W. C. T. U. of Ohio, foremost in all good works, has already arranged for a new department in the interest of peace. This is strictly germane to our work, for nothing increases intemperance like war, and nothing tends toward war like intemperance. "Rebellious liquor in the blood" poisons its peace. Nothing would to-day set back the temperance cause like the outbreak of a war. Women mold temperament from the dawn of childish life, and, more than all others, determine the proclivities of boyhood. Women must organize for peace ere the nations will learn war no more. Here is the place to lay broad and firm foundations for this Christlike work. I have invited that good man, William Jones, of London, Secretary of the British Peace Society, to help us in this undertaking, which I know, from conference with our women, will meet their wishes. Mr. Jones is in America with the Parliamentary Peace Commission, that brings a memorial to our government asking for a permanent arbitration treaty between England and America, as an example to all nations of the Christian method for the settlement of differences. Happy are we who see these days of gentleness begin to dawn, and who may ourselves, in steady and practical fashion, help on the time when the Prince of Peace shall reign in government and the flags of war

"———shall all be furled
In the Parliament of Man.
The Federation of the World."

The time for the prosecution of the business of the National Convention was necessarily so fully occupied that when William Jones was present, only a few moments could be allotted him to present the cause of peace. But the work had been so well planned by Hannah W. Blackburn and other members of the Ohio W. C. T. U., that when Mrs. H. L. Monroe presented the request to the executive committee for a peace department, it was readily granted, and on November 22, 1887, a department was created by the National W. C. T. U., at Nashville, Tenn., called "The Department of Peace and Arbitration." Hannah J. Bailey, of Winthrop Centre, Me., was elected superintendent and has nobly carried on the work of the department ever since. In 1889 she was appointed superintendent of the "World's W. C. T. U. Department of Peace and Arbitration"—which was also created at the request of the superintendent of the Peace department of the Crusade State.

In this movement, the women reformers of the different nations of the world are uniting in a protest against all war and strife and their attendant evils; and are promulgating those principles which promote that peace and purity of which the white ribbon is a symbol. It is designed to bring the women of the whole world "together into a universal sisterhood, and so help to prepare the way for that federation of all nations and all peoples, of which the philanthropist dreams and toward which he is working."

BY MATILDA B. CARSE.

We thy people and the sheep of thy pasture will give thee thanks forever; we will show forth praise to all generations.—Psalm 79: 13.

This column frequently records the gifts of those who report to us in three figures—and we love these generous souls for their deeds of love. But this time the mites that gather pennywise shall tell their sweet, pathetic story, and we have the Word for it that these have "cast in more than they all."

Nothing is sweeter in the history of the Temple than the remembrance and work of dear little children. When their gifts come tears fill my eyes as I am sure is the case of those who read here of what they do. A tiny "birth announcement" card comes from Ethel Stout, the stirring little editor of the Midget who has sent so many dollars to the Temple. The card says: "Stewart Merlin . . . born Good Friday, 1893." Dear little "heir to the kingdom," you are welcome in this great spinning world, and I prophesy that you have not come into it to "wail," since your birthday is the day of our great redemption. A young mother, Mrs. Fred Tyrrell, Chicago, who has been lately blessed with the gift of her first, sweet babe, acknowledges it in the following beautiful words: "I want to send to the Temple, through you, a little thank-offering gift. I wish it were as large as my gratitude for the new joy that has come to me." Mrs. J. Beatson, Rockford, Ill., sends $15 on a personal pledge of one hundred dollars.

The Pierpont South Dakota L. T. L. sends $11.43 as the contents of its mite-boxes; the three members giving the largest amounts are Esther and Chester Lovell and Sadie Roberts, busy little workers who know how to conjure pennies out of anybody's pocket however tightly buttoned up. Mrs. Lewis Tyler, of Birk Creek, Idaho, forwards $8.80; of this sum $6.20 was "gathered with the assistance of her children, by faith and perseverance in the Temple plan, from comers and goers in a country place." The L. T. L. of Idaho Falls sends the balance, $2.60, and both amounts are to be applied on a $100 tablet for the L. T. L. of Idaho. Miss E. E. Cunningham, of New York City, sends $5.75 from her mite-box which was partly filled by the work of her tiny niece and nephew, Gladys and Wallace Erskine, loyal little temperance people who love to gather the pennies for "the grand signal-light which is destined to do so much good in our land and every other." Much of the contents was dropped in as fines by a friend who fined herself for every mistake she made, which is a good example for everybody to follow. How rich we would grow—on the days we follow our own wills and plans instead of taking hold of Christ's safe hand! Such a plan might make sweeter, finer women out of any of us. From Columbia, La., comes $9.30, proceeds of the L. T. L. mite-boxes. Of this amount little H. Wayne Blanks, whose mother is a most stirring W. C. T. U. worker, sends $3.65 and wants his pictures of our leaders. A dear little girl of Grandin, N. Dak., had two teeth pulled for which bravery she was given twenty-five cents. Hearing the story of the Temple she offered all for the mite-box which Mrs. Jessie Swartwood sends with $3.65 in it. Harter and Mary Walter, of Crawfordsville, Ind., send a full mite-box, $3.65—blessed babes, eight and three years of age.

Three generations are represented in the $3.65 of the mite-box sent by Mrs. S. F. Crawford. She says: "One dollar is from my mother, Mary Clayton, who is seventy-two years old, and will never see the Temple, for she is blind and an invalid; the balance is from my daughter and myself." Blessed household, with one heart and mind! May our Father more than make up in spiritual vision to the aged saint for her great loss. Mrs. S. A. Rathburn, of Northeast, Tennessee, sends the contents of her mite-box, $3.65. This dear soul is in her eightieth year, the oldest member of her union, and every dollar is given by self-sacrifice. This amount comes with the words: "'Blessed are ye when men shall revile you and shall say all manner of evil against you falsely for my sake.' What wonderful experiences come into our lives, and how much stronger we are made by them. in this work our Father has given us." Mrs. M. J. Maynard, of Tullahoma, Tenn., sends $3.65 from her mite-box saying, "I want to tell you I have not lost my faith in you. I believe God will keep you in His strong power. I would rather see the Temple than the Exposition, and long to attend the meetings in Willard Hall. I am sixty-two years old and for five years have helped my son in his store. I keep my mite-box there and only one drummer I have ever asked has refused to drop something in it. I recently asked a gentleman for a contribution. When I told him the Temple story he said: 'Oh, if there is a woman at the head of it, I'll give you something, for she won't be squandering the money.'" A saintly sister of Chicago, who will not permit the use of her name, sends $2, saying: "Can't you cluster together the few remaining Crusaders, that we may so look into each others' faces? I have wondered you do not form a Crusaders' Band. God gave you faith to believe 'things are accomplished when well begun,' and so our Temple has arisen 'a crystallized answer to prayer.' 'Sing ye to the Lord for he hath triumphed gloriously.'"

A two-cent stamp sent to Mrs. Matilda B. Carse, the Temple, Chicago, will secure a mite-box. Remember, any one placing in the box $2.50 from May 1, 1893, to May 1, 1894, will receive the lovely Columbian souvenir made of aluminum, with a cut of the Temple on one side and on the reverse the face of Miss Willard and the founder of the Temple, with suitable inscriptions. All money orders should be made out in the name of the treasurer, William D. Preston, and sent to our financial secretary, Miss Sara Johnson, The Temple, Chicago, Ill.

FLOWER-BEDS.

BY ADALINE HOHF BEERY.

CLOD after clod I turned up with my spade,
And every one a burrow
black and damp,
Of wriggling earth worms,
squirming in the sun,
And twisting downwards toward the dark again.
I put some brown, hard seeds in those same
clods,
And said, "Be still, until the morrow break."
'Twas dawn, and day, and dusk; 'twas dawn again,
And sheaves of warm May light lay on the soil;
And there were quiet whispers 'mong the seeds:
"Let's up and take a survey by the sun;
This blanket's most too warm to stay in bed."
And presently there was a noiseless stir,
And soon a dozen dots of delicate green
Broidered the plain, black bed. They climbed and spread,
And, like a maiden just from childhood stept,
Began to blush, like virgin snowdrifts brushed
With rosy dawn, and hid all sign of mold.
All summer long they nodded toward the road,
And shook their fragrance out, and many a foot
Would linger at the paling, to absorb
A share of beautiful blessing from my flowers.

Some men but burrow in the dens of self;
From black design hatch blacker progeny,
And all their thrift for sensuous ends but leaves
The earth a planet sunless, bare and dead.
But some—my soul springs up to wing the thought—
Some draw from soil of circumstance and time,
The elements of life, and strength, and grace,
That top their manhood with a coronet
Of sweet-breathed blooms, that win all lookers-on
To reverent worship of their beauty, caught
From upper skies where August Goodness sits
In August loveliness. So bloomed a soul
Close-ranked with us till yesterday—a clear,
White lily, of a rarer strain than most
Who grow in corner-beds—now growing on,
More white, more pure, on God's own river-banks.
How much we joy in blossoms! and the earth
Might be a rose-field everywhere, if—if
We'd make it so. Like her that went away,
Do you, my comrade, steadily bloom, though tried?

HINTS FOR MOTHERS.

BY HANNA A. FOSTER.

A large proportion of white-ribboners employ neither nurses nor domestics; they do their own housework and care for their families, in many instances assisting in their support. Some of our very best workers are found in this class—women who never stop to rest. But they are wearing out! He who said, "Let nothing be lost" cannot be pleased with the reckless expenditure of vital forces which, if judiciously husbanded and directed, would accomplish more and better for God and humanity.

April movings and house-cleanings are happily over, but the good housewife who neither works on a salary nor takes a vacation is still on duty, for settling the home and keeping it in order are peculiar to no season. Every available minute is needed in planning, making up, and making over summer suits for the children who, these bright, breezy days, are running wild with fun and frolic, and can be kept indoors hardly long enough to eat and sleep. As the light wind which stirs the lilac branches floats through the open window and fans her flushed cheeks, she feels an almost irresistible longing to get out into the enchanted realm of sunshine, song and beauty, but she can only follow the children into the porch, and linger long enough to readjust Paul's disabled elastic, and tie a dainty muffler round Susie's neck despite the protestations of the little miss that she is quite "roasted."

With an indescribable feeling of discouragement which she attributes to the "spring weather" she reënters the sitting-room. How duties of all sorts crowd to the front, each clamorous for immediate attention! No wonder the poor, bewildered woman drops into the nearest rocker with the exclamation, "Really, I do not know what to do first!" If she is a wise wife and mother she ought to know that her first duty is to herself. If overworked, she should rest, however much in the home remains undone. Better let the scrubbing, sweeping and dusting go, the making and mending bide their time; better have a "picked-up" dinner, or no dinner at all, than to make further drafts upon her already wasted resources of brain, nerve and muscle.

For her children's sake she cannot afford the dispiriting conditions of monotonous service without frequent rest and invigoration for mind and body. If she desires for them symmetrical development, she must be, in their eyes, the embodiment of loveliness, strength, goodness and wisdom; and such she cannot be if she weakly settles to the low plane of self-abnegation.

No bright boy loves and respects his mother more because she grows nervous and prematurely old over the kitchen stove, preparing table dainties to pamper his appetite and ruin his health; and no intelligent girl is more devotedly attached to her mother because she becomes round shouldered and wrinkled at the sewing machine—endlessly stitching, tucking, puffing and ruffling her clothing. Children weigh and measure motives and character with wonderful accuracy and happy, indeed, is she whom they call "blessed."

All honor to the woman, no matter how humble her home or unfavorable her surroundings, who believes that for her children the highest good is attainable—who creates for them grand ideals, and is herself their inspiration to climb.

THE LOCAL UNION.

BY MRS. FRANCES SEABURY.

"More microscope and less telescope" seems to be the general cry. Let us focus attention and fostering care upon the local union. We propose to do this the coming year, and to begin by a department in THE UNION SIGNAL devoted to a careful study of the hub of that great wheel whose rim is now no less than the equator. The local union, its constitution, officers, methods, departments with histories, with plain accounts from expert local workers relative to their success and failure.

FRANCES E. WILLARD.

Perhaps the necessity of local unions is not apparent to a partial observer, but if we give the matter careful study we may be able to see the need of such organizations. If we, as individuals or communities, carried out the Divine will our prime object in life would be to serve God, who created us in His own image, and the question uppermost in our minds would be—"How can I serve Him?" We are prone to think of God as afar off in heaven, but heaven is His throne, earth is His footstool, and He is not as far away as we suppose. In order to serve God we must love Him and be so in touch with His divine love and will that we realize humanity needs our service. If we keep our minds steadily to this point and examine society at large, we shall find it in a demoralized condition, and if we study departments of social life we find that all need more or less reform. But we say, "My influence is so small." Perhaps the influence of any one of us alone is not great, but if we could unite it with others like it, and "hitch it to the great driving wheel of God's power"—it becomes strong like a great cable, or like the coral reefs is cemented into an extended barrier against which wrecking tides beat but to break. In order to have our influence count for much it must be cemented and concentrated, and in order to best do this we must organize. In the Bible we read that one can chase a thousand and two put ten thousand to flight which is proof positive that in union there is not only strength, but a multiplicity of strength, and this is sufficient reason for organizing local W. C. T. Unions everywhere.

Do some of our brothers say that we neglect our homes for this work! We answer that we do not neglect the necessary things but admit that we leave undone some of the unnecessary things we used to do. I know one woman who does not get down on her hands and knees twice a week after mopping and clean out the corners with a cloth and a hairpin; she does not spend her time on crazy quilts or much fancy work, but she uses it in those matters that do not perish with the using.

Some one has said it is a shame that women have been forced from the seclusion of home into the more public work that their brothers ought to have done. That may be true; but it is an honor to women that they have nobly met the demand. In the local work we see such small results from our labor that we are sometimes discouraged, but when we realize that there would be no county union were it not for the locals, and no state organization were it not for counties, we may take courage and feel that the locals do amount to much; for our state union depends upon them.

But there is a more important reason for the organization of locals than any yet mentioned. They are the pledged enemy of the liquor traffic, "which is the prolific mother of crime," and which is rapidly increasing in our midst. The use of alcohol as a beverage has increased per capita from seven and sixty-nine hundredths gallons (7.69) in 1870, to fifteen and fifty-one one hundredths gallons (15.51) in 1890. In the United States, as a whole, statistics show that a saloon lives on two hundred and fifty persons; and in our great Empire State thirty-three (33) voters support a saloon.

What the W. C. T. U. stands for is the total prohibition of the manufacture, sale or importation of intoxicants, and in order to have this we must have righteous laws and righteous men to enforce them. When a local union is organized it means, first: to the United States government—we protest against this Christian government being a partner in the "liquor business"—we protest against every distillery, every brewery, every wholesale liquor house, against every place where liquor is sold as a beverage. Isn't it worth something for the womanhood of a community to so protest? To be sure it is a pity that this is all they can do, but with this little leaven of protest the whole lump may be leavened.

How to keep up an interest in local unions is a question of importance. Perhaps the best way is to give as many as possible something to do. Each superintendent of a department should have the entire charge of that department, she should solicit discussions and influence members of unions to write articles on the department subjects, also procure literature best adapted to her department. Let each member of union feel responsible for the interest of union, let her feel that unless she is there to do her part the meeting will be a failure; let the members bring articles from papers and clippings that will keep the minds of the members awake to the great scourge that is destroying our people, and let them bear in mind that there is no lying up in quarantine. Let them call attention to the fact that the secular press is silent on this subject, and also a large proportion of the religious press. Two general directions cover the whole ground for the local:

1. Organize.

2. Do something against the liquor traffic every day—and interest will not flag, but the union will realize for its own welfare the truth:

"Get work! get work! be sure 'tis better Than what you work to get."

MORALS IN MANNERS.

[The Atlantic Monthly for May contains an article, by Lafcadio Hearn, on Japanese character which is as delightfully revealing as the glinting shadows of the electric light. Western people may study with profit the following suggestions of Eastern morals in manners.—EDS.]

If you happened to have a cultivated Japanese friend who has remained in all things truly Japanese, whose character has remained untouched by the new egotism and by foreign influences, you will probably be able to study in him the particular social traits of the whole people—traits in his case exquisitely accentuated and polished. You will observe that, as a rule, he never speaks of himself and that, in reply to searching personal questions he will answer as vaguely and briefly as possible with a polite bow of thanks.

But, on the other hand, he will ask many questions about yourself, your opinions, your ideas, even trifling details of your daily life appear to have deep interest for him; and you will probably have occasion to note that he never forgets anything which he has learned concerning you.

Yet there are certain rigid limits to his kindly curiosity, and perhaps even to his observation; he will never refer to any disagreeable or painful matter, and he will remain absolutely blind to eccentricities or small weaknesses, if you have any. To your face he will never praise you; but he will never laugh at you nor criticise you. Indeed, you will find that he never criticises persons, but only actions in their results. As a private adviser, he will not even directly criticise a plan of which he disapproves, but is apt to suggest a new one in some such guarded language as, "Perhaps it might be more to your immediate interest to do thus and so." . . . .

Among no other civilized people is the secret of happy living so thoroughly comprehended as among the Japanese; by no other race is the truth so widely understood that our pleasure in life must depend upon the happiness of those about us, and consequently upon the cultivation in ourselves of unselfishness and of patience. For which reason, in Japanese society, sarcasm, irony, cruel wit are not indulged. I might almost say that they have no existence in refined life.

. . . The moral policy is that through which the highest and happiest results may be obtained. A foreign dweller in the interior cannot but long sometimes for the sharp, erratic inequalities of Western life, with its larger joys and pains, and its more comprehensive sympathies. But sometimes only, for the intellectual loss is really more than compensated by the social charm, and there can remain, no doubt, in the mind of one who fully understands the Japanese, that they are still the best people in the world to live among.

"How sweet 'twould be at evening if you and I could say
'Kind Shepherd, we've been seeking the sheep that went astray;
Heart-sore and faint with hunger, we heard them making
moan,
And lo! with joy returning, we bring them safely home.'"

OUR FLOWER MISSION.

When about thirty years ago, a young girl, by a dreadful accident, was made a life-long cripple and sufferer, it was but natural that her friends should look upon it as a cruel calamity, if they thought of her life as blighted, all the bright promise of usefulness and happiness buried in a living grave. This, indeed, must have been the effect of such a misfortune to one who lived only for self; but the life that is given to God, that knows no personal ambition, that seeks only to teach of Christ and Him crucified, is beyond the reach of any earthly ruin. What Jennie Casseday's life and work might have been, had she had health and strength, we do not know. Certain it is that in weakness and pain she wrought a greater work for Christ than many a one who never knows a day of pain and sickness. From her invalid's couch her heart went out to the poor and wretched, and though for years she scarcely left her room, yet she is one of those of whom the Master says: "I was sick and ye visited me; I was in prison and ye came unto me."

Jennie Casseday's ministry to others was not confined to one line of work, but to white-ribboners she is best known as the founder of our flower mission. When the W. C. T. U. found her, the patient sufferer was sending bunches of flowers with Scripture verses attached, to the criminals and to the afflicted of her own city, Louisville. What work could receive a quicker sympathy from the white-ribbon army of the nation? In that great army of women there were broken-hearted mothers who had seen their sons go down the drunkard's path to a felon's grave; there were wives whose love had never faltered even when its object was behind prison bars. They were just the ones to sympathize with Jennie Casseday in her efforts to bind up the broken-hearted, to proclaim liberty to the captives." And so the W. C. T. U. took up Jennie Casseday and her work creating a flower mission department and making her its National superintendent. This meant a flower mission service in every local and state union in the nation, and for fifteen years Jennie Casseday sent flowers and Scripture messages, not to the criminal and afflicted classes of Louisville alone, but of all the nation. Nor has her work ceased; the gentle, unselfish life has indeed been translated, but so long as our great organization shall exist, so long shall Jennie Casseday continue her ministry of flowers.

Our flower mission is not the sentimental gushing of maudlin sympathy which manifests itself toward the perpetrator of some fearful crime. It is the pity of Christ who condones no sin but despairs of no sinner. Its flowers never hint of any palliation, much less admiration of crime, for they carry always with them the message of God to the sinner, the message which tells of His unchanging hatred for sin and of His undying love for the sinner, and witnesses forever of the One who is able to "save to the uttermost," who came "not to call the righteous but sinners to repentance." Many touching stories have come from the work of this department, of hardened criminals who wept like children when flowers, like those which grew by their mother's door in the days of their innocent childhood, were placed in their hand, and who received with penitent and believing hearts the message of salvation which accompanied them.

There is no department of our great work through which the "organized mother-love" speaks more clearly than through the flower mission department, none more surely inspired by Him who came to seek and to save that which was lost. For this reason and because we have lost our "flower queen" during the year, we have made a specialty of her beloved mission in this issue.

THE MINISTRY OF FLOWERS.

Beauty, in the divine economy, is one of the most potent factors in the evolution of the race, one of the most helpful agencies in the struggle of man to the heights above. The truly beautiful is, therefore, always the truly useful. We are all of us more or less sensitive to harmony of sound and of color.

Music, childhood and flowers are a holy trinity which leads the soul upward, and the greatest and purest of these influences is flowers.

Their ministry is a silent one, it is true, but perhaps for that very reason all the more potent. We have yet to find a mind so debased, a soul so sinful, as to remain unmoved by the sweet persuasiveness of flowers. There is that in the perfume of a rose or a violet, or in the humblest flower that lifts its head sunward by the wayside, that reaches man's innermost nature and speaks of the brooding tenderness of the universal Father—Mother. God in man, God in the flower, God everywhere—this is Truth! But our minds are not always attuned to this key of life. We cannot all of us see "sermons in stones," and good in everything; not all hearts are lifted up at sight of a rainbow; but what soul among us is not receptive, consciously or unconsciously, to the beauty of flower, form and color?

And what is the language they speak—these messengers of our Father? Whether breathing their loveliness and subtle air of refinement from the family table, or coming as a tribute of affection from friend to friend, whether irradiating with light and color the marriage altar, or shedding their fragrance and purity upon the casket of the loved one, flowers speak the universal language of the soul. They speak of love, of hope, of peace, of blessed harmony, of universal fatherhood and a united brotherhood.

"Consider the lilies!" Consider them well. They tell of a perfect law and of a perfect obedience to it; they tell of a beautiful harmony in earthly life which somehow man has missed and got away from.

The cultivation of flowers is an occupation full of beneficent results to all who engage in it. No matter how small our attempt at floriculture, it cannot but be helpful morally and physically. Gardening conduces to healthy development of body and soul. The beneficial effects of living in the sunshine is as noticeable in man as in plant. Sunlight is necessary to a vigorous animal life, and we believe, upon this earth at least, to mental and spiritual vitality also.

Happy the woman, and especially the W. C. T. U. woman, who has at her disposal a plot of ground, however small, for the cultivation of flowers! The care and culture of flowers becomes doubly blessed when the motive is not only love for the flower but love for human kind. As she lovingly plants and waters, the W. C. T. U. woman thinks of the sick and suffering; she thinks of the pauper and the prisoner; her heart warms toward the unfortunates of every class; a divine pity stirs in her breast for the shut-ins—those deprived of the blessed air and sunshine, and for the shut-outs—those who do not feel the love of the Father in their hearts, nor realize their relation to Him and to all His beautiful creations.

When flower mission day comes round, how cheerfully she gathers the fruits of her joyous labor, and sends them with the knot of white ribbon and a message of love from the Father's written word to the sick room, to the homes of the friendless, the poor and the aged, to the prisons and the reformatories, to all places where their delicate ministration is specially needed.

LESSONS FROM THE WOMAN'S CONGRESSES.

If it be true that the march of civilization is coördinate with the advancement of woman, then, indeed, no other exhibit than that which filled the halls of the Memorial Art Palace during the memorable week of May 15 to 21 inclusive is needed to show us the marvelous strides of civilization in the four centuries of American history; no other prophetic voice is needed to tell us that the next four centuries will witness the increase of those strides in geometric ratio.

The Congresses which have just passed into history afforded a most impressive object lesson to the people of Chicago and to the whole world. We wonder if there breathes a woman with soul so dead, who, sitting in one of those Congresses for half an hour, did not "feel the earth move sunward"; who was not impelled, nolens volens, to "join the great march onward." No one could mingle with the animated throng in hall or corridor or vestibule and not realize that the "ever feminine" is sweeping on with resistless force to fill its divinely appointed place in creation.

Woman's work in all its humanitarian and reformatory phases has been given a hearing in these Congresses, and the fact has been demonstrated to the world (for most of the workers were already aware of it) that, no matter what the name or the aim or the nationality of their organization, the faces of these women are all set in one direction, their aim, in its last analysis, is identical,—the uplift of humanity. Whether their work be on ethical social or industrial lines; whether it pertain to politics or to food and dress, the same underlying idea is present, the same noble purpose manifest—the betterment of human conditions.

It was a climax worthy the closing years of the "woman's century" that this most progressive of all nations should become the proud hostess of the representative women of the world; that America should witness the gathering together of women of different tongues and of diverse religious and political creeds for the purpose, not of debating their points of difference, but of discovering and emphasizing their points of agreement, and of bidding each other Godspeed in their varied lines of effort.

The mutual recognition of the truth that, as all roads led to Rome, so all methods of reform reach out in singleness of purpose toward the elevation of the race, strengthens and tightens the tie that binds all philanthropic organizations, and hastens the day when the consummation of the supreme aim shall be possible. For a united womanhood means the solidifying of all human interests; and an international federation of women is the precursor of that "federation of the world" which, it needs but the inspiration of the Congresses to discern, is not a mere poet's dream but an actual fact of the future not so very remote.

The World's Congress of Representative Women! The very name is full of significance. It means that these women are officially recognized as representing the womanhood of the civilized world. They stand for the woman idea of their respective nations. They voice the dominating thought of women about women. And truly so; for taking the thinking women of the world, the utterances of the Congress as a whole undoubtedly express the sentiments of the majority. The woman who does not think, who is thought*less* concerning questions of vital interest to her sex and to humanity, be she princess or peasant, has not earned the right to be counted at all.

The effect of the Congresses will be to dispel forever the fear (prevalent among those who least understand human nature) that because woman comes into the kingdom there must necessarily be the stepping down and out of some man. Surely, if this notable gathering of representative women has taught one thing more than another it is that woman does not seek to compete with man. The evolution of woman means coöperation, not competition. It means the harmonizing of the masculine and feminine forces in all the affairs of life in such a manner as to establish a perfect equilibrium of the whole, and thus secure the highest development of the human.

"By their fruits ye shall know them." It is a suggestive fact that the more the world learns of the work of its "representative women," and of the animus of "woman's rights" movements, the more deferential is its attitude toward them. The full reports of the Congresses given by the press throughout the land, and especially by the Chicago dailies, and the laudatory editorials concerning the work and the workers, is one indication among many of the trend of popular thought. The world to-day acknowledges the value of woman's organizations because it has seen the wonderful fruit thereof, and proved its invigorating qualities.

In these latter days it is "grand to be a woman," as said one young girl, an enthusiastic spectator of the Congresses. Truly, no woman of this age need be afraid of losing caste by being "strong-minded," for the World's Congress has demonstrated the fact that it is the strong-minded, progressive woman who stands for all that is highest and best in a Christian civilization.

This International Congress of women marks a new epoch in the history of the world. Women—the moulders of the coming generation—realize as never before that all the nations are not only of one blood, but of one mind also. And into this indivisible sea of mind has come through the world's mothers such a stirring of the waters as shall be felt in every corner of the habitable globe. The thought which centered for seven memorable days in this favored city shall go forth in undulating waves until it break upon the shores of every continent and encircle every isle of the sea. The light which was focused for one week in the Memorial Art Palace has already begun to irradiate the hills, and ere long every plain and valley on the planet will have been touched by its all-pervasive glow, will have responded to its vitalizing power. The representative women of the world return to their respective countries freshly inspired, to think and to act, and the one word we hear ringing through the ranks of womanhood, north and south, east and west is "Forward."

THE AMERICAN PEOPLE DEFIED.

Our readers do not need to be told the history of the Sunday closing act of Congress. Most of them took part in the agitation and circulated the petitions which influenced Congress to take the stand it did. They know full well that the only object which Congress could possibly have had in making the Sunday closing of the Fair the condition of its gift was to obey the will of the majority of the people. More than this, so strong is mammon that it required a very large majority of the people on the side of Sunday closing to force Congress to recognize them. These people, therefore, cannot regard the recent act of the directors declaring their purpose to open grounds and exhibits on Sunday as any other than a flagrant breach of faith, an open defiance of Congress and of the people.

The step thus far taken by the directors is this: To submit to the national commissioners a resolution to open grounds and exhibits (not running the machinery for the present) on Sunday, beginning with May 28. The commissioners have sanctioned this action by a vote of twenty-nine to twenty-eight. The United States District-Attorney has filed a bill in the circuit court to enjoin the directors from opening the gates on Sunday, in violation of the act of Congress, still the announcement is made as late as Saturday morning, that the Fair will be open the next day until eleven p. m.

One of the leading organs of Sunday opening clearly states that the act of the directors in refunding the $1,929,000 of the $2,500,000 given by the national government, which was not set aside for prizes, releases the directors from all obligations to the national government.

The question at issue is twofold: Does this refunding of the money honorably free the directors from the contract with the national government, and are they keeping good faith with the people of the nation when they open the Exposition on Sunday? Our answer to both propositions is an emphatic No. In the first place it is an impossibility for the directors to refund the money. The two million five hundred thousand dollars was issued in peculiar form, in souvenir half dollars for the express purpose of making it yield to the directors more than its face value. These coins have been scattered over the world and can never be returned. From them the directors have realized double the amount actually given by Congress and no honest man can consider that the directors are honorably freed from the contract until the amount actually realized by them is repaid. No quibbling that a man has a right to the incidental gains from a contract, that it is only the amount actually given by the other party which he can be held responsible for if he violates his contract can avail; for in this case the additional gain was a part of the contract, the issuing of the money in that peculiar form was as much a part of the gift as the silver of which the souvenir coins were made. But more than this, Congress took this action not to serve any personal or private interests but in obedience to the unmistakable wish of the people.

There was only one point concerning which the sovereign people of these United States felt a consuming anxiety, only one which they were not willing to trust to the judgment of the local management, and that was that their national Sabbath should be respected. So strong was this sentiment that when Congress made Sunday closing a condition of its gift it did but 'bow to an overwhelming public sentiment" which the secular press of Chicago glibly informs us is also the force which compels the directors to violate their contract. But the public sentiment back of the act of Congress is that of the nation, the public sentiment back of the local directors is, at the most, only that of Chicago and vicinity. With her past record on the subject, Chicago can ill afford to advocate defiance of the national will by one small section of one state.

The condition imposed by Congress, therefore, that the gates of the Exposition should be closed on Sunday, is much more than a condition of an ordinary contract which the other party is free to accept or refuse with the gift; it is the expressed wish of the people of the United States, and as such should be regarded as a law. It is simply false to say that only a few desired the closing of the gates on Sunday. Unless the majority on the side of Sunday closing were overwhelming, Congress had more to lose than to gain by disregarding the wishes of the local directors. Members of Congress are not so strenuous for Sabbath observance that they can afford to defy the wishes of their constituencies on the subject, and when they took the stand they did, they knew full well that the country as a whole was with them. For the directors now, by any quibble, to open the gates on Sunday, is more than a violation of a contract; it is a stab at the institutions of our country. It makes no difference, if the majority represented by the act of Congress is composed of "fanatics," "narrow Sabbatarian bigots" and "idle and unreflecting women belonging to the W. C. T. U." They are nevertheless the majority, and as the majority they should rule. The very life of our Republican institutions demands that they shall rule until the presumably "broad-minded, liberal opposers of the Sabbath, and the busy, reflecting women who do not belong to the W. C. T. U." shall, by fair and open discussion, have made themselves the majority. When that time shall arrive, we will at least prove to them that "fanatics," "bigots," "idle and unreflecting women" though we be, we are at least too thoroughly American in our traditions to defeat the will of the majority by a trick and win by the most underhanded and unscrupulous means, the end we could not reach by honorable and open ones. As a last resort we recommend the proposition made by Boston Sunday closing advocates to write, or better, telegraph President Cleveland to issue a proclamation declaring that he will not allow the gates to be opened Sunday unless on mandate of federal court.

A LIFE-SAVING STATION.

The chiefest glory of the close of this century is the readiness with which men and women are answering the cries, "Help! Save!" that resound on every hand. To those who esteem the gospel as the "greatest thing in the world" there is no graver problem than how to reach lost men—how to carry light to those in darkness, how to feed the hungry, body and soul, clothe the naked, minister to the sick, comfort the sorrowing.

Quietly, unostentatiously, not letting the right hand know very much of the work of the left hand, the Chicago West Side W. C. T. U. has built and fitted out a life-saving station for the victims of strong drink. A modest card thus announces the work: "The West Side Woman's Christian Temperance Union has established a free dispensary for the cure of alcoholism, at 870 West Madison street, in charge of Dr. A. V. Hutchins. Open every evening from eight till nine. Treatment absolutely FREE."

Dr. Hutchins has all his life been committed heart and soul to the cause of temperance, committed to it in practice, politics and—pocket. He had used a remedy for inebriety in his private, general practice for many years, and thoroughly tested its curative properties. Mrs. Hutchins, also a graduate of a medical college, is president of the West Side W. C. T. U., and about a year ago her husband offered to coöperate with the union by giving treatment to inebriates. A part of the regular headquarters of the W. C. T. U. on West Madison street, one of Chicago's busiest thoroughfares, is used as an office.

Perhaps no better idea of the work can be given than to describe a visit recently made one evening during office hours. A room, resembling in every respect the regulation mission room of the city, was partly filled with men, some engaged in quiet conversation, some reading, some sitting alone. In the rear was the office through whose door men came and went as quietly as if the transaction within was one of purest business. A sweet-faced little woman was sitting in the rear of the room, waiting. Soon she was joined by a fine looking man who spoke with her a moment and then went into the office. When he came back, his wife took his arm and looking up into his face with an expression of love and joy beyond description, said:

"Eighteen!"

"Yes," answered the husband, "eighteen nights straight."

And the wife added "for the first time in eight years." There were no dry eyes among those who heard the brief, eloquent story.

Others were there whose breaths had been for many months free from the taint of liquor and whose faces had lost nearly every line written upon them by excess, but who frequented the place to help others. Employer and employed were there; men of education as well as men from the humbler ranks of life. Occasionally a woman joins the ranks of those who are willing to be thus helped.

To each one Dr. Hutchins says: "Remember, your safety lies in your own hands. I can break the appetite for you now—see, that of your own free will you do not bind yourself with it again."

The men have formed themselves into a club for the benefit of those who are in the same need that they once were. They discovered that the night's lodging, the good "square meal," the clothes, tools, etc., furnished in case of emergency had previously come out of the doctor's own purse. Their restored manliness resented this for others and such expenses are now paid out of the funds of the club.

Not to the body alone is this ministration. Gospel services are held regularly and many a man goes away from the doors of 870 West Madison street, clean in body and soul, and blessing the white-ribboners in his heart.

A careful entry is kept of all patients who receive treatment, in a book from which valuable statistics can be gathered when it has become a record of years.

It is absolutely inspiring to meet with a good work, such as the above, which has never had any "boom," which has grown on the firm foundation of its own tested worth; that is not carried on for love of gain or fame; that has no profit in it for those who have it in charge, save the exceeding riches of soul that never fail to reward him who does good for good's own sake. God grant that the spirit of this undertaking may prove infectious, and that such stations of rescue may receive an impetus of help from hundreds of willing hearts and hands.

Miss Helen L. Hood has done excellent service in the year she has spent among our British cousins. She has "held the fort" for the World's W. C. T. U., and been instrumental in the publication of an admirable variety of leaflets, pamphlets, etc., calculated to enlighten British women as to the real spirit and aims of the white-ribbon movement. Miss Hood has hosts of friends in England as in America, and her work will always "win its widening way."

Madame Antoinette Sterling has a precocious little daughter, evidently "a chip of the old block," who in her definition lesson at school recently set down the critic as "one who knows little, feels less, and talks too much." She also said that the leading girls in her school had so much opinion that there was not enough to go round and she was obliged to do without.

Dr. Emily Kemplin is becoming one of the most popular lecturers at the University at Zurich, although her position at first was precarious because it was an innovation. She has been asked to prepare a paper for the Law Reform Committee of the World's Fair on "The Distinguishing Features of the Administration of Justice in Switzerland."

The new spirit that has been infused into the British Women's Temperance Association was shown on the night that its annual meeting adjourned, when after holding a prayer-meeting a procession of leading women from all parts of the kingdom marched to Lady Henry's London house at midnight and sang with a right hearty good-will:

"For the Lion of Judah shall break every chain,
And give us the victory again and again."

closing with that beautiful parting hymn of the white-ribboners: "God be with you till we meet again," and hearing from the window above them a clear voice calling out: "I thank you. God bless you! Good-night."

We have learned to search out causes, not to deal forever with facts. The white-ribbon women are becoming experienced in dissecting out the alcohol nerve from the anatomy of the body politic. Its ramifications are indeed surprising. They extend from centre to circumference, and wherever they go the scalpel of our study and criticism, our speech and work are sure to follow them.

Not long after her accident, we are told, an affectionate relative in providing for the support of the invalid, Jennie Casseday, conditioned that the trust for her benefit should last eight years, deeming that would more than cover the length of time which such a frail body could endure. Col. Young, of Louisville, at the dedication of the Jennie Casseday infirmary, commenting on this, remarked, "But He who directs the lives of all His people saw that eight years were not enough for this frail form; that from that sick room messages of love and plans of comfort and good were yet to come; that her place in the divine economy could not yet be filled. Oh! blessed thought in all human sorrow and disappointment, 'that we are immortal until our work is done.' "

If I were to suggest special mottoes for the flower mission department it seems to me that they would be, first, that exquisite thought of Emerson's:

"If eyes were made for seeing
Then beauty is its own excuse for being";

next that perfume wrung from a broken heart:

"Though He slay me, yet will I trust in Him";

and last that glad declaration of the Master's:

"I came not to be ministered unto but to minister."

Our flower mission saint, as she lay for years upon that couch of suffering, learned the connection of these three thoughts as, perhaps, few have ever done. The flowers were more to her than exquisite color and perfume, though she was not unmindful of these; they were the outward visible expression of God's thoughts of joy and gladness for the world. But since she, of all others, knew that pain and sorrow have a place in this earth life, she recognized that they also are of God; that the same hand could not give to His children good and evil; that, therefore, the evil must be only good disguised; as really beautiful, when we see with His eyes, as are the flowers, as sweet as the songs of birds, as full of light and joy as the brook's murmur, or the zephyr's breath. And then she saw the exquisite fitness of making the recognized beauty minister to the unrecognized; the apparent sweetness to that which God alone can reveal as sweet.

ON DUTY.

"ALL GLORIOUS WITHIN."

BY ESTHER T. HOUSH.

"The King's Daughters" is a beautiful and meaningful name, appropriated for that society from one of the psalms of Israel's sweet singer. It is the centre of clustered word pictures, exceedingly vivid. There is the ivory palace; the fragrance of myrrh, of aloes, of cassia; the queen in "gold of Ophir"; the King—"fairer than the children of men," with his sceptre of righteousness held with grace,—oh, the graciousness of our King!

Among the honorable women gathered about this throne are the King's daughters clad in "raiment of needlework," clad in "wrought gold," thus showing the care and labor of the Father who "greatly desires their beauty." The outer robe is a symbol of the daughter's estate—heir to a throne; what she herself must be, is "all glorious within." This is her royal heritage; that she be beautiful and glorious from within to without.

We connect with the word "glorious" the perfection of light, the clear day, the sunrise, with its rose and purple, its breath of new life wafted from heavenly shores; the sunset, where like beings with wings, the silver, the crimson and gold mount from cloud to cloud until the sky is a stupendous amphitheatre of color, changing like a kaleidoscope as the wind rushes through and blends the shades into indescribable combinations; or, the billows of the great lakes, with their depth of green and blue, tossing, rolling, lifting the white foam to greet the early sunshine, and weaving the rainbows with pearls until the waters are the rarest mosaic ever seen.

I have looked at all these until my heart stood still under their matchless power, for, beyond the sunrise, the sunset, beyond the marvelous changes of light and shade was God, light of the world. But the sunlight from which all that is glorious in nature comes, is outward; the King's daughter must be glorious within.

These words came to me with force, when at Block Island a few summers ago I climbed the steep, narrow stairs of the lighthouse, and stood within the railing about the lamps. Filled with the purest oil, cleansed of every particle of consumed wick, burnished like a mirror, they sat in state within the glass room. About them was the crystal glass polished until no shadow was left upon its face. When the night should come a lighted match would send a ring of flame around the wicks, and a volume of glory would flood the sea.

I had longed to gather into my consciousness what it must be to be a light, shining out into the darkness, making a safe path for the ships and their precious weight of human life. Sensate the lamp seemed to me, but behind the perfection of man's invention, behind the providing of the oil and the care, was God, the glory of the earth.

I have seen another light, shining from dear eyes, making a glow over the face, sending an aura about the head, a light seen never on sea or land, and I knew it was God within, filling the soul He had made with the breath of his life. I saw it in earliest childhood in the tender face that bent above my clasped hands at the evening prayer; I saw it always when about her daily humble tasks; when bereavement and darkness fell, every day alike, that glory on my mother's face. One day it faded out, but the soul had caught the radiance of the eternal morning. I am sure of this one King's daughter "all glorious within," brought with "gladness and rejoicing" into the King's palace.

"Glorious within!" how shall it be? If a pure soul dwell in a pure body, shall not the life reflect the purity? If God's light enter the heart, shall it not search out every corner filled with selfishness and sin, and by its fullness, drive those out? If love for God be in us, and abound, what room shall there be for hate, for envy, for unkindness? It would seem that glorious within must make glorious without. If we are God's lights along the shore of humanity, are we to keep our lamps filled, burnished and covered? If to us has come a gift that to life is like the artist touch on cloud and sea, does not the Giver mean that it is to be used for the beauty that He desires?

It is God's white light that breaks into myriad rays for the flowers of the field. His light in our hearts may be clear joy within, and sparkle out in cheery words, in merry song, in a full and complete mental and physical life. For the King's Daughter must be helpful. By right of heritage, she is a dispenser of bounty. We are to be the bearers of joy, of comfort, of consolation.

"Gladness and rejoicing" are the perpetual fountains in the King's palace. We are to bring out to the multitude, not yet daughters and sons by accepted kinship, the refreshing draughts of these living waters. We are to bless their lives with the overflow of our own. The overflow!—because if not full of the love ourselves, we cannot give. Love is the only thing that never gets less in the giving.

If we only knew, dear girls, how much good we could do, would we let a day pass without really helping some one? If every young woman whose eye reads this page were a daughter of the King, in being and doing; carrying the light of the King's love, the graciousness of the King's kindness, the purity and strength of the King's truth, out into every place she enters, would it not help make a different world for all we meet?

We all need each other's real neighborliness, to have the distance between lives taken away. We do not need so much to be charitable as generous; we do not need so much to be generous as genial; we do not need so much to give the world our time and money as ourselves.

"Not what we give, but what we share,
For the gift without the giver is bare:
Who gives himself, with his gift feeds three,
Himself, his hungry neighbor, and Thee!"

SOUTH CAROLINA.

STATE NEWS.

The South Carolina convention is over, and we women thought we had just had a delightful time, under circumstances which threatened to make it otherwise, until a man who no doubt thought it would not be a genuine convention if there was not a fuss, tried to start one by making most unfair and incorrect statements in the paper. He was opposed to Gov. Tillman and the dispensary bill, and as I was not opposed to either, his attack was mainly against me. I having recently received a number of letters informing me that "the day the saloons were closed in Charleston, would be the last day of my life," I was not afraid of his paper bullets, particularly as I was able to refute the last one of them. Ain't some men awful? I do not wonder those Baptist sisters would not let them attend their meetings in Atlanta.

Everything seemed to conspire against our holding a convention at all. Our first program was made out for one place which had to be changed, a second was made out, and before it could be printed two of the names had to be eliminated. They had joined the white-ribbon hosts which are gathering so rapidly in the bright beyond. Four days before the convention, a telegram came asking me to postpone the convention because of fever prevailing in the town, and particularly in the homes of those who expected to entertain delegates. A lady present when the telegram came, seeing my distress, said, "Mrs. Chapin, it seems to me you are not wise in discerning the signs of the times; for you keep beating the beast when an angel stands clearly in the way to prevent its going. I should have given up the W. C. T. U. long ago if I had had the obstacles thrown in the way that you have had, for Heaven certainly does not smile on the work in this state."

And so it seems, but I don't belong to the "giving up" sort, and although we have many and sore trials, is it nothing that on the 1st of July every bar-room in the state will be closed—two hundred and ninety in my own city? What but an Almighty hand could do this, in this state? And now, let me answer a question which comes to me from every direction. "What do you think of your Dispensary Bill? and what do others think?" I can only speak for myself.

The Prohibitionists last year made a desperate effort to get a prohibitory bill through the legislature. It passed the house but was side-tracked in the senate. I was so disappointed that I was actually discouraged. Taking up a book of Gospel hymns, I opened to the one reading,

"It may not be my way,
It may not be thy way,
But in some way or other,
The Lord will provide."

I involuntarily said, "I give up my way, oh, Lord, only send deliverance from the curse." Since then I have been waiting to learn God's way. Many who profess to be temperance men and women stand side by side with the bar-keepers because of their hostility to the administration by which the bill was passed.

I have been working and praying for thirteen years to God to close the pitfalls of destruction that stand open night and day. We have petitioned churches, congress, legislature to help and been refused and now I see in this movement God's hand so manifest, I have no desire to scare up "political ambuscades" or any of the other political bugaboos others profess to see. We have had no exciting campaigns, no magnetic speakers, no money has been spent. It is all God's doings, and I love to think it is so.

Every obstacle is placed in the way of the enforcement of the bill, but we have a governor who brings things to pass, and the bar-keepers seem to understand he means that laws placed upon the statute books are to be enforced. He has taken the matter in his own hands and it will certainly be put through. Our press superintendent will report the convention. I feel more sensibly every day the loss of our saintly Mrs. Gause. She was a tower of strength to me. She was so true and her counsel so wise, I mourn her as I would an own sister, for I miss her loving letters, so full of sympathy and practical advice. The convention passed suitable resolutions, voicing the feeling throughout the state unions for the great loss sustained.

PENNSYLVANIA NEWS.

April is the month in which occurs the semi-annual conventions in many of the counties of our state. Lawrence county held theirs at Plain Grove, April 18 and 19. The sessions were well attended and very interesting. Mrs. R. J. Trego gave an excellent lecture one evening during the convention. Mrs. Trego has been doing good work in this county, having given lectures at a number of places in the county. New Wilmington, Harlansburg and Volant have each held successful contests in April under the direction of Miss Addie Burch. Volant union has been doing good work in the department of social purity, having had a sermon preached on that topic by Rev. W. S. Shepherd, pastor of the M. E. church, and also distributed social purity and white cross leaflets throughout the town.

Columbia county held their eleventh semi-annual convention recently at Benton. Forty-five delegates were present. A gold medal contest was held and Miss Lettie Whitney won the medal. D. H. Buruell lectured in the county for a week, and as a result four new unions were organized. The Mill Village unions held a successful series of lectures and after all expenses were paid had over twenty-one dollars in the treasury. Forrest county is still at work. The West Hickory union recently held a valentine parlor meeting.

Butler county is very actively engaged. The superintendent of evangelistic work has asked all the pastors to preach a temperance sermon. The Butler union attended in a body the convention held at Butler to organize a Sabbath union. A paper was presented and read, asking the ministers to observe the April week of prayer. This union also petitioned the legislature to pass a bill prohibiting the sale of liquors on Decoration Day, and protested against the repeal of the local prohibitory laws now in force. The South Side Butler union is very active in all good work. They have rented a large hall, in which regular meetings and prayer-meetings are held each Sabbath. At the request of the Prohibition Club, the two unions arranged for a general reception, at which refreshments were served, and the club presented Rev. J. S. McKee with a fine gold watch as a testimonial for his services during the campaign.

A parlor meeting for the benefit of the state fund was held and netted eight dollars. Petitions for the passage of the anti-vivisection bill were largely signed as well as the one for purity in art which was sent to the Columbian

Exposition. One new feature in the work has been the inauguration of a series of cooking lessons given semi-monthly; these are well attended and a collection taken at each meeting. Another successful enterprise was the holding of a "Pet Show." The children brought live pets of all kinds and placed them on exhibition. An admission fee was charged and thirty dollars cleared. About twenty prizes, publications of the Woman's Temperance Publishing Association, were distributed to the successful exhibitors. At the request of the county superintendent of Sabbath-schools, an open meeting of the children was held and temperance instruction given. This union has now leased commodious headquarters, including a large hall where religious services will be held.

Westmoreland county has been doing good work in the line of petitions this year. They circulated petitions against the repeal of local option and Sabbath laws. Letters were written to the representatives, and the county corresponding secretary went to the capitol during the session of the legislature, interviewed the representatives and secured favorable promises to all requests.

A resolution was passed at the last convention to agitate the question of "electing women to our school boards" and it was ascertained that in Donegal township a lady had been nominated as school director. A secret meeting was held without the knowledge of the lady or her husband at which it was decided that "women are not citizens," hence not eligible to that office. This matter was brought before the public in the newspapers, and the law concerning woman's eligibility to office in educational matters was published and a general "agitation" followed in the press, all of which was favorable.

The spring convention will be held April 27 and 28 and will be a school of methods. Alleghany and Indiana counties will unite with Westmoreland county to hold a three-days' school of methods at Ridgeway Park in August. Miss Dornblazer has been in the county doing evangelistic work and Miss Greenwood was to be at the spring convention.

NOTES.

The Mercer county Young Woman's Christian Temperance Union held a conference at Grove City, April 13, in charge of Mrs. Maude Elliott, superintendent of Y work.

Mercer county will be represented in the educational exhibit at the Columbian Exposition by some good papers on "Physiology and Hygiene," prepared by pupils in North Salem township.

Miss Clara Parrish, National organizer, has been in our state. She spoke for the Philadelphia Y's at their anniversary meeting.

Mrs. M. Jennie Stevenson, county superintendent of Y work, Westmoreland county, addressed the county Christian Endeavor convention on temperance.

Philadelphia county held its semi-annual convention April 20, at Philadelphia.

Fifteen new unions are now added to our roll.

GOOD REPORTS.

The quarterly meeting was held at Vermont Avenue Christian Church, this spring. The treasurer reported: Receipts from all sources, $930; expenditures, $759.63; balance, $170.90. The corresponding secretary said that each union had reported, there being fourteen with a membership of 606; honorary members thirty-four; increase forty-seven. Regular meetings have been held numbering forty-nine; special meetings six; amount raised for local work $122.62. On January 24, a bureau of literature was organized. On February 26, there was a meeting held at Hamline M. E. C. Clubs, at which saloons and liquor licenses were discussed by Major Walker, Mr. F. M. Bradley and Mr. Moulton.

On March 5 there was a jubilee meeting—the occasion being the passage of a bill closing the gates of the Columbian Exposition on the Lord's day. Speakers were, Mrs. Catlin, Rev. S. H. Greene, Mr. Shepard, late editor of the Mail and Express, and Mrs. Clara Schell. Forty-eight letters were written to unions in New Hampshire, speaking favorably of Mr. Hale, and asking their influence to elect him to Congress. Mrs. Hunt thinks these letters aided very largely to elect him.

Mrs. Alden (Pansy) has a question box which her union finds interesting and instructive. Perhaps the sweetest thought that has come from any work is Pansy's Birthday Book, in which are inscribed the names of the children whose mothers are members of her union. At each meeting the children whose birthdays occur in that month are especially prayed for. Surely no mother would be willing to be left out of this circle of prayer which folds itself about her little ones, and bears them to the heart of their Heavenly Father.

The reports from the departments were given. Prison and jail: Visited the jail eight times; papers distributed, 601; magazines, 18; leaflets, 141; besides 410 pages of literature by local superintendents. Those incarcerated are there largely as the result of strong drink. One of the local superintendents devotes her time to pleading with those committed for murder. The almshouses and hospitals have also been visited.

Hope and Help Mission reported: Admissions to home, sixty-nine; of this number some have been sent to their homes and others secured service places; number of meals served, 1,392; nine visits made to hospitals; 250 pages of literature distributed.

Juvenile work: Interest among the members greatly increased; the work during the quarter has been to interest the children in the Willard fountain fund, each child promising to bring ten cents, to earn it if possible, and at a special meeting tell how they did it. These meetings have been very interesting.

The workers in purity in literature and art have been endeavoring to rid our city of a picture advertising a certain brand of cigarettes. The superintendent of police was called on in regard to the law covering such pictures, and the result was that all the tobacconists in the city had been ordered to remove the picture from their windows; they appealed by asking if a pasteboard skirt might be put on the figure, according to the law; this being done the picture was admissible. A woman had been advertising a certain brand of cigarette on the main avenue of our city, in a costume not only loud, but lewd; the proper authorities were consulted, and the woman has ceased to appear on the street.

Sabbath observance: While the agitation was in progress to get the law repealed for Sunday closing of the World's Fair, a letter was sent to President Harrison asking that he veto such a decision. After listening four days to the arguments that were presented to the Congressional World's Fair committee for and against we felt sure it would not be done, although the opposition was very determined and tried to bribe as well as argue, and threaten as well as bribe. Learning of the plans laid by the inaugural committee for Sunday concerts to be held at the Pension Building, we appealed to President Harrison, Mr. Cleveland and the District commissioners, praying them to do what they could to prevent such a desecration of the day. The result is known and we praise God. Three hundred pages of literature have been distributed.

Flower mission: Visits to the sick, fifty-three; visits to hospitals, seven; pages of literature distributed, 4,777; bouquets given, 286; money expended, $19.72.

Unfermented wine: The work has been principally with the colored churches. When urged to abandon the fermented wine, they complain "that the cost of the unfermented is greater." We believe, however, that as their conscience has been enlightened on the subject and having provided them with the grape juice in order to test the matter, we feel somewhat assured their conscience will lead them aright. Mrs. Brown, the city missionary of Chapin union, has furnished through the district superintendent, sixty bottles of grape juice to five colored Baptist churches. Through Mrs. Watrous, a local superintendent, eight bottles were furnished to three white churches and 115 pages of literature have been distributed.

Y. W. C. T. U.: Vermont avenue, Calvary Baptist, Ryland and Metropolitan Y's hold social meetings each month. Vermont avenue held an "at home" at headquarters and Metropolitan a Kaffee Klatch, which was in every way a success. Calvary Baptist has opened a reading-room for the car drivers of the Eleventh street road; this only needs time to show its helpfulness. Metropolitan and First Baptist are planning a coffee house and reading-room which they hope soon to open. Flowers have been carried to the sick; the poor have been visited and helped; literature has been distributed; forty-two letters and fifteen postals written and seven unions visited.

Narcotics: The work of securing signatures to the National petition has gone forward and eight hundred pages of literature have been distributed. A mothers' meeting was held at the residence of Mrs. Bartlett, at which this department has been made the prominent feature and has been very helpful to those attending.

The superintendent of scientific temperance instruction visited the Franklin school, found the principal of the first four grades in hearty sympathy with the work. The study is taught and impressed according to the text books, the higher departments (Mr. Kimball, principal) have advanced text books, giving a more thorough explanation of the disastrous effects of alcohol and narcotics. Leaflets were left and copies of the law for distribution.

The district superintendent of legislation and petition, Mrs. M. A. Weaver, has been very ill, and Mrs. Gillenwater has been acting for her. She has endeavored to secure the indorsement of the woman's suffrage convention to the World's Petition and has prepared copies of the great Petition, visited newspaper offices and written communications to the New York Voice.

Lincoln Memorial union reports evangelistic work done in the alleys and byways. The workers have been received gladly and have been entreated to tell the people more about God. They have secured the means to carry on mission work in Glich's alley for a month; these people are anxious for the Word of Life and Christian sympathy. Signers to the pledge have been secured.

We were favored in listening to a Bible reading from Mrs. Alden (Pansy), during a part of the afternoon of the quarterly meeting; in the morning at eleven o'clock, Mrs. Ruth Havens read a paper on "Why Women want the Ballot."

On Sabbath, March 26th, the Y. W. C. T. U. held a mass-meeting at the First Congregational Church. Miss Clara Parrish, National Y organizer, spoke on the influence and duty of young women in relation to temperance work. Miss Cora B. Thomas, superintendent of young women's work in the W. C. T. U., presided over the meeting. Mrs. La Fetra offered a resolution tendering to the family of the late Col. Shepard the sympathy of the W. C. T. U., which was adopted. Mr. L. C. Hughes of Arizona spoke of temperance work in that territory. He said there was a great opportunity for the temperance people of the country to urge upon Congress the passage of a prohibitory law for the territories, and this he thought could be done readily, as the Congressmen and Senators voting for the law would not stir up opposition among their constitutents, whereas if they should attempt to take like action in their own states it would in many cases cause their defeat the next election. With one year of prohibition rule in Arizona, he believed the temperance people would be able to continue to enforce it when the territory should become a state.

Mrs. R. F. Brown, who has been engaged in city mission work in alleys in connection with the W. C. T. U. of the District for years, reports much effective work done in visiting the poor and sick the past winter. She has distributed 350 garments during the past three months, besides furnishing relief by sending food, coal and wood to eleven families. Many of these poor mothers cannot read, and she has brightened the walls of their humble homes by putting up pictures illustrating the Sunday-school lessons, thereby teaching effective object lessons.

On Monday evening, May 1, the District white-ribboners gave a reception to their husbands and gentlemen friends at Hotel Fredonia. A large number of persons were present, including a number of the clergy; the occasion proved very pleasant. An address of welcome was made by Mrs. S. D. La Fetra and responded to by Mr. F. M. Bradley. Professor Atlee, accompanied on the piano by Miss Loulie Hellen, gave several whistling solos, which were very enjoyable. Light refreshments were served.

MISSISSIPPI.

STATE CONVENTION.

The annual meeting of the Mississippi W. C. T. U. was held in Greenville, Washington county, opening on the morning of May 5 and closing May 9. There were in attendance forty delegates, twenty Y's and thirty visitors from abroad. The animus of Greenville, like all swamp and river towns, has been favorable to almost everything to which the W. C. T. U. is not. So we felt we had to make our way into the good opinion of the people, and the question was whether we could succeed.

Our opening services were to a small house with Mesdames Erwin and Snell of Columbus, and Spencer, of Alabama, to assist Mrs. Mount; Miss Frances Griffin, of Alabama, Miss Clara Baer, of Sophie Newcomb College, New Orleans, and Miss Belle Kearney to lend us their varied and valuable aid. The Methodist church, the only one large enough for our meetings, having been refused to us, we secured the rooms of the Y. M. C. A.

Before the business of the day began, Mrs. Mount, our president, requested several to speak. Mrs. Snell took the platform, She touched upon the preachers who would not help us in our work or let us use their churches, and the Methodist minister who was present left the house deeply hurt and offended. This we much regretted and can only say that if the brethren would study the daily lives and work of the W. C. T. U. women in their midst, they would have no more reason to withhold their indorsement than the women could have for not indorsing the ministers. Brother W. W. Woolard, of Rosedale, was a warm ally and cheered us by his ready aid and sympathy.

Miss Bettie Mann, on behalf of the W. C. T. U. of Greenville, delivered the address of welcome which was responded to by Mrs. J. I. Hoskins, of Lexington, Miss., who said, "The W. C. T. U. of Mississippi asked for prohibition and they have what is very properly known as the dram-shop law; they will ask the next legislature for prohibition, and by the help of God we will have prohibition." Sixty-two counties of Mississippi out of seventy-four, total, have prohibition by local option. Our president, Mrs. L. S. Mount, never got nearer our hearts than in this convention; her amiability and good sense were always uppermost, and her address was able, fully displaying the level-headedness which is her chief characteristic. Mrs. Spencer, president of Alabama W. C. T. U., illumined her surroundings with the sunshine of her face and smile, made every one her friend and helped us in every tangle.

Mrs. M. M. Snell in her Bible readings and sermon was most effective, and with Mrs. M. E. Erwin's motherly assistance set the key-note to a deep spirituality to which in time the audience responded. Miss Frances Griffin early in the action captured her audiences, the mere mention of her name calling forth prolonged applause. Between her sallies of wit and mirth she sent home to all hearts ringing temperance truths, and in her inimitable way broadened their line of thought into somewhat unaccustomed paths.

The men of Greenville insisted that she should stay after convention and for an evening's meeting offered her their beautiful new court-house. Many delegates remained over and we had a regular W. C. T. U. evening. Fully 800 people were present and we read our resolutions to show what we were doing. For two hours Miss Griffin held her audience and Greenville is agreed that "Miss Griffin is a wonderful woman."

Miss Clara Baer, of Sophie Newcomb College, New Orleans, presented physical culture in such a pleasing way that we are sure much good will follow. She also delighted every one with her recitation of "Mammy's Little Baby Boy." Y night, as usual, was the charm of the convention, with our precious Belle Kearney in the chair, and some of the loveliest girls in the state on the platform. Their sweet voices in prayer and song were revelations to the society young men, who tendered their devoted homage. Miss Belle Kearney's address was the most finished paper which came before the convention from a literary standpoint, her womanly grace and fine voice adding intensity to its intrinsic power. We are so proud of her and love her so, and know that if her health is spared in time she will be second to none in our work. God spare her to us.

Our sermon on Sabbath morning was preached by the Rev. J. Knox Montgomery, of Sparta, Ill., who came seven hundred miles to do it! How our hearts thrilled with joy at his brave, strong words. In this section we are dwelling so much on apologetic lines (perhaps I should say explanatory), that it was simply joyful to hear such loyal pleading for us. At night he filled the Presbyterian pulpit and preached one of the grandest sermons from the text, "Thou shalt not kill," that we ever heard. How we wished for a thousand men to hear him. Our unions North and South could not do better than send for him to preach this stirring logical appeal. The men of Greenville said they never dreamed such women were in the W. C. T. U., and offered to pay all our expenses if we would only come back again. So we concluded that we did succeed in winning their good opinions. Mrs. Mount was reëlected president of the state union, while Canton was selected as the next place of meeting. Among the splendid resolutions were the following:

Resolved, That we express our allegiance anew to our beloved president, Frances E. Willard, and that we will constantly cherish her in our hearts and remember her in our prayers.

Resolved, That the W. C. T. U. of Mississippi in annual convention express their continued confidence in the management of the Temple, and their loving faith in Mrs. Carse as the originator of one of the most important enterprises ever undertaken by any woman, which assures to us in the near future an era of substantial financial power and honor far exceeding any other agency ever offered for our support.

Resolved, That we formulate a petition to the Governor of the state requesting that in his proclamation for a special session of the legislature to meet January, 1894, he name, among the subjects for their consideration at this special session, the submission of a constitutional amendment prohibiting forever the licensing of the liquor traffic in Mississippi.

ROYAL F. KING, clerk in the postoffice at Pierre, S., D. and one of the staunchest temperance men, was dismissed May 16, because he had "too much interest in prohibition."

COLORADO.

The past month has been one of conventions and Demorest medal contests. Pueblo and Arapahoe counties characterize their annual gatherings as the best since their organization, the chief attractions of the former being the parliamentary drill by Mrs. Dr. Walter; "Quiz Box" by Mrs. McCaskill, and address by Rev. N. L. Reynolds. The paper by Miss Winifred Spaulding, state corresponding secretary, is worthy of special mention. A memorial service to Mary Allen West was impressive and appropriate. There were twenty unions represented in Arapahoe county with an attendance of about 100 delegates. The treasurer reported a balance of $16, and in addition, $154 had been subscribed for the mission work. The superintendent of railroad work presented a photograph of the employés to the president, Mrs. Cassell, together with a handsome silver mounted gavel from the Denver and Rio Grande company of workers. The following officers were elected,—president, Mrs. M. A. Cassell; vice-president, Mrs. W. H. Wrigley; corresponding secretary, Mrs. S. L. Teetor; recording secretary, Mrs. J. M. Clark; treasurer, Mrs. M. A. Quinn.

The northern district held a delightful assembly of two days at Fort Collins, that was conducted in a graceful, dignified manner by Mrs. Maggie Coffman. Able topics were presented, such as "Narcotics," "Scientific Temperance Instruction," Franchise," "Property Rights of Women" and "Evangelistic Work." An affectionate letter of greeting was sent from the sick room of Mrs. Higgins, our state president, who is daily growing stronger. A memorial service for our late treasurer, Mrs. C. M. Shapleigh, was conducted by Mrs. E. F. Leonard, who also read a message of sympathy from Miss Willard "across the sea," that had been sent in a personal letter to one of the members. Testimonials were added by Mesdames Brazee of Denver; Thompson, of Longmont, and Corbin, of Fort Collins.

The Demorest contest was participated in by five young ladies and three young men. The medal was awarded to Mr. Clark McGavic of Denver (a student in the State Agricultural College at Fort Collins), whose subject was, "The Nation's Curse." An oratorical contest was held in this connection, presided over by Mrs. E. M. Tanner,—the young men receiving a copy of Longfellow's and Hawthorne's poems, their subjects being "License" and "Equal Franchise," the latter by Mr. E. H. Cowen, of Hotchkiss. A pleasing feature of the program were the greetings from Rev. W. H. Martin, pastor of the Presbyterian Church, in behalf of the ministry; from the Young People's Union of the Baptist denomination, Miss M. L. Davis; from the Epworth League, Miss Lillie Silcott; the Woman's Foreign Missionary Society, Mrs. L. M. Kenyon, and for the local W. C. T. U., Mrs. L. G. Carpenter. The response was by Mrs. C. D. H. Thompson. The address of the evening, by Prof. A. B. Copeland, of Greeley, on the subject, "Let us eat, drink and be merry, for to-morrow we die," was replete with bon mots, and a graceful tribute paid to the W. C. T. U.

The all-absorbing theme now is the granting of the ballot to woman that is to be decided by the vote of the people in the fall, the bill having passed both houses of the last legislature, and the following significant resolutions were adopted before adjournment of the convention.

WHEREAS, Our work is trammelled at every point by woman's disfranchisement at municipal and state elections, be it

Resolved, That all women who do not exercise their right to vote at school elections shall be deemed culpable; and be it

Resolved, That we recommend that some speakers from both the Democratic and Republican parties shall be put into the field during the coming campaign for equal suffrage, as carrying great weight with their respective parties, but not to the entire exclusion of women and prohibition speakers.

May 1st was a day of school elections in Denver and its suburbs. The scenes at the polling places were the most remarkable of their kind ever presented. The ladies did more than vote; members of the W. C. T. U. and the Suffrage Association were active all day long, and their presence at the polls exerted a refining influence and did much to make the day quiet and orderly. Ex-Gov. James B. Grant and Mrs. John R. Hanna were elected by handsome pluralities.

The contest for the Demorest silver medal at the First Congregational Church, Denver, was a spirited and well-fought battle. Joseph Choate was the winner; subject: "Political Prohibition the Only Hope of Our Country." The ninth Demorest medal contest, which is the first of the second series, was held at the Opera House, Loveland. The silver medal was awarded to Miss Gillie Hobson.

Boulder union hopes soon to make a second payment on the Temple pledge of $100. Mrs. Wallace, for so many years a leader of white-ribbon forces in Colorado, is still critically ill. Their L. T. L. work, which was unavoidably dropped by the Y's has been continued by the W's. The union has been debating whether to hold a Demorest medal contest. The affirmative having prevailed, the first was given, and the silver medal was awarded Neil McKenzie, Jr., twelve years of age. The affair was so pleasing, viewed from all standpoints, that it was decided to have another.

The president of Salida Y has left to go to Delta, and the Y's have not yet become accustomed to their loss. A social meeting not long since was well attended by the members and their friends. A short Longfellow program was enjoyably rendered. The remainder of the evening was spent in games and conversation. The secretary writes: "We have had something in our column in the semi-weekly Mail every week but one since January 1, and previous to that time every two weeks since the appointment of the Y press superintendent. In the way of entertainments we can do very little, as all of our members but two are in school. Our superintendent of evangelistic work is very faithful, giving one Bible reading every month."

A delightful reception was lately tendered Mrs. S. M. Johnson, nee Miss Vail, an active worker in the state W. C. T. U. of North Carolina, who has so recently come into our midst a bride, by the Leonard union, in the parlors of the Christ M. E. Church, of Denver. Music and recitation enlivened the social hour, followed by ice cream and cake, after which the company was entertained by a short, humorous address, and kind and helpful words were spoken for the W. C. T. U. work by the pastors of the Baptist Church, Rev. Mr. Cameron; Christ M. E. Church, Rev. Mr. Spencer; Presbyterian, Rev. Mr. Johnson. These three churches furnish a large number of members to the union.

The past month the Central union of Denver reports that the treasurer had received $393.72 and expended $336, leaving a balance of $57.72. The superintendent of literature had distributed 1,300 papers and tracts. The aggregate attendance at the Day Nursery was 1,012, average, thirty-four; public calls, 470; receipts, $250; expenses, $250. The kitchengarden had held thirteen regular sessions, with an aggregate attendance of 408; average, 31. The superintendents of the relation of temperance to labor had filled six racks and distributed literature in three unions, and discussed the temperance question in five labor assemblies.

SOUTH DAKOTA.

INGATHERING.

We must watch the clouds grow dark and gather over the hill-tops, must catch the first great drops ourselves and feel the violence of the storm before we can fully appreciate the "beautiful bow of promise" that is revealed by the parting of the clouds. Only a segment, only a broken line at best, appears to us in this changing world.

The "bow" has appeared in South Dakota to the faithful few who have borne the "burden and heat" of the battle of 1893. All along the line come reports of strengthened temperance sentiment, of renewed courage, of loyal and faithful hearts, ready to do valiant work in the cause of right. Lovers of humanity appear in every quarter to hold up the hands of our leaders in this great warfare for the right.

April 12 the interest culminated in a "temperance jubilee," held at Huron. Some fifty delegates gathered there to rejoice over the victory in the legislature and to discuss plans for future work. Mrs. Cranmer and Mrs. Simmons spoke on "Lights and Shadows of Legislative Work." Their addresses were filled with incidents, both pathetic and humorous, which occurred at Pierre during the winter.

The "drug store problem" awakened much discussion and the attention of the attorney-general was called to the complicity of officials with crime—to the fact that in Sioux Falls, Yankton, Pierre, Fort Pierre, Deadwood, Rapid City and some other places, municipal officers have violated their oaths and accepted bribes, under a system of fines, from the violators of law. Honorable mention was made of the president and vice-president of the W. C. T. U. and their faithful supporters, for their self-sacrificing and magnificent service in the conflict against resubmission. It was also emphatically stated in the resolutions adopted by the convention, that the prohibitory law yet preserved to the state, in spite of the wiles of its enemies, and the often lamentable inefficiency of its friends, is a most gratifying success, and that prohibition is the only sound principle upon which civil society can possibly stand.

A committee of five was appointed by the convention to be known as a "convention committee" whose duty it shall be to make arrangements for the holding of conven-

Mrs. Eugene Steere, our state treasurer, has moved to Fort Pierre. She reports an excellent union there, and a promising L. T. L. under the efficient leadership of Mrs. Jeffries, one of those self-sacrificing women, who with ten children of her own still finds time and strength to help others. It is said that the anti-temperance men of Fort Pierre fear that "the saloon must go" —if Mrs. Steere remains a resident of the place. Speed the day!

New unions have been formed at Elk Point, Meckling and Alcester, or rather old ones reorganized. Mrs. C. A. Clark is president of a union just organized in McPherson county.

Mrs. Anna Simmons, vice-president of the state union, has recently made a trip to Minnesota, speaking sixteen times. Mrs. Cranmer held over twenty meetings in the first district in two weeks. The school of methods at Madison, July 10 to 18, is to be led by Mrs. J. N. Parks of Atlanta, Georgia. Lincoln county held its county convention, April 25-29. A gold medal contest netted over forty dollars. Lincoln county has voted to adopt Mrs. Mary H. Hunt's Monthly Advices in all its schools.

The union at Ipswich has $100 ready to send to the Temple fund. Mrs. M. A. Robinson's beautiful song is recommended by our president as our battle hymn. Hughes county convention will be held at Pierre, June 6 and 7. An interesting program has been prepared.

THE FAIR AND THE SABBATH.

The Chicago Directory of the World's Fair has refused to obey the United States Congress and close the Exposition on Sabbath, and thus becomes a lawless rebel. We greatly overestimate President Cleveland if he does not exercise the necessary power to compel obedience, even if it requires a regiment of soldiers. The country is in earnest and will stand by the President who puts down rebellion whether it be in the North or the South.

We expect to see the gates closed by authority, and until this is done, we hope every white-ribboner, yes, every loyal citizen whatever his views on the Sabbath question, will refuse to countenance by his presence such anarchistic lawlessness. No member of the W. C. T. U., no Christian, no patriot, we are sure, can do less than to stay outside the gates. Fortunately the wonderful World's Congresses are held in the city proper. We trust multitudes will attend these and still show sufficient spinal courage to omit the Fair.

The country has been proud of Chicago, it has had the chance of the century to cover itself with glory, but through its Directory it has chosen dishonor and must reap disgrace. A Christian nation is now on trial, will the government maintain its honor and thus set an example to the Illinois legislature to enforce its anti-liquor laws? Will Christian people actually show the regard for the sacred day which they have professed?

The Directory evidently believes there is not principle enough to keep many from the Fair, while we believe if they try the experiment long enough, financial ruin will be their punishment.

It is providential that this Sabbath question should be so long kept at the front, that it should be shown that Sabbath breaking and lawlessness are closely related and that Christians should be compelled to act upon their theories and thus be able to judge themselves as others will judge them. We have not only the chance to measure our own regard for the sacred day, and to bear our testimony, but have also a duty laid upon us to help educate and mold public sentiment on the broad Sabbath question, as rapidly as possible in all our communities. Such an opportunity for effective work by public meetings and literature, as has now developed may not come again in a life-time and we hope it will not be neglected.

Prayer—constant and faith filled, should ascend from all our hearts continually, that the Lord of the Sabbath will preserve the day at the World's Fair and every W. C. T. U. convention or other religious or reform gathering, should pass strong resolutions and publish them, sending copies also to President Cleveland and President Palmer, of the National Commission at Chicago.

DEPARTMENT OF MERCY.

It is a long time since a word has been said about this department by your superintendent but it is not because the work has ceased. Special efforts have this year been made in the direction of legislation in Pennsylvania. After considerable preliminary work with petitions, circulars, letters, etc., in which a number of good W. C. T. U. women helped greatly, a bill was introduced into both houses of the legislature in January, asking that experiments on live animals to demonstrate physiological facts already known, whether as an illustration before classes or not, be prohibited; the reasons set forth being that such demonstrations are often extremely cruel through the absence of anæsthetics or their imperfect administration; that they tend to harden and demoralize the young men and young women who witness them; and that they are unnecessary as a means of teaching.

These efforts and a number of personal visits to the capital, resulted in the passage of the bill by the Senate early in April, the vote being unanimous. But now a violent opposition began. Some of the Philadelphia doctors regarded the bill as an interference with their teaching privileges in the colleges. Vivisectional demonstration is much more likely to "interest" the student than lectures illustrated by anatomical and clinical observation only. The late Henry J. Bigelow, M. D., Professor of Surgery in Harvard University, said, "Watch the students at a vivisection. It is the blood and suffering, not the science, which rivets their breathless attention."

This kind of teaching is popular. If the legislature of Pennsylvania made it illegal so to teach in the schools and colleges of the state, students might seek other places of learning. The University of Pennsylvania might be less sought than now. The doctors therefore declared that such a law as we proposed would hinder the progress of science,—would even put a stop to "original research." No one explained how original research could be stopped by forbidding the demonstration of well known physiological facts by the constant repetition of painful experiments on animals; but the majority of the House committee to which the bill had been referred (and which had already once reported it negatively) were convinced that the doctors could not be wrong, and apparently did not think themselves competent to do their own thinking on the moral side of the question.

On the evening of April 5, a hearing of the argument on both sides was given, not only by the committee, which remained in the hall of the house of representatives for the purpose, but by almost all the members, they staying to hear the discussion. Your superintendent and Mrs. White, the corresponding secretary of the American anti-Vivisection Society—the work having been done in coöperation with the latter—had decided to invite the presence of two physicians known to be opposed to scientific cruelty, but neither of them could make it convenient to be present, so the committee and the House of Representatives and the six doctors who spoke in opposition to the bill (nine came), had to be faced by two women with no support but the invisible arm of God. The need of a law was shown to the legislators by the relation of terrible cruelties perpetrated before students in the great university and other schools of their own state, and they were also reminded—with proof—of the hardening and demoralizing results. They were shown these things as calmly and dispassionately as might be.

But the vehement and angry doctors fighting for the preservation of their privileges and holding up to ridicule "hysterical" persons who care for "a few cats and dogs," and denying in the face of the strongest proof that cruelties are practiced, won the day, only five of the committee afterward voting in favor of the bill. It was a hardly fought battle, and lasted till late at night. It seemed very lonely, but even the defeat had in it an element of victory, for a stronger assurance of being right—on God's side—never was given than in that hour, and in that assurance there is courage to begin even now, plans for the work of future campaigns.

National Superintendent.

ANNOUNCEMENT.

DOMINION W. C. T. U. CONVENTION.

By invitation of the Provincial W. C. T. U. of Manitoba, the sixth convention of the National W. C. T. U. of the Dominion of Canada will be held (D. V.) in the city of Winnipeg, June 16th to 20th, 1893. As the Manitoba Provincial W. C. T. U. will be in session for two days immediately preceding, it is probable that our usual ante-convention Executive will have to be held early in the morning of June 16th.

According to Article III, of the Constitution, the basis of representation will be as follows:—"The Annual Convention shall be composed of the executive committee and the provincial corresponding and recording secretaries and treasurer, one delegate at large from each auxiliary province, and one delegate for every one hundred paying members of auxiliary provincial unions." The local union in Winnipeg will provide entertainment for all officers and delegates. The secretary will make the best possible arrangements as to reduction in railway fares, of which due notice will be given in the Woman's Journal. It now seems probable that delegates from provinces east of Ontario will do best to procure return tickets.

All will regret that Lady Henry Somerset, Miss Willard and Miss Gordon will not be able to accept our invitation to be present, but a talented lady speaker is expected. Daily Bible Readings will be given, and a short School of Methods held; also, if possible, a Children's Meeting.

A prize banner will be presented by the president to the Province showing the highest percentage of increase in paying membership since the last convention, the banner to be held until the following convention, when it will again be similarly awarded, the award each year to be based on the report of the treasurer of the Dominion W. C. T. U.

We urge all members of the Executive and all delegates to make special efforts to be present at this our first meeting west of Toronto; and we appeal to every white-ribboner in Canada to offer earnest, fervent prayer to God that His blessing may rest on this convention, and that it may, in all respects, be conducted according to His will.

NATIONAL TEMPERANCE HOSPITAL NOTES.

Another room is being furnished at the hospital, and this time it is done at the bidding of the W. C. T. U. of the state of Ohio.

Miss Gregory, secretary of the state W. C. T. U. of Illinois, is at present at the hospital, and it is hoped that the care and attention she may receive, accompanied with a much needed rest, will soon restore her to perfect health. The hospital is a quiet, restful and homelike place, and with its non-alcoholic medication treatment is a pleasant place for temperance workers.

While visiting in Chicago, Mrs. Thurston, state treasurer of the W. C. T. U. of Kansas, severely sprained her wrist and sought treatment at the hospital. She spent some thing more than a week in this institution, and on leaving had many kind words to say for the attendant nurse and physician.

The representative world is in Chicago, and in the moments of leisure looks here and there for people and institutions that have become known through their works. During these weeks of incoming, many friends—those from our own country and from foreign nations—have been welcomed at the hospital, and we hope during the coming months many more will enter its hospitable doors. Among the distinguished visitors of last week were Mrs. Bedford Fenwick, president of the British Royal Commission of England, and Mrs. Du Page, London. These friends in the hurry of this Western city, had the kindness to address the nurses and friends, telling of the causes that led to the organization of the nurses training school, and the work these nurses were accomplishing after graduation. The hospital of England was also pictured. These friends brought words of cheer, encouragement and information, for now we have a better understanding of the scope of the English hospital and the duties of the English nurse.

Quite a variety of interesting cases have been treated at the hospital during the month, among the more important ones being sclerosis of the liver, carcinoma of the stomach. Tetanus, from stepping on a nail, and chorea, besides many others of the more common variety of disease. There have also been a number of major and minor operations.

Any one desiring cans to fill with fruit for the hospital can have the same by addressing Mrs. Hornby, 1619 Diversey Ave. All supplies should be sent to the above address, while any one sending money should send it to Mrs. C. E. Rigelow, treasurer, 539 W. Adams St.

The following supplies have been received: Waterloo, N. Y., W. C. T. U., 13 cans fruit, 6 glasses jelly, old cotton. Unknown, 12 cans fruit, 4 glasses jelly. Aaron Rock, Mo., W. C. T. U., 70 quarts fruit, 12 glasses jelly. Unknown, 4 cans fruit, 2 glasses jelly, one half bushel dried apples. Vernon Center, Minnesota W. C. T. U., 2 rugs, 4 towels, 6 napkins, 2 nightshirts, 2 cotton blankets, 1 table cloth, 6 cans fruit, 6 glasses

THE FLOWERS' MESSAGE.

BY JENNIE A. STEWART.

E cull ye, oh, ye dainty flowers,
That bloom in bright array,
To cheer and soothe the downcast hearts
Of the sick and sad to-day.

The sufferers would feel, we know,
If the flowers were no more,
As if locked in a dungeon deep,
And God had shut the door!

In you they read the message
From you the lesson learn,
Of the loving, Heavenly Father
To whom they grateful turn.

As the sun is to our globe,—
Transmitting light and heat,
Giving it the pleasant seasons
To make its round complete,—

Are the flowers to the sick ones,
Who thus receive the glow
Of the lovely, outdoor world
Which they may never know.

Then gather we the blossoms,
And to them add a thought
From the Book of Books the dearest
That was ever read or taught.

For vain would be our efforts
Bearing clusters bright and gay
To the suffering and patient ones
"Shut in" this glad June day,

If we omit His loving call—
Whose disciples we're professed—
"Come to me, ye heavy laden
And I will give you rest."

This is more than all the flowers
On which the sun has shone,
For the Spirit's fruits may still be ours
When earth's fair bloom is gone!

A LITTLE TEMPERANCE BAND.

BY MABEL GIFFORD.

Lute and Pip and Shorty huddled close together on the sunny side of Buzzard street one bleak day in May, and stretched their hands and feet out in the warm sunshine, while the chill wind blew their ragged garments about and combed their tangled hair. Lute was tall and bony, and her black eyebrows frowned at the sunshine while she spread her hands to catch the warmth. Shorty was short, and sullen-faced, and Pip, the smallest and thinnest and palest of the three.

"He's worser all the time, ain't he, Lute?" said Shorty in a voice as sullen as his face, and glancing up at a window well stuffed with rags in the fourth story of the black wooden wall opposite; "he's worser'n my parp. An' he hit her bad this time."

"Yes;" Lute's voice was harsh with anger and grief. "She can't come down any more."

"An' it was the drink did it?"

Lute nodded.

"An' it's the drink makes us cold, an' makes us have nothin' to eat, and no clo'es," said Shorty.

Lute nodded.

"An' would our parps be like what she (glancing up at the fourth story window) told us her parp was 'fore he took the drink?"

Lute nodded.

"An' would we live where everything's green an' all colors, all covered over with flowers? An'—"

Lute sprang to her feet with such a frown that Pip crouched behind Shorty, and Shorty still staring hard at the bricks declared, "They don't never get any of that all-fired stuff inter me."

Lute's face brightened, and Pip taking courage, said in a little piping voice, "Le's we be a band."

"Hooray!" shouted Lute, clapping her red hands, and giving a jump into the air—her highest sign of approval.

"We're pretty ragged for a band," said Shorty.

"Anyhow," piped Pip plaintively, "we're Jesus' band jest the same, 'cause she"—glancing up at the window—"did say so in the song, you know."

"She was a Y," said Lute thoughtfully, without looking up. "Why did they go so far down, I wonder? Why didn't they begin at the top an' call themselves the A's?"

"I know," piped Pip eagerly, "it tells in the book she read to us, it's 'bout the first bein' last an' the last bein' first."

"Well, it's queer," said Lute, smoothing her knees, "s'pose we be the Z's, then; nobody can't get ahead of that on bein' last."

"If we're a band we must promise suthin'," said Shorty solemnly.

"Of course," said Lute; "we'll promise never to take a drop of the drink, never."

Then Lute informed them that they must "sign somethin'," pulling out of her pocket some carefully preserved pieces of white bills. She selected the largest of these, made some mysterious marks on it and signed two big capitals for her name; then made two big capitals for each of the boys' names.

"This is the promise," she said, pointing to the strange characters, "and these are our names. Now you make the marks I tell you after your names, that will mean that you say the letters are your name and that you have promised the promise.

"That is an amen," she said after the boys had made the marks, pointing to a long black line below the names, "There's always an amen to everything, an' I thought we'd better have a big one."

After this solemn performance the band returned to the more cheerful street, and curled up again in the sunny doorway.

"I wish," said Pip plaintively, "that us might find a meetin' place like she used to go to."

"She said there mus' be a place round here somew'ares," said Shorty.

"Le's go somew'ares."

So the trio, forgetting the cold, started up the street. In and out, up and down the neighboring streets they tramped, looking sharply at all the doors and windows.

At last Lute paused before a door on which was displayed a big square white sign with bright blue letters on it, which she unceremoniously opened.

"What's it say?" she demanded of the somewhat startled young woman who was in there, pointing to the sign.

"It says, 'Come in,' " answered the young woman in a pleasant voice.

"Be you a Y?" was the next question.

"Yes, indeed."

"Is this a singin' place?"

"Yes."

"An' a readin' place an' a prayin' place?"

The young woman nodded and smiled.

"Come on!" ordered Lute with a sweep of her arm toward the door, where Shorty was staring in with a solemn face and Pip behind him was peeping from under his arm. "This's the place."

The boys came in shyly. "We're a band. We're the Z's," said Lute with dignity, and producing the scrap of paper she had written on, explained the origin of the Z's.

She placed chairs and brought the children each a bun and a cup of warm milk. The room was a palace to the Z's, and the stove full of "little winders" that let the red light out, was a great wonder.

Afterward they tramped slowly down the street with a sweet bouquet apiece, and counting on their fingers:

"Sunday, singin' meetin'; Tuesday, pray meetin'; Thursday, singin' meetin'. An' come in any day an' do what we're a mind to."

"Won't she be glad for these flowers?" said Pip. And as they turned into Buzzard street, he added, "Le's sing it, her song."

"Jesus does lu-uv littel ones like me."

The discordant tones were the heavenliest harmony that ever had been heard in Buzzard street. Windows opened and doors creaked. The lookers-out saw only Lute, Shorty and Pip, but the young woman in the room behind the blue sign saw a little flower mission band marching up the street.

Abington, Mass.

Flower mission time again, dear boys and girls! The 9th of June is near at hand and you (especially those who have temperance mothers and sisters) will remember that is the day appointed by Miss Jennie Casseday for especial flower mission work—to carry beautiful bouquets of bright, sweet smelling flowers to the sick ones in their homes, in hospitals, infirmaries, asylums and jails. A Scripture card is tied to these bouquets by a bow of white ribbon to remind those who receive them of the love of the kind Heavenly Father who cares for them always. Much joy is carried into many sad lives in this way. Miss Casseday, the patient and sweet invalid who did so much for others through the flower mission, passed into "God's temple of the flowers" last February and has left to others to carry on the beautiful work of scattering the flowers.

Can you help? In countless ways! Indeed you can be a whole flower mission in yourselves; for everybody will give you freely of their floral treasures if you tell them of your purpose.

Yours to help and gladden other lives,

Aunt Jane

A STATEMENT.

It is with deep regret that we find a necessity laid upon us to make a public statement concerning our connection with the Harvey Hotel, in which entertainment shares have been extensively sold.

In planning for the hotel built last year, which was burned in January, 1893, Walter Thomas Mills sought to associate with himself and other gentlemen of note, the names of Mrs. Mary T. Lathrap, president Michigan W. C. T. U., Mrs. Clara C. Hoffman, president Missouri W. C. T. U. and Mrs. Mary A. Woodbridge, recording secretary of National W. C. T. U.; also in indorsement, that of Miss Esther Pugh, treasurer National W. C. T. U., and others more or less prominent in the ranks of the organization. Mr. Mills, as an ordained minister of the gospel, an active and efficient worker in the temperance field, prominently and most acceptably associated with the amendment campaign work of Ohio, had the confidence of all these women, as of a vast host throughout the country, and nothing arose to disturb such confidence on our part, until some time after the burning of the hotel; indeed, the courage and perseverance manifested by Mr. Mills in that trial brought increased respect.

We could but note the fact that plans were made for rebuilding the hotel, new and repeated circulars were sent out assuring the complete fulfillment of promises previously made, but the work was not begun. The extreme cold of the season, the heavy snow and flood that followed, seemed however, reason enough for this, and not until three months ago did suspicion of wrong on Mr. Mills' part enter our minds.

That no injustice might be done him or those associated with him, watchfulness and necessarily slow investigation followed. Neither of us were ready to believe there was intentional evil. Neither was constantly in Chicago. Mrs. Hoffman but rarely, and communication was not frequent between us. Meeting here, we sought an interview with Mr. Mills, and asked the real status of affairs. Without the slightest provocation he flew into a passion in an instant, but after sharp rebuke changed his manner to fawning and during the conversation assured us "the company was at that moment worth $200,000, and the before-mentioned hindrances to building being now removed, everything would move on to the completion of the work by May 1st, the date of the opening of the Fair," and added further, that "a great number of workmen were on the ground and much labor was being performed." A visit to Harvey, and conversation with persons from there, proved these statements to be utterly false. Difficulties multiplied.

A legal adviser was secured. Mrs. Hoffman came from New Jersey to Chicago and we demanded that our names be removed from all circulars, papers or manifestoes of the company to which Mr. Mills acceded, and probably as evidence of sincerity, the stationery was changed, but we are informed (and we believe credibly) that our names have, wholly unknown to ourselves, been used at least to a late date. Our sorrow to-day is, that by the association of our names with the scheme many have been led to disappointment and loss.

CLARA C. HOFFMAN.

Our Library Table.

The June issue of JENNESS MILLER ILLUSTRATED MONTHLY is replete with entertaining features. There is an endless amount of good reading for both men and women. One of the most interesting articles describes a visit to Sir Frederick Leighton. There are stories, poems, fashions and articles describing dainty work for women in summer.

Jenness Miller Co., 927 Broadway, N. Y. City.

THE NATIONAL TEMPERANCE HERALD is a vigorous sixteen-page monthly journal, the organ of the National Bi-chloride of Gold Company. Edited by Mark M. Thompson, M. D., and Associate Editor Richard S Martin, D. D., with a list of well-known special contributors. It is prepared to deal telling blows of truth at the foe of intemperance.

Published by the National Temperance Herald Pub. Co., Nos. 17 to 21 Quincy St. Chicago.

THE QUARTERLY JOURNAL OF INEBRIETY in its last issue contains a detailed account of the Special Meeting of the Association for the Study and Cure of Inebriety, held at the hall of the New York Academy of Medicine, New York City, March 23, 1893. The topic for discussion was the "Secret and Specific Cures for Alcohol and Opium Inebriety." The opening address of Dr. Day, the presiding officer, is given in full, together with able papers by Dr. Norman Kerr, president of the English Society for the Study and Cure of Inebriety; Dr. E. C. Mann, president of the New York Academy of Anthropology; Harold N. Moyer, M. D., of Rush Medical College, Chicago; T. D. Crothers, D. D., the editor of the JOURNAL OF INEBRIETY, with other professional men of note.

Published at Hartford, Conn.

A subject of great and growing importance, that of "Irrigation in the Arid States" has the first place in THE POPULAR SCIENCE MONTHLY for June. The article is by Charles Howard Shinn, who describes practical methods and their results. Herbert Spencer's essay on "The Inadequacy of Natural Selection," is concluded in this issue. John Hawkins has an article on "The Ceremonial Use of Tobacco." "An Ethnologic Study of the Yuruks," by Alcide T. M. d'Andria, is an illustrated description of this people, their features, dress and dwellings. Under the title, "Modern Miracles," Prof. E. P. Evans describes some of the astonishing feats of Arabian and Hindu fakirs. George L. Kilmer describes "The Phenomena of Death in Battle." In "The Revival of Witchcraft," some of the later developments of hypnotism are shown to be based on fraud and delusion. The article is by Dr. Ernest Hart, who has examined most of the famous hypnotic subjects in Paris. Sir Archibald Geike is the subject of the usual sketch and portrait in this excellent magazine.

D. Appleton & Co., New York City.

With the June number of the HOMILETIC REVIEW, vol. xxv comes to its close. It is rich in the material which it offers to its readers. The Review Section contains several articles of special interest. Prof. John J. McCook, of Trinity College, treats the subject, "Practical Politics: What Can Clergymen do about it?" "The Monthly Concert: How can it be made most Interesting and Helpful?" is the question discussed by Dr. Arthur T. Pierson, the capable editor of the Missionary Review of the World. The Rev. John F. Humphreys tells what "Woman's Work in the Church" is. An instructive paper by Rev. Jesse W. Brooks, gives "Extra-Biblical Evidence of the Primitive Sabbath." Dr. William Hayes Ward tells the story of the "Syrians and Assyrians in Cilicia," as throwing light on certain Scriptural references to those peoples. The Sermonic Section is as usual full of suggestive homiletic matter. In the Exegetical Section Dr. Talbot W. Chambers discusses the "Growth of the Decalogue," and Dr. Tryon Edwards treats the passages of Scripture that speak of "The Sons of God." "Sociology and its Bearings" is the title of an article by Rev. J. H. Hartman in the Sociological Section. The Miscellaneous Section contains "The Present Aspect and Liabilities of the Christian Endeavor Movement," by Rev. George H. Payson, "Figures and Illustrations in Public Speech," by Rev. G. B. F. Hallock, "The Great European Cathedrals," by Dr. J. B. Remensnyder, and "The Salvation Army's Music," by Ch. Crozat Converse. The value of the HOMILETIC REVIEW to ministers can hardly be overstated. As a help in the preparation of sermons it is indispensable.

Published monthly by the Funk & Wagnalls Company, 18 and 20 Astor Place, New York.

THE ADVANCE GUARD FOR MAY.

The Advance Guard for May is of especial interest to hundreds of the young people whose dimes have helped pay for the beautiful Willard fountain. This number contains a faithful representation of the sweet-faced girl who stands with outstretched arms to give a cup of cold water "in His name" to the thirsty people who during the hot summer days will bless the donors as they honor the grand woman for whom the boys and girls have given this blessed memorial. Read of other wonders of the White City in the Advance Guard and remember that for the nominal sum of 50c. you can receive that magazine an entire year.

WHAT MEANS THIS STONE.

A most beautiful booklet with cover having these words entwined with delicately tinted apple-blossoms, has just been issued.

The illustrations of the poem written by Mrs. Mary T. Lathrap on the laying of the corner-stone of the Temple were designed in Germany and lend an added beauty to the words, bringing out more vividly the prophetic vision expressed in the lines,

"We give thee to thy mission sweet,
With lavish wealth of love complete,
Nor count the sum.
Who knows but on the altar place
May shine the glory of His face
When Jesus comes!"

Visitors will find it very desirable to take home as a souvenir of the Temple. Mailed to any address, nicely boxed, for 60c.

ARE YOU Sterilizing Baby's Milk?

MISS CLARA A. PENNISTON, Graduate of Mack Training School, St. Catherines, Ont., who has had the good fortune to nurse under some of the most eminent and painstaking physicians in New York City, writes: "I believe the sterilization of milk the greatest advance of the age. Babies are fortunate who are born since its introduction. My reasons for preferring sterilized milk to any other artificial food are that I have never yet seen a baby who did not thrive on it, and gain from eight to fourteen ounces a week of good solid flesh. Let me emphasize this, as babies fed on condensed milk for example gain, but are white and flabby, and have not any stamina when taken ill. WHAT SCIENCE HAS DONE FOR DEAFNESS.

Transmitting Sound to the Ear by the Use of a Simple Device.

There is little doubt but that the treatment of deafness has been revolutionized by the invention of Sound Discs. The development and growth of the use of this device is phenomenal, and is well worthy the attention it has received in medical circles, where it has been widely discussed and most heartily approved. A prominent physician has gone so far as to estimate that fully three-quarters of all the deafness which has been relieved in the United States during the past two years has been by the aid of this instrument; and he considers it an easy triumph over this most distressing affliction.

While the idea of such an instrument is not strictly new, yet the restoration of such a large number of desperate and abandoned cases by its use has proven it to be of vastly more importance than was at first supposed. A recent interview with the inventor of the instrument, Mr. H. A. Wales, at his office in Ashland Block, Chicago, discloses how the idea of such an ingenious instrument occurred to him. It was learned that it was first suggested from the fact that most people who suffer from defective hearing, hear better in a noise, or on a moving train, which is caused by the increased vibration of the ear. From this Mr. Wales said he was confident that he could invent a device which could be worn with comfort by the patient, and which would focus the smaller waves of sound on the drumhead, thus increasing its vibration, and enabling the patient to hear ordinary conversation and public speaking. After many experiments the final outcome of this happy thought has been the present device, which must be an ideal one, as it is worn in the ear out of sight for months at a time.

WORLD'S TEMPERANCE CONGRESS.

Those from the East attending the World's Temperance Congress at Chicago, on June 5th, can see more of this country, can travel amid more historical associations, and can gaze upon more picturesque scenery by coming by the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad than by any other route. All of its trains between New York and the West pass through Washington, traverse the famous Potomac Valley, the theater of the war between the states, and cross the Alleghanies, nearly 3,000 feet above the sea level, and stop at Deer Park and Oakland, the world-famed resorts. All B. & O. express trains are vestibuled and carry Pullman sleeping cars. For detailed information as to rates, time of trains, apply to nearest B. & O. agent, or to Chas. O. Scull, General Passenger Agent, Baltimore, Md.

JUNE CRUSADER.

The June Crusader opens with a thrilling article by Mrs. R. C. Way, entitled "Swept away—A Story of the Johnstown Flood." The illustration is strikingly effective, picturing a cabin interior with an aged, anxious grandmother, and a pale, wistful boy peering out into the blackness, and nervously watching the rushing waters in the flooded streets of Johnstown. The story is so well told that the eyes will fill with tears and the lips quiver at the recital of the destruction by the Conemaugh flood and the comparison with "the black, seething flood of intemperance" is eloquently drawn.

A column upon "Flower Mission Day" follows with a touching letter from Jennie Casseday.

The Crusader supplement has a list of contributions to the Willard fountain fund from March 6, to May 1, 1893.

The instructive story of "Baby Christopher" is continued in this number, and there is a pretty prophecy for flower mission day—"The Voices of the Flowers." The influence of a child is revealed by Helen Somerville, in "A Young Crusader's Prayer." Send early for the June number of this interesting publication for young people. One copy per annum only 15c. One hundred copies $1.

Signal Notes.

SWEDEN leads the world in the matter of school gardens, having no fewer than two thousand, one for nearly every recently built rural school.

THROUGH the agency of the Missions to Seamen Society, over five thousand sailors have been enrolled as total abstainers in Cork Harbor, alone.

GOUT is largely caused by the introduction of stout as a beverage. It is also stated that from fifty to seventy-five per cent of the cases are hereditary.

THE statement that suddenly enforced abstinence kills, is not borne out by facts. The death rate in prisons is only eight in every thousand, a much lower rate than in towns.

THE Baroness Burdett-Coutts is said to be the only woman created a peeress by reason of her public services. She is also the first to have received the freedom of the city of London, an honor only conferred on men before and since.

LEIGH HUNT stated that war or the sending thousands of one's fellow creatures to cut one another to bits, often for what they had no concern in, will some time be considered far more absurd than if people settled an argument over the dinner-table with knives.

THE legislature of Quebec has passed a law prohibiting the sale of tobacco to boys under eighteen years of age. Boys under fifteen will be imprisoned or fined when found using the weed. How about the fathers who set the fifteen-year-old boys the example?

THE number of suicides in France seem to bear an important relation to the amount of alcohol consumed. One hundred and thirty-seven suicides to five hundred thousand hectolitres of alcohol from 1836 to 1840, and eight hundred and sixty-eight suicides to 1,800,000 hectolitres of alcohol in 1880 to 1885, tell their own story.

THE Helping Hand Visitors' Club, with headquarters in New York City, was organized to bring together two classes of young women, those having homes in the country who would receive a well-recommended young woman from the city, and those who are employed in the city whose means are too small to allow them to take an outing, but who would sew or otherwise help in return for their board.

DR. BARNARDO's home for destitute children have now within their walls nearly five thousand otherwise homeless and destitute children—the very largest family of waif children in the world. Since the foundation of this home over twenty-seven years ago, twenty-three thousand children have been rescued from the perils of orphanhood and the dangers of the street. The doors are open day and night all the year round, and no destitute child who has applied for admission has been refused. This action has been irrespective of the age, sex, creed, nationality or physical condition of the applicants.

A CASE of fidelity to principle is reported from a large city in Texas, where a prominent railroad officer lost his position because of his efforts to close the saloons on Sunday. The liquor dealers boycotted the railroad because they retained an officer who as a private citizen endeavored to enforce the laws of his land. Finally the railroad decided not to endure the boycott longer, and gave the officer in question the choice of retiring from the Sunday closing committee or resigning his railroad position. He nobly chose the latter and now the Christian people of his city (San Antonio) have declared war against the saloon.

Purchaser or Patient?

There's a great difference in these relations. The person who visits a drug store for a box of pills, is simply a purchaser. You pay your money and take your pills—without advice, and without recourse Not so with those who invest in Drs. Starkey & Palen's Compound Oxygen. They are patients from the first. No treatment is sold without such thorough knowledge of the case as any first-class physician would expect. The purchase of a Treatment carries with it the privilege of consultation and advice during its use, which covers two to three months, also the furnishing of any supplementary medicine that may be needed in that period. Among their more than 60,000 recorded cases, these specialists recall few, if any, that have lacked the most pleasant relation of physician and patient. Their purchasers are their patients, and their patients their friends.

A history of the discovery of Compound Oxygen, its mode of action, and a large record of its surprising cures of Consumption, Catarrh, Neuralgia, Bronchitis, Asthma, Nervous Prostration and a wide range of diseases, will be mailed free, on application to Drs. STARKEY & PALEN, 1529 Arch street, Philadelphia, or Chicago, San Francisco, New York and Toronto, Ont.

TENTH PRIZE.

The play that evening was Macbeth,
And Uncle Josh with bated breath,
Had watched with eyes amazed and keen
Until the famed Sleep-walking Scene;

When Lady Macbeth strives to blot
From her stained hands the damned spot,
And as she washed them in the air,
And cried out at the blood still there;

Then Uncle Josh asked one near by,
"What makes that woman swear and cry,
An' wring her hands an' go on so?
What's on 'em I'd jes' like to know?"

"It's Duncan's blood," the man replied,
"She strives the fearful stains to hide."
"Why don't she wash her hands, b'gosh!
With Ivory Soap?" cried Uncle Josh.

CALIFORNIA.

The fame of the climate of California draws to that charming state new friends every year, particularly from sections where long, severe winters, followed by trying spring seasons, work such disastrous results among the weak and debilitated.

The great improvements in passenger train service, higher degrees of comfort in the cars, and shorter time required on the trip, combined with the cheapness of the excursion tickets now being sold to California and back by the Santa Fé Route, make the journey agreeable and, one can almost say, economical. The many delightful resorts now established in California afford every comfort and luxury desired by the fastidious, and present unique attractions.

The Hotel del Coronado at San Diego, the Raymond at Pasadena, the Redondo at Redondo Beach and the hotels at Santa Barbara, Monterey, Riverside, Los Angeles and many other points, have grown as famous as any on the Atlantic Coast—and a fact that should not be forgotten is that they are resorts all the year around, although the greatest number of people from the East are in California between the months of November and May.

Write to John J. Byrne, Asst. Passenger Traffic Manager, 723 Monadnock Block, Chicago, Ill., if you are interested in California, and he will send you some reading matter.

The British House of Commons is still debating the Home Rule bill.

The anniversary of Garibaldi's death was observed at Rome last Friday.

The World's Temperance Congress opened in the Memorial Art Palace, Chicago, last Monday.

The Christian Endeavor Missionary Institute opened its sessions at Hotel Endeavor, Windsor Park, Ill., June 2.

Terms of peace have been signed in Nicaragua, and the new president, Machado, has begun the disarming of troops.

A Panama cablegram last Thursday says that work on the canal will be continued, fifty million francs having been raised for the purpose.

A special cabinet meeting at Washington to consider the financial situation of the country was announced by the newspapers for last Tuesday.

The fact that the president of the whisky trust was unable to negotiate bonds in Chicago last week is taken as an indication of the early dissolution of the combination.

By vote of the 105th Presbyterian General Assembly at Washington, D. C., Friday, Prof. Chas. Briggs of Union Seminary, New York, was suspended from the ministry of that denomination.

An anti-trust convention met at Chicago, June 5, on call of Governor Nelson, of Minnesota, delegates being appointed by the governor of each state and territory to discuss the best plan of combating monopolies.

THE World's Congress on Vegetarianism, which meets in Chicago, June 8, presents a program of great interest. One topic is particularly relevant to our work, "Vegetarianism the Final Solution of the Drink Question," by Miss May Yates, organizing secretary of the London Vegetarian Society. This will be read Thursday evening and we hope to secure it for our readers.

AT THE invitation of Mr. D. L. Moody, college women of this and other lands will meet at Northfield, June 22-29, for conference on Bible study and Christian work. For seven years the college young men have met here, and a similar conference of college young women will be of equal value and inspiration. There will be two courses in Bible study: Inductive study, led by Mr. Robert E. Speer, New York City, and Workers' Training Classes, by Mr. James McConaughy, Mt. Hermon. In daily conferences the problems of Christian work among young women in colleges and cities will be discussed. The afternoons will be free for athletics. These will be under the direction of Miss Mary Dunn of Kansas City. Strong platform speakers are being secured from among the prominent men and women from this country and abroad. The privileges of the conference are open to college women, to members of young people's societies of churches, to members of Young Women's Christian Associations, and to all interested in the progress of Christian work among young women.

A SECRET anti-prohibition society has been organized in Kansas, having the high sounding title, "The Army of Liberty" ("personal liberty," of course). The oath of its ritual is most solemn and binding, and its purpose is to elect to office only whisky men, regardless of party names, in order to defeat the enforcement of prohibition, and to secure the repeal of the law as soon as they can do so. This is evidently the answer to our query of "What next?" which THE UNION SIGNAL has been propounding, and is the same old whisky dragon in another form.

MRS. SIGRID MAGNUSSON of Iceland, wife of the Professor of Icelandic literature at Cambridge University, who translated the Sagas with William Morris, has been appointed vice-president for Iceland of the World's W. C. T. U. Mrs. Magnusson is a total abstainer and will introduce white-ribbon work into her island where she has founded a girls' school, the only one of high grade among 7,000 inhabitants. She is now in America to speak at the World's Congresses and to work in the interest of her school. Miss Willard has given her credentials as a delegate to the International Temperance Congress.

THE following incident from the New York Sun emphasizes the need of our W. C. T. U. department for securing homes for homeless children: An institutional child, bred in the tenement house region of New York, was taken into a rural household, where her ignorance of all sorts of common things excited the surprise of those with whom she came in contact. She knew little more of the city than she knew of ordinary domestic affairs, and she said that she had gone out but once a week. Another child, brought up in a New York apartment house, upon looking down a well in the country at once asked whether the janitor lived down there.

MRS. NARCISSA WHITE KINNEY, of Astoria, Oregon, has been chosen to succeed Miss Mary Allen West in the department of the school of methods, the object of which is to instruct women who wish to enter upon the temperance work as to its methods and plans. It is customary to hold sessions of this school at summer camps, "Chautauquas," seaside resorts, and in connection with conventions and conferences of good people who meet to discuss great causes. Mrs. Kinney very appropriately says in her circular recently issued, "Each of us realizes that no department can be more important than that of the 'school of methods.' It is the Corliss engine that sets in operation all the other departments. More temperance societies fail in efficiency for want of knowing practically how to work than for lack of knowing what lines of work are authorized. Each county should have a 'school of methods' twice a year, bringing experts in the different lines of work to train those who wish to take up those lines. By this means alone can the white-ribbon movement retain its present practical hold upon the good judgment and approbation of thoughtful men and women."

THE Columbian Exposition has now been open to the public two Sundays, and the directors are as little pleased about it as the Sunday closing friends. Enormous crowds and large gate receipts were prophesied, thus demonstrating the oft-repeated declaration that the "laboring classes" would embrace their "only opportunity" of attending and the stockholders would reap a handsome dividend. Neither anticipation has been realized, as the attendance has not been as large as on many week days, and the gate receipts consequently below the estimate. The "laboring classes" are practically declaring, by their absence on Sunday, that the secularization of our national rest day increases their already heavy burdens and curtails their "personal liberty" more than any other agency in operation. There is no doubting that Sunday opening has proved a miserable failure, and it is so conceded by the Chicago Record, the daily of largest circulation in the World's Fair city. Here are its words, fearlessly and honestly spoken:

"The local directory has blundered egregiously in throwing open the gates of the Exposition on the first day of the week in the face of a strong public sentiment and of the expressed will of Congress. It should now confess its error, and conduct the Fair on the lawful six-day basis for financial reasons, if for no other."

THIS is temperance week in the World's Congresses, and ribbons white, blue and red, as well as various metal badges, adorn the numerous disciples of total abstinence that throng the Art Palace. The National Temperance Society occupies the first three days, and will consider such profitable subjects as "Temperance Restaurants and Coffee Houses," "Physical Benefits of Total Abstinence," "Principle and Method in the Temperance Reform," "The Duty of Church Members in Relation to Temperance," "Ought Women to Vote for Temperance Legislation," "Nationalizing the Liquor Traffic" and "Dissemination of Temperance Literature." The very ablest speakers in this and other lands will discuss these topics. Thursday will be devoted to the Catholic total abstinence union, the Royal Templars and the "non-partisan" W. C. T. U. Friday is the World's W. C. T. U. day, and a delightful program has been prepared. Seven countries will be represented: Great Britain, Canada, United States, Scotland, China, India and Iceland. A paper will be read from Miss Willard's pen, entitled, "The Woman's Cause is Man's," and addresses will be delivered by Mrs. Rounds, Mrs. Hunt, Mrs. Emery, Mrs. Chant, Mrs. Hoffman, Miss Kimball, Mrs. Leiter, Dr. Nivison, Mrs. Hutchins, Mrs. Richards, Mrs. Abel, Dr. Cushman, Mrs. Barker, Mrs. Lathrap, Mr. Woolley, Colonel Bain, Miss Parrish and Dr. Shaw. Such an array of talent will, without doubt, furnish the finest program of the entire Congress. The meetings will be in two sections, in the halls of Columbus and Washington, beginning in the morning at ten o'clock, in the afternoon at three, and in the evening at eight. Mrs. Woodbridge will preside at one meeting and Mrs. Carse at the other.

THE Social Purity Congress throughout its two days' session was remarkable for the intense interest it aroused, for wonderful catholicity of subjects and representatives, and for the delicacy, vigor and courage with which its questions were handled. The opening hours had addresses from Aaron M. Powell, in behalf of the International Federation for abolition of the state regulation of vice, Bishop Ireland and Father Cleary for the Catholic church, Mrs. Josephine E. Butler in the cause of the White Shield Society, and Mrs. Ballington Booth from the Salvation Army. There were also represented the Ladies' National Association of England, the White Cross Society, the National Christian League, the American Literary Union and Pure Literature Bureau, the Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Children, the Florence Mission, the Anthropological Society, the Society for the Suppression of Vice, the Little Mother's Aid Society. The medical college, the medical journal, the prison, the school, the police station, the kindergarten, the church, the press, science and fashion were unanimous in the judgment that one standard of morals for man and woman was the essential for race culture. It may be a surprise to the general public that a like unanimity prevailed respecting the enfranchisement of woman as a necessity for securing legislation which shall bear equally upon both sexes; without the freedom of the mother the propagation of a higher order of man is impossible. The researches of this Congress predicate a truer civilization, in which the improvement of the human race shall be more deeply studied than the stock laws of to-day. The W. C. T. U. department of social purity occupied one-half the time, of which an account will be found in another issue.

THE GATEWAY OF WILLARD HALL.

BY PROF. C. W. PEARSON.

In the crowded city's busy street
Where the rushing tides of travel meet,
Where the voices of traffic never cease,
There is one sweet picture of perfect peace.
'Tis a woman and child carved in the stone,
And above them the sacred cross is shown,
And on either side of these emblems chief
Is a branch of olive with tender leaf;
And these words of meaning beneath them stand
"For God and Home and Every Land."

I marked a toiler for daily bread
A moment raise his careworn head,
And a new light kindle within his eye
As that sweet emblem he hurried by.
And I forgot the near Board of Trade,
And the mighty city away did fade,
And my narrow life enlarged its scope,
And my spirit flew upon wings of hope,
And I caught new meaning in all this round
Of work by which men's hearts are ground.

The noisy labors of shop and street
Can never be in themselves complete,
And the stately palaces of trade
For other ends than their own are made;
All these are only the husk and shell
In which the spirit may grow and dwell.
The city with all its whirling wheels
Is only to fashion the heart that feels,
And the final welcome of all its strife
Is a nobler throbbing of inner life.

By human strength has the city grown,
Man's hands have built it stone by stone,
But a greater Builder has labored there
To fashion a city far more fair.
What man has built, as it sprang from clay
Will return to earth with a swift decay;
But God's city is built of faith, hope and love,
And will last as long as the skies above.
So those sculptured figures made here on earth
As it seemed to me had a higher birth,
And I welcomed them as a sign of cheer,
A part of God's city already here.

THE DELIVERANCE OF HESTER PERKINS.

BY HELEN CAMPBELL.

Jo began it and the Lord ended it, or the Lord began it and Jo continued the work. This is how Miss Hester herself stated it, and I see no reason to doubt that the proposition, at whichever end it is begun, is substantially true. Jo, himself, being quite unconscious of his own share, has no opinion to give, but realizes that one or two disagreeable facts in his experience have changed their face, and sum up at present as distinctly desirable. In short, he and Miss Hester are the best of friends, though a certain rigidity manifests itself for a moment, quite involuntarily, at one or two manifestations on his part, manifestations opposed to all Miss Hester's traditions as well as to what she regards as the credit of Linborough village.

For it is Linborough still, its long sweep of meadows as green, its encircling hills as serene and fair, and old Graylock still wearing his wisp of cloud, as in the days when little Dr. Martha went her way in the midst of it all, and "Dr. Althea" came into her kingdom. Dr. Martha's kingdom is preparing in the same spot and with most of the old conditions, but there will be no rivalry. On the contrary there is a curious, most unusual unity among the little band of doctors whose work centers there, and who are the unfailing source of wonder, conjecture and general gossip for the group in the village store and the lighter-minded members of the sewing society. Jo knows them all far better than Miss Hester has ever done, though her life has run full fifty years among a people who still seem half strangers.

Jo's years number seven, and, hampered as his movements are, he has minute knowledge of every inch of ground about the house he calls home, and the old, gray tavern, the stepping-stone before which is his throne. As to weather, only deep snow hinders Jo from taking his place, and from this point of vantage hailing the passers-by, or exchanging views with those who pause or descend for errand in store or post-office. Jo's eyes are soft and dark and appealing as the eyes of a young deer. His face is serious and small, weazened even, but with smile so sweet and wise that one must know, if maybe, from whence that wisdom came, and from his own mouth. Sitting there with feet on the great stone and knees drawn up and clasped by his bony little arms, he gathers, day by day, store of thoughts, and can judge people as skillfully as his father judges the individual cows in the herds that, night and morning, are driven by to pasture.

Why the village boys should laugh at him, why some of them even should throw stones, he fails to comprehend. What he has he shares on the instant, and good-will of the largest looks from his eyes.

"It's my hump," he says. "Is it wicked to have a hump? I didn't do it. Why doesn't somebody take it away? When I get big maybe it'll fall off. Do you s'pose it'll fall off?"

It was the opinion of Miss Hester that Jo should be put to bed and kept there, and she expressed it with the freedom of utterance that distinguished New England. It had been her opinion from the beginning. There was something in the distorted little figure that annoyed her, though she could not have told why, and Jo's absolute equality of treatment, his frightful want of discrimination weighed upon her. "Hullo!" he shouted, and with a volume of sound startling from so small a source. "Hullo!" which being interpreted was good-morning and good-night, and all forms beside, of meeting and greeting. To the doctors and the judge, yea, even the governor himself, as he drove in his old-fashioned chaise down the hill from Chester, the word was the same, and each and all stopped and made reply.

"The sassiness of that child beats all," Miss Hester said daily as she returned from her trip to the post-office and reported such scraps of news as had come to her there, to the old mother, half paralytic and wholly her care, over whom and for whom, she labored with true New England devotion. "He hasn't any more sense o' fitness than a house fly. He hollers to a cow boy or the judge jest alike, and the thing I never get over is that folks always seem to take it they've got to stand and deliver. There was Dr. Dennison this very morning, and Jo with his everlasting 'Hullo!' and he in a hurry, too, but he stops and says: 'Well, Jo, what do you think about things to-day?' and Jo doesn't stir, but just smiles away as if he was folks, and says, 'I want to know what you are doing to that last boy that I saw them carry up to Dr. Althea's;' and if that man didn't actually tell him about the case. 'He's going to be made well, Jo,' he says. 'If I'd had you in time I'd have made you well, too,' and he stood and talked till I came out. An' before he was fairly off there was black Jerry from the mill pond, you know, and they two with their heads together, and Jo stopping to call 'Hullo!' to the judge as he went driving by, looking out at him. 'Keep the stone right there till I get back, Jo,' he said, 'and then we'll see what I've got for you,' and that child just nodded and says, 'Bring something for Jerry, too;' Jerry that has been up for gettin' drunk more times than you could shake a stick at, and carted off to Pittsfield for half killing his wife that keeps on living with him because she says he's 'always so good between times.' Seems as if Jo was just breaking down everything that had ought to be left up."

Mrs. Perkins turned her mild eyes upon Miss Hester. "You're naturally good-hearted, though you don't always show it, Hester," she said quaveringly. "What makes you so set against that child?"

"He's too knowing," said Miss Hester. "He'd ought to be kept in. There ain't no sense in his taking liberties with the whole town the way he does."

"I wouldn't grudge him his share of what he can git," the old lady returned. "He's got a hard way to go. The Lord knows who'll look out for him when that poor, shiftless mother of his is taken away. I remember once I seen her rockin' him, most the last time I was out, and I'm free to say it did me good."

"He'd ought to be put to something. He'd ought to be in school, though they do say he can't sit one way more than a few minutes at a time, on account of beginning to ache. It does seem hard, but he'd ought to be taught he can't run the town, for that's what it amounts to," and with a final sniff Miss Hester turned to her sewing.

Jo in the meantime meditated. Miss Hester never spoke to him. His most seductive "Hullo!" failed to bring a response, and she eyed him with stern disapproval. That the rest of the town was equally under her condemnation made no difference. Good-will Joe could not live without, and as he gave so must he receive. Why should she look at him so? Why didn't she speak and why did she look at everybody she met as if they ought to be in jail?

"She hates everybody, I guess," Jo said half aloud as was his wont when alone. "I guess she wishes everybody was dead. She ought to be dead. I'll go up to the graveyard some day, and see if there is a good place for her anywhere. Folks don't hate folks after they put 'em into the ground, and there'd be somebody else to take care of old Mis' Perkins," and Jo, as if his wish could be at once accomplished, got off the stone and faced toward the graveyard, diverted from his intention by the sudden arrival of the school committee men, and the necessity for an exchange of opinions as to their horses and plans for the day.

"It's bad for the blood to take such a scunner as Hester seems to have ag'in that child," old Mrs. Perkins reflected as she sat in the sun by the window, and took in such phases of life as passed before it. "Maybe some cammomile would be sort of cooling and dispose her to think different; but there! I forgot I can't go and put it steepin', and Hester would just scoff if I told her she'd better. She seems to think she's made of nails, an' fur as that child is concerned, she might be. I'm out of patience with her."

Miss Hester had always hated weakness. Even in her young turkeys and the staggering lambs that compelled her care she resented the trouble they gave. In a world where all must work and where each one's place had been settled by foreordination and predestination, it was sinful to shirk the responsibility, and a sinner of seven was no less responsible than a sinner of seventy. Something must be done; but what? and the answer waited.

Something was done but not quite in the lines she would have chosen. Miss Hester put a pan of milk on the cellar stairs to take down, and presently having forgotten it, descended with a custard pie in one hand and a pitcher of cream in the other, arriving first in the pan of milk and last with it at the bottom of the steps. It was impossible for a time to get up, but at last she slowly and painfully reached the top and fainted before the distracted old lady, who opened the window and screamed till black Jerry, passing by, came to the rescue, called a neighbor and then a doctor, and went after Mrs. Jerry, who was accustomed to meeting all emergencies.

NATIONALIZATION OF THE LIQUOR TRAFFIC.

BY W. JENNINGS DEMOREST.

A solution, which has recently received more consideration than it merits, and which to the unutterable disgust of many Prohibitionists, has received a quasi indorsement from some whose convictions take shape from their financial rather than their conscientious inclinations, is that which proposes to "nationalize the liquor business," "make it a government monopoly," "remove the inducement of profit by the public conduct of the liquor business at cost price." The Gothenberg system is quoted in support of this solution in spite of two facts: first, that they are very dissimilar in character; and second, that the Gothenberg system has proved utterly futile as a preventive of intemperance and consequent crime and pauperism.

These are two insuperable reasons why the Prohibitionist can never consent to a "nationalized drink traffic." First, it remains "the drink traffic," a traffic in alcoholic poison for beverage purposes, a poison which is just as deadly when furnished by a government agent, as when sold by the slum grog-seller. If it is urged that adulteration will not be so common as now, it is sufficient to answer that no ingredient in generally sold intoxicants is so poisonous as the alcohol itself. No conscientious Prohibitionist will ever consent under any circumstances to the sale of alcoholic poison as a beverage. It should be (as some of the ablest medical scientists of the world have declared) prescribed only under the gravest sense of responsibility, sold in the pharmacy only, and under the strictest provisions governing the sale of poisons.

The second objection to a "nationalized drink traffic" is that it is "nationalized." One apologist for this solution has feebly tried to cover its shame by comparing "nationalization" to "no-license," and urges that since Prohibitionists favor "no-license" and the abolition of the internal revenue tax as a step toward ultimate suppression, they can with equal consistency favor "nationalization" as a step toward prohibition of the saloon. The utter imbecility of this comparison will be perceived at a glance. The Prohibitionist favors the abolition of license and revenue laws in order to divorce the government from all complicity with the liquor traffic. To the statement sometimes made, that this would result in "free whisky" and consequent unbridled excess, the Prohibitionist has replied, "The restrictive features of liquor laws could remain in force; but, even if the results should be as prophesied, better by far "free whisky" sold without the complicity of government, than a traffic in human lives in which the government is a guilty partner, and receives a profit on every assassination." "Nationalization," on the contrary, continues the governmental assassination; and instead of divorcing the nation from complicity in the evil business, divorces the other partner and continues the business alone. The Prohibitionist, under present circumstances, can truthfully declare that he has entered his unavailing protest against the joint operation, and is an unwilling victim, rather than a contributing agent to the shame. Should he consent to the "nationalization" solution he would be crimsoned with the blood of the slain and guilty with others of the murder. Certainly the Prohibitionist will never be snared in such a net, no matter how he may have mistakenly confided in those who spread the net.

But the nationalist, if he understands the spirit of nationalism, should be as strongly opposed to this heresy as is the Prohibitionist. The political economy on which the nationalist bases his theory of government is, "from all according to ability, to all according to needs." It is a scientifically demonstrated truism that alcoholic poison diminishes the ability of producers; that it destroys physical vigor and dwarfs the mental energies; that its cursed effects are not confined to the drinker, but transmitted to his progeny. Certainly no intelligent nationalist will subscribe to the heresy which would nationalize a traffic whose inevitable effects would be to reduce production by destroying the ability of producers.

Again, nationalism beneficently provides "to all according to needs." Let it be noted, "needs," not "wants." "Needs" are those things which are required for physical sustenance, mental recreation, and moral development. The future nationalism may indeed provide food, clothing, rest, harmless luxuries, education, and such helpful diversions as will recreate, cultivate, develop, and produce the perfect man. But nationalism will never minister to the debased passions, the debauched cravings, the bestial instincts of men, who, by past vicious habit, or because of the vices of their ancestors, are cursed with animal desires. Will nationalism provide prize fights for the brutal, gambling hells for the vicious, houses of ill-fame for the bestial? Certainly not; and it is equally unreasonable to expect nationalism to provide alcoholic or opium poison for the debauchee. "Nationalize the liquor traffic" is one of the most unreasonable, illogical, and fraudulent of all the solutions which are inevitably doomed to pass away into the limbo of "innocuous desuetude."

SHAKESPEARE, A GREAT MORAL EDUCATOR.

BY IRA GALE TOMPKINS.

Our natures do pursue—
Like rats that ravin down their proper bane—
A thirsty evil, and when we drink we die.
—Measure for Measure, i. 3.

The misery is, example, that so terribly shows in the wreck of manhood, that cannot for all dissuade succession.
—All's Well, etc., iii. 5.

What rein can hold licentious wickedness
When down the hill he holds his fierce career.
—Henry V. iii. 3.

King Solomon and Shakespeare were probably two of the greatest champions of truth and wisdom that the world has ever known. They stand within the mighty arena encompassed by these two potential words, like moral and intellectual gladiators, and their utterances are the flaming arrows of conviction that strike all hearts with a sense of absolute truth.

Their truth and wisdom is evolved from the experience of all men in all ages; and when King Solomon thunders forth: "Wine is a mocker, strong drink is raging, and whosoever is deceived thereby is not wise," Shakespeare, in another age, far down the stream of time, takes up the refrain, and says in other language:, "Oh, that men should put an enemy in their mouths to steal away their brains! That we should with joy, revel, pleasure and applause transform ourselves into beasts." And when the wisdom of Solomon adds: "At last it biteth like a serpent and stingeth like an adder," Shakespeare gives emphasis to the same truth in the words: "O thou invisible spirit of wine! if thou hast no name to be known by, let us call thee—devil.". . ."To be now a sensible man—by and by a fool, and presently a beast."

But Shakespeare was no dry, didactic, moral teacher, but one "who held, as it were, the mirror up to nature," and gave to truth an indelible form and pressure as realistic as life itself; so that when he describes anything, we not only see it with clearer vision, but, as the poet Dryden says, we feel it too. He individualizes and personifies, as it were, a great truth, exhibiting the cause and its effect in colors so vivid and so strikingly natural that it comes home to the consciousness of all, as though part of each individual experience; and this may be illustrated by a few apt and pertinent quotations.

When a great crime is to be perpetrated, or some monstrous evil incubated, "drink" is almost always used as a necessary auxiliary and prime coadjutor. We never hear of it being used in a righteous cause. In the play of Othello, Iago says of Cassio, the instrument he intends to use to effect his villainous purpose:

"If I can fasten but one cup upon him
With that he hath drunk to-night already,
He'll be as full of quarrel and offence
As my young mistress' dog."

And this purpose he effects as follows:

Iago.—Come, lieutenant, a cup of wine. . . It is a night of revels. . . Our friends desire it. . . But one cup. . . I'll drink for you.

Cassio.—I have drunk but one cup to-night, and that was craftily qualified, too; and behold what innovation it makes here. [Pointing to his head.]

Here is a grand moral lesson. What innovation has not drink made in transforming brilliant intellects into intellectual imbecility; productive labor into improvident idleness; moral energy and purpose into demoralizing weakness and nervous prostration; with a whole progeny of evils leading to inevitable ruin? Cassio continues:

"I have very poor and unhappy brains for drinking! I could well wish that courtesy would invent some other custom of entertainment. I am unfortunate in that infirmity and dare not task my weakness too much."

How many of the grandest intellects in all ages have found out that they have had "very poor and unhappy brains for drinking" (?) and have been made vastly and eternally unfortunate in that infirmity. Statesmen, soldiers, scholars, lawyers, physicians, divines, authors, artists, poets—their name is legion! and not all the tears of all the angels can wash the record out. In this grand and appalling tragedy, the demon "Drink" operating upon a weak will is made an instrument in the hands of a designing villain, whereby a noble nature is converted into an incarnate fiend, and the pure and virtuous Desdemona's own goodness is made the net that enmeshes them all in one common, cureless ruin; and where apparently—as frequently happens in real life—the innocent suffer more than do the guilty.

This diabolical agent is also brought in to play a Satanic part in the grand tragedy of Macbeth upon the good but unguarded king Duncan. Lady Macbeth says to her guilty partner:

"His two chamberlains
Will I, with wine and wassail, so convince,
That memory, the warder of the brain,
Shall be a fume, and the receipt of reason
A limbeck only."

"Memory, the warder of the brain," its sentinel and God-given reason, the captain of the citadel, are converted into a limbeck—a distillery, a sour-mash, where the brain seethes and fumes, and is incapable of any serious or coherent thought. "What, then," says Lady Macbeth, "cannot you and I perform upon the unguarded Duncan?" A little later on, when this carnival of blood and death has nearly reached its climax, and most sacrilegious murder is breaking open the Lord's anointed temple, and stealing thence the life of the building, Lady Macbeth enters on the scene, her whole soul wrought up to the consummation of the fiendish crime that is to give

"To all their nights and days to come Solely sovereign sway and masterdom," and exclaims:

"That which hath made them drunk hath made me bold:
What hath quenched them hath given me fire.
.....Hark! Peace! He is about it;
The doors are open; and the surfeited grooms
Do mock their charge with snores: I have drugged their possets,
That death and nature do contend about them
Whether they live or die."

Death and nature might contend for a precious life, but no sound of the conflict could reach the deadened senses of these "slaves of drink and thralls of sleep," while the voice of the guilty Macbeth cries:

"Sleep no more! to all the house!
Macbeth doth murder sleep—the innocent sleep,
Sleep that knits up the raveled sleeve of care,
The death of each day's life, sore labor's bath,
Balm of hurt minds, great nature's second course,
Chief nourisher in life's feast."

Still another illustration may be drawn from the drama of Antony and Cleopatra. The three then great potentates of the world—Pompey, Antony and Cæsar—have a feast, a merry-making, and of course wine is a necessary ingredient. Octavius—afterwards surnamed Augustus—and the one of the three who achieved ultimate empire, sovereignty and sway is averse to the cup. Antony urges him to partake:

"Be a child of the time! Come and drown consideration!"

Cæsar replies:

"I could well forbear it; it is monstrous labor when I wash my brain and it grows fouler."

Monstrous labor, indeed! Here again, in connection with this event—as illustrating the character of the three men and its effects upon their after lives—history points a grand and most significant moral. Pompey, one of the greatest and most brilliant soldiers of his time, "laughs away his fortunes" and has a brief career.

Antony, "the triple pillar of the world"
—who with his sword
Quartered the globe, and o'er green Neptune's back
With ships made cities," is transformed into a strumpet's fool, and when "the exigent comes wherein he sees the inevitable prosecution of disgrace and horror" he plays the coward and "dies like a Roman fool on his own sword"; while the would-be abstainer becomes the founder of the mighty empire of the Cæsars. It was during the reign of Augustus that Latin literature achieved its greatest distinction in Rome; when such poets as Virgil, Horace and Ovid flourished and made themselves immortal in odes, satires and poetic epistles. The fine as well as the useful arts were greatly advanced, as it was the boast of this monarch that he found the city brick and left it marble.

The history of Roman civilization here conveys another grand moral lesson. This magnificent city "that sat upon her seven hills and from her throne of glory ruled the world," achieved her ultimate downfall and destruction in consequence of boundless intemperance and enervating luxury.

Says Shakespeare:

"Boundless intemperance
In nature is tyranny; it hath been
The untimely emptying of the happy throne
And fall of many kings."

"THE CUP OF DEVILS."

BY GERSHAM.

These words are found in I Corinthians 10: 21.

"The cup of blessing," found in the sixteenth verse preceding, is a phrase equally emphatic. The sharp distinction is easily seen.

The Gentiles in their sacrifices feasted on the slain beasts, and ate bread and drank wine in honor of their gods. The following lines, translated from Virgil, give us a fairly correct idea of how these feasts were conducted:

"The loaves were served in cannisters; the wine
In bowls; the priest renewed the rites divine;
Broiled entrails are their food, and beef's continued chine.
Ye warlike youths, your heads with garlands crown!
Fill high the goblets with a sparkling flood,
And with deep draughts invoke our common god!"

Here it is evident that this "cup of devils" contained "wine." The Corinthian Christians were warned against partaking of it. They were given to understand that they could not do this and then come to the "table of the Lord" and partake of the cup of blessing without sin.

We have been told many times over, by zealous defenders of alcoholic communion wine, that we have here nothing to do with the question whether the feast bowl of the heathen worshipers contained "real wine," or, "only grape juice." What the Apostle Paul specially points out and condemns, say they, is the act of taking part in the idolatrous worship.

There are a few "fanatics," however, in the church of Christ, who are not willing to take this opinion as a legitimate and logical conclusion. They cannot ignore the solemn and significant fact that the one was a "cup of devils," and the other "the cup of blessing." They also see in the words themselves the legitimate inference that the one contained the symbol of divine wrath, and the other the symbol of spiritual blessings. They cannot believe—they see no reason for believing—that there was no difference between the "bowl" and the "cup" as to the kind and quality of the contents.

"These unfermented wine-fanatics are making much trouble in the churches." The time is within memory when the Presbyterian church of Scotland disciplined and excommunicated members who refused the cup because it contained what their conscience consistently condemned—intoxicating wine. Finding this course unedifying and unprofitable for the good of the church, they finally compromised the matter by allowing both kinds of wine at the celebration of the Lord's Supper, and by dividing the two classes of communicants—the "real wine" members taking seats on one side, and the "grape juice fanatics" on the other side of the room. What was done with the minister's conscience who was thus obliged to administer both kinds of wine, we have not yet been informed.

Say what we will about this "two-wine" theory on the one side, and "unfermented wine" theory on the other, we cannot ignore the fact that conscientious conviction is claimed on both sides. This claim should be respected.

An elder in a Kansas Presbyterian church, whose piety, honesty and intelligence no one doubts, was recently heard to say publicly that he would rather cut off one of his fingers than use unfermented wine for the communion, because "the Saviour did not use it" when He instituted the last Supper. Now here we have a case of conscience, based upon honest and intelligent conviction—a hard case to deal with. If it is a sin for him to use unfermented communion wine, it must be equally a sin for him to offer it to others. Suppose now his church should decide to grant the request recently made by some of the members, to have both kinds of wine at communion, how could he, as an elder, consistently offer the cup containing "only grape juice" to those communicants who conscientiously refuse the other? He could not do it without sin.

Here, then, we are confronted with a very serious and perplexing problem: This communion-wine question divides the members of many of our Protestant churches into three classes. First, those who believe that only fermented or alcoholic wine has divine sanction. Second, those who believe that the Master used the pure, non-alcoholic "fruit of the vine," as the symbol of His blood, when He instituted the last Supper, and that we should follow His example. Third, those who have no decided opinion either way, and therefore regard the matter as of no importance whatever. Between the first two classes a controversial warfare has been going on for years, without bringing them nearer together in their opinions. The third class cannot act as arbitrators because they are indifferent to the whole question. How is the problem ever to be solved?

Sometimes the pastor of a church who is wise, patient, and yet firmly conscientious in regard to this matter, can do much toward bringing about the desired change as to communion wine.

A few years ago the pastor of a church in Illinois tried this course, and asucceeded so well that not a word was said against the innovation. His predecessor had also tried to exclude alcoholic wine from the communion table, making the wine himself from his own vines, and furnishing it to the church without charge, so that objectors could have no ground for complaint. He did this for several years; no one objected to his course. He died as pastor of that same church, in blissful ignorance of the fact that his "grape juice" was tampered with at each communion, and "the good old man's harmless fanaticism" quietly ignored.

Who could have been guilty of such ingenious deception? Two of his most trusted elders! One of them the pastor's confidential adviser and right-hand helper in every good work. This brother was a physician, and also owned a drug store in the place. The other elder and co-conspirator usually did duty as janitor and usher. The duty also devolved on him to prepare the communion table. The wine he received direct from the hand of the pastor at the parsonage. It was taken by him direct to the church near by, so the pastor was sure (?) it was all right when he made the announcement afterward, in connection with the customary invitation, that the cup of blessing contained the pure, non-alcoholic juice of the grape as it grew in his garden. Those two elders knew better, however, for they had quietly smuggled in a pint of "real wine" from the doctor's drug store just before the people assembled and had mixed it with the pastor's grape juice. This they did "conscientiously"(?) it is hoped, and consistently with their positive conviction that "grape juice is not wine" unless fermented.

This trick was repeated at each communion by those two elders until the pastor died! It seems incredible, for it reminds one of some of the sharp tricks of the liquor trade. But, incredible as it may seem, it is as true as the gospel itself. That deluded pastor's successor had it direct from the lips of the elder who did the "mixing." He revealed the secret as a good joke, laughing heartily whilst he related it. He was led to do this by the fact that the trick could not be repeated with the "new minister," because his "fanaticism" went so far with his judgment that he would not allow the sealed bottles containing his Concord grape juice to go out of his sight until they were emptied into the communion flagon.

HILLSBORO CRUSADE SKETCHES.

V.

BY ELIZA J. THOMPSON.

One of the most remarkable features of the "Woman's Temperance Movement" was the rapidity with which the fire of enthusiasm spread; and another was the spirit of zeal and self-abnegation that seemed to take possession of the best and most useful women in communities touched by this fire. We learn from recorded history that "in less than two weeks from the time it was inaugurated at Hillsboro three or four counties in southern Ohio were taken by storm!"

A reporter of the Cincinnati Commercial says (Jan. '74): "The excitement pervading the entire community over the 'Woman's Temperance Movement' exceeds anything we have witnessed in Hillsboro during a residence of twenty years." And yet, on the part of the women engaged in it—despite old prejudices and present discouragements—a spirit of courageous faith and earnest prayer, added to a most forgiving disposition towards those whose business they especially antagonized, seems to characterize the movement wherever developed.

On the morning of January the 12th, our early services were conducted by Dr. McSurely in the Presbyterian church, and his words and faithful Bible readings (always good) were so fitly spoken that they were indeed "like apples of gold in pictures of silver." Business of much interest followed. First, General McDowel said he had been requested to state to the meeting that the hotel keepers wished a committee of gentlemen to be sent to confer with them in regard to "this movement," and to receive their proposals. It was "moved and carried" that the ladies vote on this request, and the request was granted.

The following gentlemen, Mr. F. I. Bumgarner, Mr. J. M. Boyd, Gen. J. J. McDowel, Mr. M. T. Nelson, Mr. Samuel E. Hibben, were appointed to wait upon the hotel keepers as a committee of conference. The gentlemen in charge of aiding the business houses who wished to reship their liquors to Cincinnati reported the readiness of two firms to accept terms and quit the business. The ladies, true to their promise, signified their intention of meeting at an appointed time for the purchase of candies, glasses, beer-mugs, etc., and thus aid the parties to start in a more desirable occupation.

It was found necessary to add other names to the committee in charge of the reshipment of liquors, and to the previously appointed committee, Mr. Ferris and Captain Amen, were added Messrs. Geo. Richards, F. I. Bumgarner, R. S. Evans. General McDowel also reported that he had seen Mr. Dunn, the druggist, and that he requested him to say to the temperance ladies that he still adhered to the pledge he had given them, which was to "sell in the future as in the past," and should not be persuaded to yield any further in the matter.

A message was sent in by one or two of the hotel keepers, through Mr. Samuel E. Hibben, requesting that the following ladies be added to the committee of gentlemen appointed to confer with them: Mesdames Col. Trimble, Wm. Scott, Jessie K. Pickering, Judge Evans, E. J. Thompson. The society indorsed the request. A message announcing the pleasant news that our Washington Court House friends would be with us that evening was received with evidences of delight.

A committee was also appointed to invite town, county and United States officers to attend the meetings of the W. T. A., namely, Mesdames Gen. McDowel, Jos. Glascock, J. M. Boyd, Ferris. Meeting adjourned with the benediction and the ladies formed in procession and made several visits to saloons—inviting all to come out and hear from our Washington Court House friends.

The mass-meeting in the evening was large and enthusiastic, with addresses by "Mr. Morehouse, the superintendent of schools, and Mr. Dean, teacher of high school" in Washington Court House; they gave accounts of the work in that place to the delight of all interested, although many of us felt heavy about the heart, because of the "stones" that were not yet "rolled away" in our community.

An unusually large number of ladies and gentlemen assembled in the Presbyterian church at the early hour on the morning of the 13th of January, '74. The session opened with singing and prayer. The regular order of business was set aside that the audience might hear from the visitors from Washington Court House—that fortunate little city whose "liquor sellers" all gave up to the prayers and entreaties of the good women. Mr. Dean being called upon, spoke briefly, and was followed by Mr. Morehouse. A hymn was then sung, after which a prayer was offered by our dear Mr. Matthews, D. D., who prayed as he felt, full of gratitude for the victories God had given us at Washington Court House. Mrs. Carpenter, the wife of the Presbyterian minister of this place and a grand leader in the work of extermination, gave additional facts of their experiences, and was listened to with much pleasure and attention. Mrs. Judge Pretty followed only too briefly with earnest words.

It was resolved to have a general temperance meeting in the Presbyterian church that evening. After adjournment, the ladies of the band went out for "visitations," found some doors closed and our dealers hard and unrelenting. The men's prayer-meeting continued in session at the church, and the bell was rung at the end of every prayer. The visitations and prayer-meeting were continued during the afternoon. It was resolved to hold a meeting the next evening at the M. E. church.

There was much feeling with regard to Mr. Dunn's course toward the ladies and their reasonable wishes. Without consulting them, our highly esteemed friend, Rev. J. McD. Matthews, aided by the man whom all society delighted to honor, Mr. Samuel E. Hibben, decided to secure the names of prominent business and professional men of the community to a personal appeal and present it to Mr. Dunn. Over two hundred names were secured, and in the most kindly manner these two good men presented an appeal, and received from his attorneys his reply.

AN IMPORTANT INTERVIEW.

BY E. EVANS.

General John Bidwell, late candidate of the Prohibition party for president of the United States, has recently replied to questions put to him in the following words:

"Certainly I hold that new parties are formed upon issues which existing parties cannot or will not take up, and that there are now questions of reform demanded by the people which neither old party dares take up. Of some of these the liquor question might well be put first. The old parties are powerless to deal with this monster evil which is of such pressing moment as to be almost beyond comparison. The old parties have had it in their power any time in the last quarter of a century to accomplish its total suppression. Yet they dare not even mention or propose a remedy. In return for the liquor vote they are hopelessly under its control.

"Universal suffrage without regard to sex is another issue of supreme importance at which the old parties stand aghast. Without the ballot the fairest half of American citizenship is robbed of its most sacred rights and the ability to enter into spheres of greater usefulness. But the old parties dare not lisp the name of woman lest they peril the chances of losing the liquor vote.

"In wise restriction of foreign emigration, the old parties are practically impotent. True, they sometimes talk about our country being made the dumping ground for the criminal and pauper classes of Europe. But in the same breath they mount on exultant wings and open wider the door by proclaiming ours to be the refuge for the oppressed from every land. But acts are facts. Judged by them the old parties really mean nothing.

"Monopolies cover the continent. They are fast absorbing all the wealth. Their tyranny is cruel, unbearable. Again, the old parties are more than helpless—they are affectionate. They breed monopolies. Having brought them forth they nourish them, and, naturally they are reluctant to destroy their offspring.

"In this country there are diverse organizations. May not some one or more with numerous following have designs in the direction of the public purse to subserve ends inimical to the public interest? It is said that all parties long in power invariably become corrupt. What, then, may they not do in return for aid in gaining partisan supremacy?

"In order to carry out these reforms a new party is not to my mind a necessity. The reason is, there is already a party in whose articles of faith these very reforms are bedrock principles. Of all parties it is the most progressive. It is even now in the activities of the battle-field. I allude, of course, to the Prohibition party. But there is one necessity of highest importance, namely, that all who sincerely desire reform should, in the right manner and at the right time, and as early as practicable, come to the aid of this courageous Gideon's band of a party. There is no other to which reformers can come.

"I am in favor—intensely so—of uniting all reformers in one party. Chicago, I think, would be the place for them to meet, as it seems to be, this year at least, almost the capital of the world. Several months ago I thought reformers might meet during the summer, but as time so swiftly rolled by, to my mind it became evident that a general representation of reformers might be difficult, perhaps impossible. Then later, as perhaps the best that could be done, I suggested that an effort might be made to reach the churches. My anxiety remains unabated to see all the friends of reformation come together and be of one fold.

"Most cheerfully and heartily do I indorse the propositions embraced in the following resolutions. All who can so indorse them are and should be enrolled as reformers, regardless of possible differences in other respects.

"Resolved, That we oppose the liquor traffic in all its forms for beverage purposes, and the license system which gives it legal existence, as a menace to the home, inimical to good government, and a dangerous factor in the politics of the nation.

"Resolved, That we favor universal suffrage to all citizens regardless of sex, based upon educational qualifications.

A great work might be begun by a system of enrollment. For instance: Have said resolutions printed on suitable cards, ready on all occasions, especially at reform meetings, to be signed, and when signed, returnable to the city, county or other committee, or printed in reform papers. The principles of the resolutions are intrinsic and fundamental, and unaccompanied by all other questions which so often cause differences, should run like wild fire wherever the people are intelligent and the spirit of reform exists or can be kindled.

"Let all other matters—new party, new name—and all else go till reformers in largest possible force come together in a reform congress. Whatever may be the outcome of these friendly negotiations, as indicated by Dr. Taylor's call for a Reform Congress at Chicago, every true and earnest reformer will hail with gladness the day when the mighty reform forces of the nation shall see "eye to eye," and shall move in one solid column to the ballot box, where only free men can properly redress their wrongs."

CORRESPONDENCE

LETTER FROM ENGLAND.

DEAR UNION SIGNAL:—When last I wrote the tide of public opinion was only just beginning to rise in favor of the Government Direct Veto Bill; indeed, temperance opinion was not settled in its support, and there were some grounds for fear that divisions on details in the temperance ranks might militate against, if they did not wreck the prospects of the bill, which, whatever its shortcomings has in it, clearly defined the principle of prohibition by local vote. Since then, however, every change that has appeared in the view taken of the bill has been decidedly in the direction of approval, so much so that now practically the entire temperance party in all its component parts is ranged solidly on the side of the measure, and sinking minor points, is making strenuous efforts to secure its enactment.

The greatest factor in bringing about this result has, without doubt, been a growing appreciation of the great advance made by the question having become a government one. But in addition the intense opposition of the liquor sellers has served to convince possible waverers of the real value of the bill. That opposition is unscrupulous and far-reaching, but is calculated to defeat itself by reason of the methods employed—notably, organized rowdyism at meetings, attempts to inflame class prejudices and gross misrepresentations of the provisions of the bill. Vast sums of money have been spent by the great brewers, and enormous petitions to Parliament against the bill have resulted, but the liquor efforts seem to have been largely spasmodic, and are not sustained with anything like regularity.

On the other hand, the temperance forces have got well into line, and are going steadily ahead. Many great gatherings have been held in all our principal cities, and hosts of meetings of religious and temperance bodies have convened in all quarters, and one immediate result is that in regard to petitions the tide has turned, and day by day, now, far more are presented to Parliament for than against the bill.

It is not, of course, that the whole nation has been converted, even in theory to prohibition, but that the government proposals indicate the high water-mark of a long standing determination that "something must be done," to curb the liquor traffic and to crush its power. Other indications of the impetus behind that demand are to be found, as our present Parliament has before it twenty-four other bills dealing with different phases of the ever-present liquor question. If and when the Government Veto Bill passes, these other bills will form good bases on which to build a thorough and drastic overhauling of our license system, and this public opinion would support and indorse.

Demonstrations for and against the Direct Veto, both in London and in the country, have been legion. The biggest on the liquor side was held in one of our largest halls with a brewer-peer as its largest light—Lord Burton. He appealed to the drink sellers to rise in defence of "their homes and hearths, their wives and children." Here was an obvious challenge, and it was promptly taken up on the part of the women of England by Lady Henry Somerset.

The great hall in which the brewers had previously met was secured, and when the time came it was packed to its utmost capacity, but by a very different audience. So great indeed was the number of those who sought admission that an overflow meeting of a thousand people was promptly arranged in a neighboring hall. Nearly five thousand people took part in the two meetings and both gave a unanimous vote for the bill, and in contravention of the petition taken up by the brewers. Miss Willard made a memorable speech on the occasion, and the platform included several women of great repute and assured power, as well as some members of Parliament. Sir Wilfrid Lawson presided in the absence of Lady Henry Somerset, who had been announced, but could not come owing to the death of her brother-in-law, the Duke of Bedford.

Such gatherings in other parts of London, and in all directions through the country are still going on, so that we have entered on a period of activity wellnigh unprecedented in the history of the temperance movement in these countries. Not in temperance gatherings alone, but in political ones—notably women's political meetings—and religious bodies, veto resolutions are being passed every day, and swell the volume of popular demand which will grow and grow till Parliament gives the people the power to suppress the liquor traffic.

HENRY J. OSBORN.

London, England, 112 Fleet St.

JOHN G. WOOLLEY IN THE MORMON TABERNACLE.

DEAR UNION SIGNAL:—"The monument in stone is greater than the monument of ink." Bunker Hill is a greater and truer history than a Bancroft or a Blaine could write. What of these silent witnesses, the mountains? When, how, by what awful process of upheaval, eruption and convulsion did God make them? The mystery, the infiniteness, the very unspeakable sublimity of Jehovah God are in them. They mean so much.

And then the plains, the valleys, the deserts with their bluffs, the lakes and rivers that lie between. Notably, that valley or basin of the great Salt Lake! Can it be that God had some hidden design in leading the Prophet (?) Joseph Smith, to this Eldorado? Liberalized now by Gentiles and Gentile laws, modernized, metropolitan, full of enterprise, it argues not well for the Mormon. He hasn't changed a great deal in the country—and up in the hills, but in Salt Lake, Ogden and other cities, he has changed. Perhaps the "some day" of God's providence, the some day of human hope fulfilled, will explain the mystery of Joseph Smith and his strange religion.

We intended visiting the Tabernacle on the Sabbath day, and said so to the friend who is pastor of the Baptist church, but immediately he remarked:

"You had better go at night and attend the temperance meeting." "A temperance meeting at the Tabernacle?" I inquired. "Yes," he said, "it is a peculiar affair, saints and Gentiles, Mormons and all sorts, members of the church, and all the churches, are to meet in one vast conclave." "And who the speaker?" I asked. "John G. Woolley," he replied, and then explained the finger that Mrs. Griffith and other good W. C. T. U. ladies had had in the pie.

Sunday evening came, beautiful, tranquil, bright, as are so many of the evenings in Salt Lake. By 7:45 I had pushed my way to the gallery of that historic structure, to gaze upon a scene the like of which I had never before witnessed. An auditory so vast that you feel utterly lost in it, and have more a sense of distance within, than when without. A small ocean of faces, billows of faces, an army of people. It was, without any extravagance, à la Yankee, simply overwhelmingly tremendous.

Mr. Woolley knowing of the presence of a co-worker, gave my name to George Q. Canon, the great leader, and I was invited to the platform. Among the "apostles" for once! There they were, some of the leading apostles, bishops, officials of the church, side by side with the pastors and laymen of the evangelical churches. I asked a reporter, "How many people here?" "Ten thousand, easy enough," was his alert reply.

Think of it! A city of ten thousand people under one roof; one out of every ten of the great city of the saints. The sight of that audience was almost suffocating; we were breathless as we looked from floor to gallery and from gallery to floor.

Would the man meet the occasion? Could he? Could one spirit control that myriad, complex, august crowd? Here was need of delicate tact, fineness of judgment, exquisite adroitness. By the courtesy of one great people, their kindness and perhaps shrewdness, Gentiles were welcomed in this "sacred place," and a gentile was to speak. Not a Webster, not a Blaine, not a "Lady Henry" or a Frances Willard, but Mr. Woolley—five years ago an outcast, a wanderer, "a lone, lost, shattered, almost ruined man.

But adequate? Yes, and abundantly. From the first he won. A more terrible arraignment of the liquor traffic, more scathing denunciations of the policy, greed, complicity of—supposedly good men, more timely logic, more tender appeal, more Christlike spirit, or a sweeter eloquence were seldom, if ever, poured out upon waiting hearts. It was a great effort and took hold upon thousands of hearts. His words thrilled, rebuked, softened and stimulated all at once. Salt Lake papers spoke of it as "the greatest address of the kind ever delivered in that city." Probably correct. I have seldom seen a man who comes so near my ideal of Paul as John G. Woolley came that night—in fervency, eloquence, tact, unselfish, modest, consecrated—growing immensely as a Christian, growing wonderfully as an orator.

God bless the man and prosper his mission. I am thinking it all over here to-night, in Denver—the Rocky mountain trip, the beautiful but rum-cursed cities of the hills, the sublime scenery, the visit to Salt Lake, and I muse,—"after all, what is greater, nobler, higher than man and manhood?" Ought I not to add—womanhood also? Back of John G. Woolley is that little wife—the wife in whom he lives his life, and both lives "hid with Christ in God."

Mr. Woolley shall live in biography, and in other lives made happy by his efforts. But temperance people in America ought to see to it that he lives in the making of "Rest Island," where the drinking man may "have a chance," all that his heart craves. I know that the women will help.

BY MATILDA B. CARSE.

And he arose and rebuked the wind, and said unto the sea, Peace, be still. And the wind ceased, and there was a great calm. And he said unto them, Why are ye so fearful? how is it that ye have no faith?—Mark 4:39, 40.

We are so glad that over the entrance to Willard Hall in the Temple is engraved the legend, "For God, and Home and Every Land." Never was there building erected in which the whole world was so generally interested as the Temple—the fame of it has gone forth to all parts of the earth. The crowd of strangers that daily comes to view it evidences this fact. The following extracts from letters received from China, Japan, South Africa and England testify to the world-wide interest felt in our House Beautiful. "I have much pleasure," writes Miss Adeline F. Emery, Chinkiang, China, "in handing you an order for $16 from the Woman's Temperance Society, of Chinkiang. The society at present consists of seven Europeans and twenty-five native members, the majority of the latter being members of Miss Robinson's school. The greater part of the success of the society is due to her energy. Our president is Mrs. Wan, our vice-president, Mrs. Teny; one of the pupils is secretary; although all the officers are Chinese they are persons of ability and intelligence. The money was collected in Chinese mite-boxes.

A letter signed by six Japanese girls attending the Doshisha Girls' School, Kyota, Japan, contained thirty Japanese coins. The girls write: "How glad we are to hear that the Temperance Temple is being built in Chicago. We wanted to offer some help, but we students are not able to do much. We send this small sum of money which we have gathered at our Sunday evening meetings, with hearty attachment to your Temple. While we Christians want to work for temperance and for our Lord Jesus, our sisters, we are sorry to say, are very earnest in Buddhism. They gave their hair to the temple of Honganji to lift the heavy logs. This offering may seem to be small, yet their earnestness in offering the best they could is most affecting. With the same earnestness, we send this little help to your great Temple. Oh, how we wish the day may come when there is no one who drinks wine, and when all shall put away all vice and obey the Lord. Please ask that our country may become Christian when you pray for your own country." It will be a pleasure to those dear Japanese girls to know that a gentleman bought two of their coins and paid a dollar for them. We hope other generous hearts may be moved to purchase the balance of the coins.

"I am very much interested in the magnificent Temple you are building in Chicago for temperance," writes Mr. John Geard, of Port Elizabeth, South Africa. "I have heard and read a great deal about it. I wish to give my mite toward it, and inclose post-office order for £1." Our true friend, Mrs. S. E. Drysdale, Liverpool, England, aroused by the recent difficulties, sends, with her warm sympathy, £5; this makes over $50 she has sent to the Temple.

If Christian hearts on the other side of the globe are thus moved to give to our Temple, what should be expected of our own white-ribboners? Surely none are so poor but they can at least send a dollar or two. Mrs. L. H. Hyslup, Nebraska City, Neb., has something good to say in this line; she writes: "Please send me another mite-box. I desire to fill as many as possible before I leave for the 'home over there.' When our precious Temple is paid for, there will yet be use for mite-boxes. How I do wish two hundred thousand white ribbon sisters would fill a box between this and May, 1894, so little for each one to do, and how much for our Temple." Yes, it would mean, if but $2.50 were put in each box during the year, an aggregate of $500,000. Mrs. Harriet M. Bond, Lake Mills, Wis., writes: "I am going to try and induce our society to raise a dollar a member to apply on the Temple. Might it not be well to say more in THE UNION SIGNAL about this plan of having all the unions raise a dollar a member for this cause?" Yes, my sisters, this would mean an aggregate of $200,000. May the Spirit of the Lord move upon the hearts of all the women to do this.

We wish our friends would hasten with their gifts for the Madam Willard memorial window, as Walter Crane, the great English artist, has orders to proceed with it. The following sums have been received for it since our last report: $3.65 from Mrs. Elvira Schroder, York, Neb.; $1.35 from Maude Hutchinson, Republic City, Kan.; $1 from Mrs. A. Laundsbury, Relief Hill, Cal. The following sums have been sent for the memorial tablet to the memory of Jennie Casseday: $3 from Miss A. A. Hicks, Belfast, Me.; $5 forwarded by Ethel Stout from the Y's of Louisville, Ky.; $2 from Ethel Stout, Melbourne, Fla.; 50 cents from Mrs. N. Biglow, Stowe, Vt. It would be an appropriate and beautiful tribute to the memory of our sainted Jennie Casseday, if the superintendent of each flower mission would forward $1 towards the tablet in her memory.

A two-cent stamp sent to Mrs. Matilda B. Carse, the Temple, Chicago, will secure a mite-box. Remember, any one placing in the box $2.50 from May 1, 1893, to May 1, 1894, will receive the lovely Columbian souvenir made of aluminum, with a cut of the Temple on one side and on the reverse the face of Miss Willard and the founder of the Temple, with suitable inscriptions. All money orders should be made out in the name of the treasurer, William D. Preston, and sent to our financial secretary, Miss Sara Johnson, The Temple, Chicago, Ill.

A FACTORY GIRL'S IDEAL MAN.*

Noble and true; loving the good;
Strong in the strength of a pure manhood.
Tender and kind, humble, yet brave;
Bound to no habit that makes man a slave.
Scorning none, hating none, seeing a brother
In each and every one,—
This and no other.

North Adams, Mass.

*You will not call it presumption, will you, if a factory girl—who has just read with delight and unabating interest, the descriptions of the "ideals" of some of the women whom she has loved and admired, though at a great distance, for many years—sends you her "Ideal" which she composed some time ago amid the harsh and deafening noises of a woolen mill weave-room. She does not send it feeling that it is, in any way, to be compared with the ideals of those noble women, but with the thought that it may be interesting simply as one New England factory girl's ideal.

HOW MRS. CAMERON JOINED THE W. C. T. U.

BY MRS. S. M. HARTOUGH.

I had just moved to Clover Hill. It was a pretty little place with one street for business and the rest of the town given over to homes. I liked very much to walk about taking local notes and wondering about the inhabitants.

We had placed our church letter with the pastor of our choice and had received the right hand of fellowship from him and some of the members. A few had called upon us, but as yet we had not many acquaintances. The people were very conservative, and as the town was old, a new-comer was a rarity, and could not be received into society on probation.

One sunshiny afternoon as I sat alone, I was surprised by a call from a lady who introduced herself as Mrs. Merrifind. She was sweet-faced, modest, tall and "fine looking." I assured her of my pleasure at her visit, and invited her to come in, which she did. The usual remarks followed, only just those things which new acquaintances ask of each other, until she inquired if I was a member of the W. C. T. U. I was obliged to answer in the negative, but giving her at the same time the assurance that my sympathies were in the work and my admiration for its leader unbounded.

"Wouldn't you like to join our union here?" was her next inquiry. "We need you very much."

I hesitated, not being prepared to commit myself to such a step.

"We are so few," she continued, "and the work is so great. I wish you would join us. We have a meeting to-morrow. Will you go with me if I call for you?"

Here was a dilemma right upon me. There could be no equivocation now. I must answer positively, so I said: "I think you will have to excuse me to-morrow, much as I appreciate your kindness. But some other time I will be pleased to accompany you."

"And join us?" she asked eagerly.

"Perhaps," I returned.

"Oh, unguarded speech!" said I to myself as soon as my caller was gone; "that is the sort of woman who will not take excuses. Your 'perhaps' and that other concession that you 'would be pleased to accompany her sometime' will not be lost upon her.

The next week Mrs. Merrifind called again. Her face beamed as I opened the door and she said: "I thought I would call to see if you were ready to go with me to our W. C. T. U. meeting. It is such a pleasant day and our president is going to read a paper on heredity which I think will be very interesting."

I didn't want to go and I quickly cast about in my mind for a plausible excuse and gave it, thanking her for her kindness. She smiled sweetly as she bade me good-by and I went back into my room and thought pretty much like this: "I am not going to join that union; here I have my housework to do and there's my church work, too. Besides these W. C. T. U. women are sometimes called upon to do things quite unpleasant—circulate petitions, go before the city authorities, visit school boards, go to the jail and I don't know what else. I really don't want to do that kind of work."

But on the other hand I thought I should have liked to hear that paper. I might have gone—and Mrs. Merrifind was so sweet and kind—but I really could not afford the time. So I picked up my work—I was making a lace handkerchief—and resumed its intricacies, pleased to see that it had grown two inches in as many afternoons.

The next week my persistent neighbor called again. "I hope you will not think I am obtrusive," she said, with that same sweet smile of hers, "but I thought perhaps you might be wishing to go to our W. C. T. U. meeting to-day, and if so it would be too bad to disappoint you. If you cannot go with me, why please be free to say so, for I shall take it kindly. Our president's paper last week was fine. I kept thinking of you all the time and wishing you were there. You are not ready to go? Too bad. Well, good-by. Pray for the W. C. T. U."

Pray for it! Why, I never was asked to do that before. I never remembered hearing anybody pray for the W. C. T. U. as an organization. I had heard the temperance cause prayed for, but never had been much impressed by the petition. I wonder what good she thinks my prayers will do if I do not work for the cause? "Pray for the W. C. T. U.!" That was something new under the sun! Somehow the words would not leave me. They had come to stay.

As the day drew near for the next meeting I found myself thinking a great deal about it and the one member who appeared so anxious to secure my presence there. I knew she would be on hand at the usual time with her sweet smile and friendly voice and urgent invitation. I could not refuse her again. It would be positively rude to do so. I would be ready and go with her, but I would not join.

I never saw a more beaming face than Mrs. Merrifind's when I met her at the door and signified my intention of accompanying her to the meeting. "I am so glad," she said, "for the pastor of the Methodist church has promised to give us a talk upon 'The Work of the W. C. T. U. in the Churches,' and I know it will be interesting."

And so I found it. It was a most delightful hour. The talk by the pastor was good, He showed us how the churches had need of consecrated mother-love, and how the church had been recruited through the work of the W. C. T. U., for it reached people by paths the church had not trod and could not or would not enter, the W. C. T, U. doing the work the church had failed to do. It was a strong, hopeful, inspiring, heart-searching talk.

The next week I went again, and that time I joined, and my heart is knitted to those women and this cause indissolubly. Somehow my whole horizon has broadened. I see more of this life and the life to come, and I couldn't fit back into the shell I crept out of the day I went to that first meeting.

How many women are willing to put their hand on some other woman, as that woman did on me—till she follows into the union?

It would seem wise to dwell at greater length upon the rationale of frying and broiling, to determine clearly what should and may be done by these processes to secure the best results.

FRYING.

Ordinary animal fats are not boilable under the pressure of our atmosphere (one of the constituent fatty acids of butter, butyric acid, being an exception; it boils at 314 degrees Farenheit). Before reaching the boiling point, the temperature at which they pass completely into the state of vapor, their constituents are more or less dissociated or separated by the repulsive agency of the heat, new compounds being in many cases formed by recombination of their elements. When beef drippings or lard splutters and bubbles it agrees with the boiling point of water, and the water it contains is being expelled. When all the water is driven off the liquid becomes quiescent, in spite of its temperature rising from 212 degrees to above 400 degrees, when a pungent, smoky vapor comes off and the oil grows darker. It is now suffering dissociation. A small bread crumb, the size of a walnut, if it frizzles and produces large bubbles of steam, indicates that the full temperature of frying in the hottest of fat is reached; if it frizzles slightly and only gives out small steam bubbles there is just the temperature demanded for slow frying. Articles to be fried should be dried and slightly warmed when possible.

Water, when suddenly heated above its boiling point, is a powerful explosive, and may be very dangerous, because it expands to 1,728 times its original bulk when converted into steam. Hence great care should be used not to let a drop of water fall in the hot fat, and the frying basket should be left submerged in the fat until the surface of the dough is browned or the egg and meal or crumbs of the coated surface are browned. The water contained amidst the fibres of the fish or meat or dough boils and drives out steam so rapidly that no fat can enter, while the albumen is retained because of the film of coagulated surface albumen. When taken out at the maximum cooking temperature and drained at once the amount of fat adhering is reduced to a minimum.

The bath is more economical of fat than pan frying. Olive oil of the best quality is the best frying medium and the most wholesome. Cotton seed oil is excellent and both give the yellow brown tint so desirable. Beef drippings is more wholesome than lard. Butter should not be used in pan frying for potato balls, pancakes, etc. It is unwholesome for this purpose and causes "heart burn." Olive oil is better, gives a more attractive color and is more delicate as well as wholesome; persons who dislike olive oil in salad will not suspect it in this form, and a less amount is required than of butter. When bought by the gallon and drawn off as it is needed it is not more costly.

BROILING.

The secret of broiling is frequent turning. The fire should be bright red and the coals nearly to the top of the fire-box, so that the broiler may almost touch the fire. There should be no flame, as the flame from coal is due to the combustion of tarry vapors, and will cause a deposit of coal tar on the meat giving it a smoky, nauseating flavor. When the fat from the chop or steak drips on the coals and blazes, it deposits a film of mutton or beef fat all over the meat quite different from the coal flame, good rather than harmful, as it helps to close the pores. In broiling by gas the flame is above and the fat drops below in a cool place, or in the new ideal broiler as at the "silver grill" the gas jets have the steak between them. The most important item in making meat tender is to hydrate the collogen of which the connective tissues and tendons are made. After this hydration which takes place at 212 degrees, the new product gelatine is soluble and allows the bundles of fibre to fall apart. But if this point is passed and the water driven off then the inside fibres and albumen are hardened and toughened. The rich flavor of beef is produced by the high temperature at the surface causing dissociation. (E. H. R.) The oxygen of the air is an added gain in roasting before the fire and in broiling.

After the first searing remove a greater distance from the fire. Turn over as often as ten is counted; the juices flow to the center and are there retained. As the juices are converted into steam by the heat they swell and give the meat a puffy appearance and this should not be lost since it means then that the juices are evaporated and the meat becomes dry, leathery and indigestible. Steak one inch thick may be cooked from five to twelve minutes, a mutton chop six to eight minutes. Either basted with its own fat once or twice during broiling is improved. Have a hot platter ready, sprinkle with salt and put on bits of butter (never melted butter) and serve at once; if gravy is desired have a few spoonfuls of water in which the bones cut from the steak have been boiling, also salt and pepper. When the steak is done, lay in platter and keep hot for five minutes, turning it once.

Chops, birds and dry fish are improved by broiling in paper, spread paper with olive oil: season and fold in paper, turning edges over several times and pinch these close together to the meat. The paper will char a long time before blazing. The meat will be basted in its own juices. A longer time will be required for the broiling, but when the paper is well browned the chop or bird will be done and will be found juicy, delicious and digestible and wholesome for the invalid. The larger the surface as of a thin steak or a small roast in proportion to the weight, the closer it should be kept to the hot juice at first until the meat is seared to secure the juices.

Chickens, three pounds, require slow broiling from twenty to thirty minutes. Broil until a rich brown on both sides and then put into a shallow pan and into a moderate oven (not over 200 degrees) for about twenty minutes. Fish requires less time than meat and may also be set in oven to secure thorough cooking essential to its wholesome preparation. A grating with a rim two or three inches high to let down into the stove hole (a sort of deep spider with grated bottom) for charcoal is best for broiling meat and for any steady cooking. A bushel of hardwood charcoal costing fifteen to twenty cents would last a long time.

BUYING OF MEAT.

A pound of meat from a fat ox may have more than twenty per cent less water than a corresponding piece from a lean one; of course such a piece may contain from three to four per cent less proteid; but to compensate for this it will have twenty-five per cent more fat. Pieces like tenderloins are not the richest in proteids and fats, though they do have the best flavor. Beef from the shin with the bones is best for soup stock and broth, while the pieces requiring to be made tender should be braised or steward; the best cuts should always be reserved for broiling and roasting. To cut up a quarter of beef at home and cook according to its best uses is a great saving.

TO MAKE MEAT TENDER.

It is well known that meat must be kept some time after the killing to make it tender. In winter a large piece of beef or mutton will keep for six weeks if hung in a dry, cool place. This is the time allowed in England for the Christmas "shoulder of mutton," and every few days it is rubbed over with salt and vinegar. In summer, unless the butcher will keep the meat for you, other means must be resorted to. A tough piece of meat may be laid in not too strong vinegar for three or four days in summer and twice as long in winter and spiced if desired. To soften a tough steak pour a few spoonfuls of vinegar and a spoonful of oil on and let stand from twelve to twenty-four hours. This is done in hotels where all cuts of steak are served tender. Sour milk may be used for the same purpose with even greater success, but this must be changed every day and at the end of the time well washed from the meat. Round steak at half the price of "porterhouse" and tenderloin can after a little experimenting, be made tender for stewing, roasting or broiling by one of these methods. In winter meat should be bought ahead and kept until tender. (M. H. A.)

Now that meat and fowls are frozen and carried long distances, the bones of meat and carcasses of the fowls may be injurious if frozen before the natural heat and gases have passed away. If the joint is pierced till the bone is entered by an iron prong the sickening odor of the gas will betray itself. Soups from such bones has caused serious illness. The beef itself does not indicate its condition and can only be tested even by the butcher as above.

Meats, vegetables and fruits should not be cooked in agate and porcelain ware that has been chipped. Some persons are more sensitive than others, and invalids may be very seriously harmed. Inspection of these cooking kettles, double boilers, etc., is necessary.

SUPPOSE.

Suppose the little cowslip
  Should hang its golden cup,
And say, "I'm such a tiny flower,
  I'd better not grow up;"
How many a weary traveler
  Would miss its fragrant smell;
And many a little child would grieve
  To lose it from the dell.

Suppose the little breezes,
  Upon a summer's day,
Should think themselves too small
  To cool the traveler on his way;
Who would not miss the smallest
  And softest ones that blow,
And think they made a great mistake,
  If they were talking so?

Suppose the little dewdrop
  Upon the grass should say,
"What can a little dewdrop do?
  I'd better roll away."
The blade on which it rested,
  Before the day was done,
Without a drop to moisten it,
  Would wither in the sun.

How many deeds of kindness
  A little child can do,
Although it has but little strength,
  And little wisdom, too!
It wants a loving spirit,
  Much more than strength, to prove
How many things a child may do
  For others by its love.

THAT'S THE WAY!

Just a little every day,
  That's the way!
Seeds in darkness swell and grow,
Tiny blades push through the snow.
Never any flower of May
Leaps to blossom in a burst,
Slowly—slowly—at the first.
  That's the way!
Just a little every day.

Just a little every day,
  That's the way!
Children learn to read and write,
Bit by bit, and mite by mite.
Never any one, I say,
Leaps to knowledge and its power.
Slowly—slowly—hour by hour.
  That's the way!
Just a little every day.

Many of the children would like to know about the great temperance reformer, John B. Gough. Eli Perkins, the well-known lecturer and humorist, who often speaks for temperance, frequently crossed paths with Gough in the lecture field, and gives the following account of an interview with him:

I asked Gough if he was an Englishman.

"Yes," he said, "I was born in 1817 at Sandygate, on the road between London and Dover, near Folkestone. There I used to play in the hop-yards of Kent, celebrate Guy Fawkes' Day and eat hot cross buns on Good Friday. Here Wilberforce, the great philanthropist, often patted me on the head."

"When did you come to America?" I asked.

"It was in August, 1829. I rode in a stage coach to London, stayed there till June, and took the ship, Helen, for New York, fifty-four days on the ocean. I rode up the Hudson in a steamboat, and took the canal to a farm near Vernon Center, Oneida county, N. Y. After two years on the farm, I returned to New York, and engaged with the Methodist Book Concern, on Crosby street, to learn the trade of bookbinding. My mother and sister joined me here, but business becoming slack, I lost my situation. I became intemperate, and we all became very poor. My mother died, and was actually buried in the potter's field, without a shroud!"

"It was then you commenced drinking, wasn't it?" I asked.

"Yes. I did it to drown my trouble. Often I went through the streets asking for work—'Please let me saw your wood?'

"'Where is your bucksaw?'

"'I have none. Please let me carry your coal down cellar?'

"'Where are your shovel and basket?'

"'I have none.'

"And so I lost my job for lack of implements and tools. Having been poor myself, do you wonder why I am always sympathizing with the poor?"

"When did you stop drinking?" I asked.

"In 1842, after I had been a drunkard for years. I signed the pledge in Worcester, Mass., which I have kept, with one exception, all my life. After that one false step I signed the pledge again. My friends took me back, and I have consecrated my life to the cause of temperance. Oh, I could fill a book with amusing and affecting scenes that I have witnessed."

"Do you ever tell any funny stories about drunkards?" I asked.

"Yes, it rests an audience. I used to tell about a drunken fellow who fell down a flight of thirty stairs in Erie, Pa. When a man came to help him, he said:

"'Go away, I don't want any help; that's the way I allus come down stairs.'

"The Bishop of Rhode Island told me he once saw a man, whom he had known years before, very drunk by the side of the road. He went to him and said:

"'My poor fellow, I am really sorry for you,' and went away. By and by he heard the man call, 'Bishop, Bishop!' So he went back.

"'Now' he said, 'Bishop, if you are very sorry, and you will say so again, I will forgive you.'

"We laugh at such drolleries and at such vagaries as we do at the man who came home at four o'clock in the morning and said it was but one.

"'But,' said his wife, 'the clock just struck four.'

"'I know better, for I heard it strike one—repeatedly!'

"What other funny incident do you remember?" I asked.

"You have heard, Eli, of the man who went into his house in the dark, haven't you?"

"What about him?"

"Well, he had been drinking and was very thirsty. He groped about for the water-pitcher and found it. He lifted it to his mouth and began to drink very rapidly. One of his children had dropped a soft ball of yarn into the pitcher, and in his hurry he swallowed it. He felt something very disagreeable and strange, and he became frightened, and dropped the pitcher.

"'Oh, dear; oh, dear; oh, dear!' He caught hold of the end of the yarn, and in great affright he began to draw it from his mouth.

"'Wife, wife,' he shouted, 'hurry up, hurry up, I'm all unraveling!'"

"JUST AS THE TWIG IS BENT THE TREE INCLINES."

In a recent address to teachers and children, Miss Willard spoke as follows:

"My left-handedness furnishes an illustration that I have often used, of the imperious law of habit. Mother always thought me to be not naturally defective in this way, but that the difficulty was superinduced by a girl who helped take care of me and who, being left-handed herself, took special pains to train me in the same direction. However this may have been, mother determined to break it up, and would take my little hand, wind it loosely in white cloth, bound on securely at the wrist and make me go like that day after day. I remember well, though I could not have been more than three or four years old, the misery I felt in being crippled thus, and the pains I took to keep that hand behind me. Meanwhile, as time went on mother sedulously placed table-knife, pencil, needle and scissors in my right hand, teaching me how to hold them, and to this day I never use these things with my left hand and could not without positive discomfort. But this was before the day of silver forks, at least at our house, and I cannot hold one comfortably save in the left hand. She did not think that I should develop into an accomplished Brother Jonathan jack-knife whittler, so no education was given on that subject, and my lead pencil whittling must be done with the left hand or not at all. She did not think that I should ever become a gesturer and I am so left-handed at this exercise as often to be accused after a speech of the very disability against which my faithful mother strove so earnestly. Now, since we are such prisoners of our early training, let me here point a moral by imploring every mother who reads this to teach her boys and girls specifically, the rules of life that she would have them know for health, for helpfulness and happiness and that she desires them to transmit to their posterity."

At a big Christmas gathering of poor children last Christmas, it was shown that four thousand oranges could disappear down four thousand throats in exactly four minutes' time. Quick work, wasn't it?

Dear Boys and Girls:—Many bright eyes scan eagerly the space between the Children's and the Woman's buildings at the World's Fair these early summer days, expecting to see the bronze figure of the child holding out the cup of water to passers-by—our Willard Fountain, about which so much has been written and said. All of us, young and old, are sorry that the beautiful fountain is not yet in its place, but you all know that "accidents will happen in the best regulated families," don't you, and that it seems is the cause of the delay. An accident occurred in the foundry in England, so that our little maiden's head had to be recast. You will all be glad to hear that the figure has been shipped and is expected in this country very soon. It is thus with true temperance spirit, overcoming all difficulties, that the Loyal Temperance Legion of the United States and the world will realize its hopes.

Although the dimes should be sent directly to Miss Anna Gordon, Evanston, Ill., a number have found their way to the Cozy Corner. Many of these were earned, by self-denial or in some other way. A little Illinois niece writes, "I earned my ten cents by wiping dishes for three weeks." A California Cozy Corner reader says, "I earned this dime by stacking weeds for papa." I think the "earned" dimes have the true ring of the spirit of self-sacrifice, don't you?

Miss Anna Gordon has hit upon a plan by which each one of you can receive a beautiful souvenir aluminum medal of the Willard Fountain and help to pay for it as well. It is to secure one dollar or ten ten-cent donations to the fountain fund. On sending these to her at Evanston, Ill., you will receive the medal. Let us have hosts of these medals in the Cozy Corner.

Affectionately,

At that day ye shall ask in my name: and I say not unto you, that I will pray the Father for you.—John 16:26.

PHILOSOPHY IN PRAYER.

Prayer is as multitudinous in form as are human conceptions of the Deity. No matter how primitive man's condition we find the instinct of prayer to and propitiation of ideal powers more or less developed.

All men pray; but all men do not dignify their aspirations with the name of prayer. Nevertheless it is true that every sincere desire, every impulse toward a something above and beyond, is, in the deepest sense, prayer. All great thinkers—those who have delved deepest into the laws of human nature—have recognized both the perfect naturalness and the beneficent results of prayer. "Prayer is the soul's breathing function," says Drummond; and "More things are wrought by prayer than this world dreams of," affirms Tennyson.

The involuntary cry to God of the professed unbeliever in the hour of danger or distress is an assertion of the inner and true nature. This spontaneous recognition of the existence of God testifies to the possibility of man's living in touch with God. It suggests a relationship between man and his Maker which, if subtle, is very real and practical.

The Christian churches recognize the power of prayer, though they do not undertake to explain the universal impulse to pray. Indeed, many Christian people would, no doubt, repudiate as irreverent the thought of "reducing" prayer to a science. And yet there is true science in prayer—science which is all the more natural because it is spiritual. So far from its being "reduced" by being scientific—in other words by satisfying the head as well as the heart—prayer gains immeasurably in power and in reverence.

Experience, that most potent of all teachers, has demonstrated the value of prayer. We W. C. T. U. women especially have reason to affirm with the devout Fenelon that "prayer is not an effort to overcome God's reluctance, but a taking hold of His willingness."

"According to your faith be it unto you." The Father's good gifts to His children are ever proportionate to their capacity for receiving them, and the measure of their faith is the measure of their capacity. That is to say, all things are already ours, because we are Christ's, and in order to have our desire fulfilled, our prayer answered, we have only to take hold of this truth, and appropriate "in His name," that which we desire. "What things soever ye desire when ye pray believe that ye receive them and ye shall have them." In these words of the Master is summed up the whole philosophy of Christian prayer.

Why should it be necessary for the child of God to "agonize" in prayer any more than it is necessary for the child of an earthly parent to "agonize" that he may obtain possession of his own? With the heir of God as with the heir of earthly estate, the first step is to be conscious of his heritage—to believe it is his—and then to take it and use it. One praying woman writes, "My prayer used to be, 'Father, give, give.' Now, with an enlightened understanding, I thank Him that He has given all good unto me, and I pray that through the power and intelligence of the Holy Spirit I may be able to receive and appropriate what is already mine." In the divine economy the supply creates the demand, and the moment we believe that we receive, that moment hidden forces begin to operate in bringing to us our own. And let us not be afraid of "asking amiss." We pray for something that we imagine will contribute to our happiness, or the happiness of those about us; and if our conception of present good is erroneous—as it is very apt to be—the all-wise, "wonderfully kind" Father answers our prayer in just the way we would have it answered if we knew, as He does, the end from the beginning.

"The love of God is broader Than the measure of man's mind," and He understands the real desire of our hearts much better than we do ourselves.

In its last analysis the prayer of all mankind is for satisfaction. To be satisfied—this is the ultimatum of all religion, all philosophy! But it is not often that our petitions contain this desire in words, or even in thought. We are more prone to ask for those things we imagine will bring us the satisfaction, the harmony we crave. Our Father, on the other hand, notes and answers the desire which really prompts the prayer. We make the discovery, then, that in essence God's will and man's will are identical, hence we may feel sure that though it may not be my way, and it may not be thy way, still in His own way (which is the best way) He will fulfill the true desire of all hearts.

It is the soul of prayer which reaches the heart of the Eternal. So in the Apocalyptic vision John sees the prayers of the saints ascending as incense before the throne, the odorous smoke symbolizing the prayer essence.

The old Jewish legend of Sandalphon, which Longfellow calls a "beautiful, strange superstition," has, like most legends, something more in it than mere superstition. This Angel of Prayer, it is said, stands at the outermost gates of the celestial city, his feet on Jacob's ladder,

"Listening breathless
To sounds that ascend from below;
From the spirits on earth that adore,
From the souls that entreat and implore
In the fervor and passion of prayer;
From the hearts that are broken with losses,
And weary with dragging the crosses,
Too heavy for mortals to bear.
And he gathers the prayers as he stands,
And they change into flowers in his hands,
Into garlands of purple and red;
And beneath the great arch of the portal,
Through the streets of the City Immortal
Is wafted the fragrance they shed."

It is not the coarser fibre of human prayer, not the form of petition, however pure and beautiful, which rises to the supreme height. It is not the word, not even the thought as shaped by finite mind; it is only the very essence of that thought (of which the petitioner himself is scarcely conscious), only the soul of the prayer, only the fragrance of the flower, that ascends unto the pure regions of highest heaven.

Mothers' prayers, we think, must shed the most beautiful and lasting fragrance of all. And think of the perpetual fragrance wafted through the golden streets and up to the great white throne by the noon-tide prayers of that organized motherhood which belts the world to-day! These prayers, so permeated with the Christ Spirit, are redolent of the sacred incense of a sacrifice which was given "for us an offering to God for a sweet smelling savor."

THE TRAINING OF THE MEMORY.

Our attention has recently been called to a series of five books on the training of the memory. Examination convinces us that this work is of great value to any one who desires a good memory and who is willing to work for it. We feel impressed that the subject is one to which our busy W. C. T. U. women can well afford to give some time and thought.

No argument is needed to prove the importance of well developed powers of memory. While it may be admitted that the reasoning power is of a higher order, it nevertheless remains true that it and all other mental powers are useless without the memory. No man can be an original investigator in science or philosophy without being able to remember scientific and philosophical facts so as to compare them and learn their relations to one another; and the more facts he remembers and the more accurately he recalls them, the greater will be his success. If we are to judge the future by the past, it is absolutely necessary that we have at ready command the events of the past. We shall be utterly unable to judge of the causes which underlie the great movements of history unless we have a wide and accurate knowledge of historical facts. In short, in every kind of work, whether it be science, philosophy, art, literature or the manifold lines of business life, a man is handicapped who is not the possessor of a good memory. No other faculty of the mind, however great it may be by nature, can be properly developed or effectively used if memory is wanting.

This being an acknowledged fact, it is remarkable that almost nothing is done for the cultivation of this power so necessary to success. We read of persons, especially among the ancients, gifted with prodigious powers of memory; we admire and wonder, perhaps envy, but not one in a thousand entertains as a passing dream the thought that he himself might, by systematic training, approximate these attainments. People seem very generally to have fallen into the notion that one's memory, like his nose, is given to him ready made and he must take it as it is and ask no questions. Yet, while it is true of memory as of all mental powers that people differ by natural endowment, it is equally true that the difference which exists in respect to all these abilities is oftener due to a difference of development than to unequal natural endowment.

It was not chance nor was it a strange freak of nature which made so general the remarkable memories of the age of the Bards. If we consider the existing circumstances, we shall find in them sufficient cause for the seemingly universal gift of memory. The lack of books and of any adequate method of committing valuable literary material to written form, made necessary the art of remembering. In short, people were obliged to use their memories and, as a consequence, they had memories to use. Any one who had the privilege of obtaining access to a poem or other literature of value committed it, for lack of any other safe repository, to his memory. The result was he formed the habit of remembering and the more he committed to his memory, the better and the more easily his memory served him. If we examine recent examples, we find still that memory has been developed by the same process. Almost without exception persons "gifted" with remarkable memories have received the gift not at the hands of partial nature but from their own hard, systematic training of the faculty.

Yet with these facts easily within reach, we in our age of the world for the most part leave our memories to develop incidentally, not to say accidentally. True, the different grades of school work are supposed to develop all of the mental powers, doubtless do so to a greater or less extent. The public school and college curriculums provide what might, properly used, be excellent training for the memory. The difficulty is the student does not know exactly what he is trying to do and no one tells him. Could students be carefully instructed concerning the mental powers which are to be developed, the studies specially calculated to develop the different faculties and the way in which he is to study in order to achieve the best results, much better ends would be reached than are at present. Instead of this, however, he is given his tasks and left to conquer them as best he may, by any method which he happens to hit upon, in the hope that he will, somehow, in the process train his mental powers. Some training doubtless does result from this with a pupil who is at all faithful to his work; but only the exceptional few find the best methods and attain the highest success. Perhaps the faculty which suffers most by this system is the memory.

Any one who really conquers a course in mathematics must thereby obtain a fair development of his reasoning faculties, but, with the cramming methods which form so important a factor in our present educational system, the memory often is not only not developed, but positively injured in the process of "getting an education."

The only good thing that can be said of English spelling is that, studied in the right way, it is excellent memory gymnastics; the outrageous spellers who form a large portion of all college classes prove how far spelling has failed to fulfill the one only purpose it could possibly serve.

History, also, which should serve at least the double purpose of giving useful information and of training the memory, is, in the vain effort to teach all the history of the past in the course of two or three school years, divested of everything which gives it the slightest interest and reduced to mere lists of dates and apparently disconnected and uninteresting facts. These the student crams in portions for each day's recitation, and, at last, by a fearful effort, the whole is more or less thoroughly crammed for the dreaded examination. That ordeal once safely past, the facts slip from the mind, leaving the memory impoverished and weakened for future use.

Various artificial and absurd methods for the assistance of the memory have been devised, and all of them have found some victims, but thus far there has been a painful lack of anything like scientific memory training. The memory series already referred to appeals at once to the good sense of the investigator, because it is based upon well known and unquestioned scientific principles. The theory upon which all of its suggestions are based is simply that in order to train the memory we must regularly use it.

The points to be specially noted in this system of memory culture are these: First, the memory must be exercised daily, not spasmodically; second, begin with easy tasks, and gradually increase them. Never overburden the memory; we do not strengthen the muscles of the arm by exercise which is so severe as to lame us; just as unreasonable it is to begin setting the memory at tasks which it is utterly unable to accomplish; third, during the process of committing to memory, consult the text at once when in doubt, so as to train the memory to be accurate; fourth, review frequently, and always from memory. If we faithfully follow these directions we are assured of success, not only the young, but even those in middle life and the aged. If the evident reasonableness of the method does not commend itself to our judgment there are numberless examples of persons who have acquired remarkable memories by this same method.

We are strongly impressed with the value of this system to our busy white-ribbon workers. Setting aside the consideration of memory training in itself, can we estimate the value to us of a ready command of extensive portions of the Scripture? Here we find the means easily to supply ourselves with these weapons of our warfare from the armory of God's word. The author of this series recommends that one begin with learning two verses daily, each day review all that has been learned before and devote one day weekly entirely to review. As the memory becomes stronger the individual will easily increase the daily amount learned. We strongly recommend to all W. C. T. U. workers who do not already practice this or a similar method to begin it at once.

PLEDGE.—"I hereby solemnly promise, God helping me, to abstain from all distilled, fermented and malt liquor, including Wine and Cider, and to employ all proper means to discourage the use of and traffic in the same."

QUESTION.—On page 573, of Miss Willard's" Glimpses of Fifty Years," I find what purports to be a prophecy: "The Lord gave the word, the women that published the tidings are a great host." Will you kindly state where the quotation can be found? AN INQUIRER.

ANSWER.—The quotation can be found in Ps. 68: 11, revised version. EDS.

Q.—Can any local union in a province corresponding to one of the United States change or amend any part of the local constitution of the W. C. T. U. when the same does not provide for such amendment?

A.—The absence of an article specifying how a constitution may be amended would not make it impossible for the body which adopted it to change it. That no one should have an opportunity to find fault it would be best to give notice of the changes desired, so that all might fully understand that the change was contemplated, and also give the subject matter of the change, in said notice, and then carry by a two-thirds vote.

CAROLINE B. BUELL.

Q.—What is the position of the W. C. T. U. officially expressed, in reference to the Prohibition party?

A.—The resolution adopted at Denver reads, on this point, "Now, as in the past, every sentiment and every principle impel us to pledge our moral support to that political party which declares for the protection of the home against the saloon."

Q.—Have any of the funds of the W. C. T. U. ever been used in conducting a political campaign of the Third party, or in any way to promote its interests?

A.—No penny of National funds has ever been used, directly or indirectly, for the benefit of any political party. State and local unions are free to do as they may deem best.

Q.—What attitude does the great W. C. T. U. sustain to the political parties of this country at the present time, or did it sustain during the campaign just closed?

A.—No woman is individually bound to any party by the W. C. T. U. The resolution quoted gives the attitude of the organization.

About once in so often these same questions appear.

ESTHER PUGH.

Q.—We meet women on the streets who are known to be unchaste, but were formerly our acquaintances and thought to be respectable, yet we do not now recognize or speak to them. We meet men as bad or worse, and if acquainted, both recognize and speak to them, and possibly shake hands with them. Is this right? If not, how ought it to be? Shall we refuse to recognize the men as we do the women? Or, shall we recognize the women as we do the men? Or is there some middle ground where we can treat the women a little better, and the men not quite so well? That we should manifest the Spirit of Christ toward both classes, and try to serve them is evident. But whether and how to treat both alike, and what kind of recognition, if any, to give them in public places are the questions. T. C. J.

A.—You ask concerning our mode of conduct toward men and women known to be socially impure. The matter is one deeply involved, and a full answer to it would occupy more time than can be given here. You ask, "Shall we refuse to recognize the men as we do the women? Or, shall we recognize the women as we do the men?"

In the life that "society" maps out for so many, too many —the question is nearly always settled thus:—scorn the woman, let the man go free, but every honest soul revolts at such injustice, and Christians—i. e., true relatives of Christ, ask just the questions you have asked. Have you ever noticed that the nearer a human life copies after the life of Christ, the simpler it becomes in its actions, the less it has to do with "the world," and the more easily these problems of how to act under certain circumstances, are solved? Manifestly it is wrong to ignore a fellow-woman who has sinned. Kindly recognition can always be given by a Christian, to any one that may be met in the daily walks of life, without any harm or impropriety; it is even one's duty to do such. A man or a woman whose sole business in the world is to be about the "Father's business" will find in each circumstance the thing to do, the word to say or leave unsaid. "Neither do I condemn thee, go and sin no more" embraces a world of wise, kind example—forgiveness, with the simple injunction to a better life. And thus it seems one woman can, and ought, always to meet another, with Christ love and tenderness in her heart, and if there be occasion, words of forgiveness and loving suggestion on her lips. If there be no opportunity for these latter, the very presence of one whose life is "hid with Christ in God," is in itself a rebuke to sin and a beckoning to a higher life. Of course, there are those cases of whom we say "hardened in sin." The love of Christ will conquer where human strength alone would only fail. Ah, there is the trouble! We are, many of us, only half Christs, and the unredeemed half gets in the way and hinders every good effort, and when our sister strays we see no way to "keep ourselves unspotted from the world" but to run away far from her and thus leave her alone to her final ruin. It is safe always to say, "What would Jesus have done under just these circumstances?" When one is honestly assured of His course, then go and do likewise!

About a woman's conduct toward an impure man. One difficulty arises from the fact that no woman, or but few, wants a man to know that she knows of his sin. So out of a false "modesty" she treats him as she always has done. This, too, is wrong. And again, Christian wisdom must be the guide. "Society" may demand that we meet and greet them, shake hands with them, eat and drink with them! Does the best sense that is in us, enlightened by the Spirit of the Holy One, demand these things? What about the "Father's business"? When a woman is about that, and that only, in store, at home, on the streets, she can meet the men she must meet in a womanly way, being rude to none, "winking at" no known sin, rebuking where rebuke is wise, refusing her companionship but never her counsel or aid, if needed. Such a woman is a rebuke to sin and sinful men. EDITORS.

The position of the two classes in the church, retrogressive and progressive, so far as the temperance reform is concerned, may be likened to that of the two oxen of whom the owner said, "These critters agree to a dot, one of them is always willing to pull, and the other is always willing to let him."

By request, On Duty furnishes the following parallel, which though often repeated, is ever good: "Which do you want? Twenty-five snakes running through the grass? That's 'free whisky.' Twenty-five snakes gathered into a box, in which twenty-five holes are made by the authority of the court? That's 'low license.' Ten of the holes closed, and the snakes all getting out through the other fifteen? That's 'high license.' All the snakes driven over to the next village? That's 'local option.' All the snakes in all the country killed? That's 'prohibition.'"

"The question (of woman's future) is happily (?) solved in some countries by the practice of polygamy, which allows every man to maintain as many wives as his means permits. In others etiquette requires that a newly-made widow be burned on the funeral pyre with her husband's body, while the Chinese take the precaution to drown surplus female children. It would seem that any of these methods is more logical and less cruel than the system we pursue of permitting the entire female population to live, but making it impossible for those born to poverty to maintain themselves in comfort, because they are hampered by a caste feeling almost as strong as that ruling in India." Such an expression from Mrs. Potter Palmer, Chicago's leading "society" lady, is decidedly refreshing.

From a private letter written by an American lady missionary in India, we quote: "In the recent Decennial Conference held at Bombay, when the vote was taken after a discussion a man arose and said, 'The women are voting and they are not members of the conference.' Bishop Thoburn said, 'All those actively engaged in mission work are members of the conference,' and that passed. To cap it all, the chairman, Bishop Thoburn, read the names, eleven, of the committee chosen for the next conference, and not a woman's among them. But mind, they hadn't forgotten to put on a native. I couldn't stand it! I rose, and addressing the chairman, said, 'I move that a lady be added to the committee.' I think they were more amused at my cheek than anything else. The house was in an uproar in an instant. Several men on one seat arose to second it. All stared and laughed for a time, and clapped long and hard. Bishop Thoburn, chairman, said, 'The point is well taken, and ought to be acted upon.' Thus the women have gained a decade."

"I've been abroad since last November," writes a lady who landed in New York a few days ago, "and my experience has been one of perversities. To begin with, in 'sunny Italy' last winter, we almost froze to death. I I shall never forget the desolation and chilly discomfort of those Roman and Florentine lodgings. In May we went to London, because that is the month we were told to enjoy that metropolis. It rained all the time that it was not so cold we were perishing. We did the cathedral towns in uninterrupted rain and mist. My idea of English cathedrals is set in a cloud of gray moisture. We drove out to Rosalind Castle from Edinburg in the most pitiless rainstorm I ever experienced, so that historic place has also a wet blanket thrown over it for all time in my mind. 'Go to Devonshire in July for cool weather,' we were told. We did, and sweltered. The traditional 'green' English lanes were brown and dry. It wasn't much better on the continent. At one place, after four in the afternoon, a chill mist penetrated one's very bones; at others sudden drenching showers were daily occurrences. I should think Europeans who come over here must marvel at our monotony of glorious, sunny days, with our charming summer twilights, fading slowly into radiant, starlit nights when one can be abroad till midnight without risk. As we sailed up the bay last week under a sky more brilliantly blue than any I saw in Italy and through an atmosphere that would have made a Londoner think the millennium had come, if he should ever see one so clear, and I realized that this was just a common New York day that nobody noticed except rejoicing prodigals like ourselves, my heart swelled with delight that I was American born and home again." HOW ONE EARNEST ADVOCATE WORKED FOR THE GREAT PETITION.

Seeing in The Advance Mrs. M. B. Norton's article on the "Great Petition," I wrote at once for some blanks, and received them about three weeks before the time I must return them to reach Chicago by the date fixed. It seemed to me to furnish a good opportunity to call on "the ladies," whom otherwise I would have no pretext to visit, also it seemed to me a useful thing to bring the idea of temperance to the notice of the people, and cause them to give a little thought to it, and perhaps awake some feeble wish to really do something. I closed our school three afternoons, and our good Bible woman visited among her friends, while I called on the Damas. If only for the sake of our work I feel well repaid for all the effort it cost me. To sit half an hour in their parlors and talk with them on any subject, and, on going, to be assured that their "house and all they have is at my service," does not mean a great deal, to be sure, but it breaks that icy reserve which has been so far impenetrable, and some of these ladies have shown real cordiality, which will, I think, assure me a welcome some future day. To any of them, I think, the "Protestant woman" will seem a less uncanny or dangerous creature than they imagined.

In many places there was a frank acknowledgment of the terrible evil, and a fervent wish that the government might "do something." I grew bolder as experience went on, and urged them to realize that they ought to take some active measures in hand—try to save the boys; even to talk about it among themselves would be of some good. In most cases a wife declined to sign it until she could "get permission" from her husband, if he were not present. These I seldom got on a second call, but on several occasions, when the head of the house was present, he first read the Petition, then handed it to his wife to sign. One of these was a saloon-keeper; there is no odium in that business here. I called on the doctor's wife. He is so notable a sot as to be considered entirely unfit for his business, but his sweet young wife did not feel at liberty to sign it. Two employés of the government failed to give "permission" to their wives, one of them making their employ a reason why they must not sign a petition. And this in a republic, by a county judge!

In two places where the husbands are perpetual drinkers, the wives signed it with right good will, without asking if they might. In one house, where the mother "must wait to consult," a son came into the parlor and asked, "What is it?" He and his brother can seldom attend a dance or a night with companions without coming home overcome. He said, "That's a good thing." Then I set before him the part that belongs to him to do—sign an abstinence pledge and urge the same upon his comrades. I offered to furnish him a pledge, which he cordially accepted and promised to try to lead others in the matter.

The temperance cause here is back where it was in the United States when Doctor Rush began. The idea of total abstinence is regarded as "one of the heretical notions of those foreigners."

It has never been my privilege to join the W. C. T. U. sisterhood, but with all my heart I sympathize with it in its battle against the saloon. For several years I had the privilege and pleasure of preparing the temperance department for El Festigo (The Witness) which is the religious semi-weekly paper maintained by our mission, the American Board, for Mexican readers. I found that work truly an inspiring one, and so many-sided in the phases of its presentation. I translated largely from the Temperance Calendar, from Gustafson, from Gough, from opinions of eminent physicians, explorers, the ancients, in fact, all sorts of grist came to my hopper, and sometimes the fire burned in my bones till I could not help writing something. We are face to face with an awful need. The saloon has gone to seed and its deadly harvest is growing fast in every home. I do not see how any Christian can keep silence here, yet, although the other protestant Christian papers, of which there are ten in Mexico, have occasional articles on the subject, ours is the only one that keeps up systematic teaching. This department is now in able hands.

I do not understand how W. C. T. U. work should have become overshadowed in Mexico, for all around the capital each of the missions there represented has an abundance of missionary wives and single ladies, and a large constituency of Mexican people. Of course all of our churches become total abstinence societies, but it is difficult to do much effective temperance work in the circle outside of our own adherents. Protestantism bears an opprobrium which attaches itself more or less to everything we advocate, but the religious paper finds its way to many readers who otherwise scarcely come under our influence.

My heart yearns over the middle and upper classes from which we are mainly ostracised, socially, but my work among them with the Petition makes me feel there is a little hope. I tried to incite them to organize among themselves and by any means make felt their opposition to the monster that is devouring their families, but Mexican women are the opposite of aggressive.

ORGANIZATION OF THE JAPAN W. C. T. U.

We take great pleasure in writing you about the new organization of our National W. C. T. U. While Miss Mary Allen West was working here with us, her earnest prayer was to organize a National W. C. T. U. She gave us many valuable instructions how to make the rules and laws of the organization.

Since then we have met many times and discussed the matter, and finally we decided to organize a National W. C. T. U. As the first step, the organization committee sent letters to thirty-five unions in different states and districts, asking them to send their delegates to Tokio for the purpose of organizing a National union.

The meetings were held April 1-3. The rules and by-laws, containing sixteen articles, were adopted. The charter members were Mesdames Harada, Haltori, Honda, Tokutomi, Watase, Yokoi, Takekoshi, Tsuda, Mshioda, Yajima, Kojima, Aoki, Sasaki, Saika, Sakurai, Motora and Miyama, representing local unions.

The official election took place in the afternoon of April 3, at the Reinanzaka Congregational Church; Mrs. K. Yajima took the chair. This is the program:

1. Singing.—"The Gates Ajar."
2. Prayer.—Mrs. Sada Honda.
3. Bible Reading.—146th Psalm, Mrs. K. Yajima.
4. Singing.—"He Leadeth."
5. Address.—Mrs. T. Sasaki.
6. Election of officers.
7. Words by Mr. Kiyotera Nakagawa.
8. Business meeting.
9. Singing and reading of telegrams.

The officials were elected as follows: National president, Mrs. Kaji Yajima; recording secretary, Mrs. Takeyo Takekoshi; corresponding secretary, Mrs. Toku Nemoto; treasurer, Mrs. Kotake Shimomura. The words of Mr. K. Nakagawa helped much in the organization. Five unions have united with the National W. C. T. U. They are Yokkaichi W. C. T. U., Kasaoka W. C. T. U., Takahashi W. C. T. U., Kanazawa W. C. T. U. and Tokio W. C. T. U.

Six departments have been adopted, with National superintendents as follows: Organization, Mesdames Ushioda and Yajima; education, Mesdames Motora and Honda; reform, Mesdames Tokutomi and Sasaki; health, Mesdames Tsuda and Saika; literary, Mrs. Takekoshi and Miss Aoki; law, Mrs. Kigo Kojima. Telegrams of congratulation were received from Kanazawa and Takahashi W. C. T. U.

We hope good results will follow our National organization. We ask your prayers that we may be able to work for God, home and humanity.

MRS. KAJI YAJIMA,
Pres. Nat. W. C. T. U. of Japan.

NEW SOUTH WALES.

A BAND OF WORKERS.

In reading the reports of the various unions in THE UNION SIGNAL, I felt as if I would like to send one in too, from this far-away land of ours, and hope you will find a little corner for it. We have only a young band here, having been reorganized about twelve months ago, and number about seventy members.

We have various departments in full working order, especially flower mission, literature, tract distribution, free boxes, district visiting, social purity, and cottage and mothers' meetings. We have been greatly benefited during the year by the lectures and addresses of several well known temperance workers, notably Dr. Kate Bushnell, Mrs. E. W. Andrew and Dr. Lucas, and more recently of the Victorian evangelists Misses Vincent and Cummins.

These last named white-ribboners were with us on March 3, 4, 5, 6. At all the meetings large and appreciative congregations were present. Sunday afternoon a mass-meeting of the Sunday-schools, teachers and friends was held. Misses Vincent and Cummins conducted service in the Wesleyan church, and their appeal to Christians and sinners will long be remembered.

We were looking forward to another visit from Miss Ackermann and were very sorry indeed to learn that she was leaving our coasts. We have really greatly benefited by the visits and addresses of our white-ribbon sisters, and hope some day to be assured that we are not as "slow" as our American sisters now say we are.

THE RANGOON W. C. T. U.

Just a word about the work in Rangoon. I missed the visit of Miss Ackermann, arriving after she had left the country, which was a source of regret to me. Our union is keeping up a gospel meeting every Saturday evening, under the charge of different members, each being responsible for a month. In this way we reach a goodly number of the floating population. It has seemed wise to discontinue our fortnightly meetings and instead we have two each quarter, one for ladies only and the other a public meeting. We began this new order of things by a pleasant parlor meeting in our home which was well attended. Our public meeting held April 7 took the form of a Demorest medal contest held in Burma. The ladies of the Methodist school kindly put this in place of their usual exhibition and the music and speaking were of a high order. The room was well filled and much interest shown. We realized also a nice sum for our empty treasury. We trust another cold season will bring other true and tried workers to Burma.

BULGARIA.

THE NEW NATIONAL TEMPERANCE UNION.

In my last letter to THE UNION SIGNAL, I made allusion to the intention to organize a National Temperance Union in Bulgaria. I am glad to report now the realization of that idea. A goodly number of delegates from all the temperance bands in Bulgaria gathered in Samokov, the 12th of April. With one exception all the delegates were convinced of the pressing need of such a union and at once proceeded to its organization. This is a union of both men's and women's temperance bands, although for the women's bands is reserved the right to belong also to the World's W. C. T. U. The object of the union is more aggressive work in the temperance cause in Bulgaria.

Permit me through your columns to express my hearty thanks to the W. C. T. U. of Louisa county, Iowa, for temperance literature. There are but few of those interested in temperance work here who can read English. I have supplied them all with a copy of each of the pamphlets and leaflets sent me. The rest I will send to Philippopolis and Samokov in Bulgaria. Probably the first work of the union will be to publish in Bulgarian some of the above alluded to pamphlets. I wish there might be some other W. C. T. U's now that will imitate the example of the W. C. T. U. of Louisa county, Iowa, and send us some money to help publish such of the pamphlets sent us as will be adapted for Bulgarian readers. All the temperance literature that may be sent to us from America to do good to our people must be put into our language. We only need enough of English to make selections from.

We hope soon to begin publishing a temperance semi-monthly.

WORLD'S WAVE CRESTS.

MADAME ANDERSSON-MEYERHELM is no longer living in Sweden, but in Paris, and therefore is not vice-president of her native country, but she is still connected with the W. C. T. U.

HARTNEY, Manitoba, a young town on the Souris river, has just organized a W. C. T. U. which has a membership of fifty-one, all of whom have affixed their names to the Great Petition.

UNDER the auspices of the W. C. T. U. of Johannesburg, Transvaal, South Africa, a temperance hall is being erected to offset the attractions of the saloon. The building will contain coffee and reading-rooms besides the hall, and the union has been aided in its enterprise by the generosity of Rev. Mr. Hazenberg, a missionary.

MRS. L. N. WHEELER, secretary of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union of Shanghai, China, in sending some signatures to the Great Petition, adds, "I am pleased to report a growing interest in the temperance work in this city. Last evening at our annual social gathering we looked into many new faces that we hope may soon join the ranks to fight this giant evil."

A NEATLY printed pamphlet comes to THE UNION SIGNAL entitled "Minutes of the New Zealand W. C. T. U." containing the account and reports of the eighth annual meeting held this spring at Napier, presided over by Mrs. A. J. Schnackenberg, colonial president. With its twenty-one departments of work, its nineteen local unions and five Y Branches, the colony is earnestly battling in the peaceful war.

AT a conference of Christian workers held in Kingston, Jamaica, May 1, Miss Constantia Maddix, the active W. C. T. U. president, presented the claims of the W. C. T. U. in an address asking for coöperation on the part of other Christian workers. The Kingston union has sent a circular letter to the doctors of that city urging non-alcoholic medication, enclosing a pointed pamphlet entitled "What we Expect of our Doctors."

Dr. KATE BUSHNELL has made out for Miss Willard and Lady Henry Somerset, president and vice president of the W. W. C. T. U., a most valuable directory giving names and addresses of leading temperance women and men in every important town of Asia, Africa and Australia. To all of these our documents will be sent and thus the W. W. C. T. U. will become rooted in the knowledge and interest of the fittest survival throughout the eastern hemisphere.

ILLINOIS.

GATHERED STRAWS.

It can hardly be expected that W. C. T. U. workers in Illinois will keep their eyes fixed exclusively upon "their own knitting work" this year of the great Columbian Exposition, and it will not be strange if some "stitches should be dropped" while, incidentally, the "show" is on hand, and the "procession and big elephants are passing this way."

The question whether women will use the ballot, when within their reach, has been answered by the interest shown in the election of school officers this spring. The largest vote ever cast in Bloomington for members of the board of education was last month, when women cast 2,535 ballots out of an aggregate of 5,286. I hardly need to say that a very large proportion of them were women of intelligence and culture. In another town 105 out of the 228 votes were cast by women. These straws show which way suffrage breezes are blowing. In several instances women were elected members of the school board.

The helpful presence of Mrs. Rounds, our state president, at several conventions, since her return from Clifton Springs, has been an inspiration. Mrs. Carlock, our vice-president, so closely connected with the work of the Chicago Central union, has had charge of the Willard Hall meetings, yet she has found time to lend a hand, and an eloquent voice, too, at various points from which good reports have come. Our state superintendent of evangelistic work and her assistant have been "in labors abundant" in many parts of the state, while Miss Wintringer, of the L. T. L., Mrs. Cole, of the young woman's department and Miss Walker, with W. T. P. A. literature, have good results to show for their itineraries. District presidents and superintendents are not supposed to believe in vacations.

Our legislators at Springfield have had reason to know that the Illinois W. C. T. U. wants better protection for the girls. Mrs. Metzgar, aided by friends, presented those Solons with some valuable reading matter in the shape of: "Pray you, sir, whose daughter?" This was done in the interest of a bill for the better protection of girls. The committee, to whom was referred the presentation of a bill, asking for an industrial and reformatory institution for vicious women and girls, also visited Springfield legislators.

This is the season of county conventions and reports show that they have been interesting occasions. At the close of some the general expression of citizens has been "We ought to have had this convention before our spring election," thus implying a positive force for good.

McLean county W. C. T. U. of the fourteenth district had the novel experience of being invited by the Y's to hold its convention at LeRoy. The Y's of LeRoy have the "right of way" in that town and a brighter set of young people are not often found. The white ribbons of the honoraries are a goodly sight to contemplate. The young men even proved themselves to be experts in serving ice-cream and cake, at a reception after one of the evening addresses. They have rented pleasant headquarters. The nucleus for a nice library has been secured, which now numbers two hundred volumes. The LeRoy W. C. T. U. had settled into a comatose condition and a committee of Y's was appointed to secure names for a new W. C. T. U. Of course they accomplished it, and Miss Crissy, the district president, had the pleasure of organizing a union there with thirty-six members, including three pastors and their wives. Mrs. Rounds, our state president, spoke to a crowded audience one evening. Her fearless utterances called forth frequent applause and many of all parties came forward to greet her at the close. Miss Wintringer held the close attention of her audience while she spoke the first evening of the convention. People do not seem to tire of hearing the plain truth plainly spoken. Among the papers read was one of more than ordinary interest, by Mrs. Elliot, of Normal, on the subject, "Our Boys." Its practical suggestions would form an interesting and helpful national leaflet.

One Y of McLean county reported quite a large majority of its members as honoraries. A new Y and L. T. L. have been organized in Bloomington. The Loyal Temperance Legion of McLean holds its meetings Sunday afternoons. It has a young man for superintendent. Its membership is not limited to children, but it has adult classes. Not long ago it furnished exercises for a Sunday evening service in the M. E. church. There were many reports of good W. C. T. U. work at this convention, which was an enjoyable one.

While I am writing, a report comes from the Champaign county convention, held at Rantoul, May 4 and 5, with a good attendance. Much work has been done in the evangelistic department in that county. Several thousand pages of literature had been distributed. Wall pockets had been kept supplied. Most of the public schools have had scientific temperance instruction. Creditable work has been done in the flower mission department, and the franchise subject has been agitated. Five silver and three gold medal contests have been held. Interesting papers on these topics were read. Mrs. Daisy Carlock gave an excellent address the first evening of the convention.

The superintendent of railroad work in the eighth district, sends the following interesting letter: "Last spring the thought occurred to me, why not give a cluster of lilacs to every train man that passes through here? I had no blank cards in the house, but made some from Bristol board and wrote a passage of Scripture or a verse of a hymn on one side, and on the reverse side—'Compliments of the Peotone W. C. T. U.' These were tied with bits of white ribbon to the clusters of flowers, and one was handed, not to every train man, but to one who distributed them to each employé on the train, as we found that the two or three ladies who were there to help could not hand them to each personally. We prepared clusters enough for each employé on the train. One of us stood ready to hand two into the locomotive for engineer and fireman. We repeated the same in the fall, using flowers that soon would have been nipped by the frost, but instead of the cards, a temperance leaflet was fastened to the flowers. This spring a copy of the 'Royal Railroad' will be fastened to each bouquet. I know that some of the men appreciated the little overture made 'For God and Home and Native Land.' The freight train employés seemed especially pleased with the flowers. Our agent here is in deep sympathy with any work of this kind, being a staunch prohibition voter. He has been a great help to us. Others might find this a harder task. I submit our plan at the request of the National superintendent of railroad work, so that when the season of roses and all other old-fashioned home flowers is here, others may do likewise." It is surely a good way to send the "glad tidings" through the mission of flowers and no doubt tender memories have often been awakened, as the trains have been speeding on their way.

Carlinville W. C. T. U. gave a reception to the coal miners on the evening of April 29. Carlinville is among the towns that is rejoicing over a no-license victory. The Rockford union and the Salvation Army have arranged to unite in a gospel temperance meeting on the last Sabbath of each month, at the Salvation Army barracks. This union carries on sixteen lines of work besides making a success of its restaurant.

The Marengo union held a literary and musical entertainment for the benefit of the Chicago Anchorage mission, the admission fee being a package of some kind of edibles—coffee, sugar, vegetables, or fifteen cents in money. The Anchorage mission has sheltered six hundred girls during the past year.

The Waukegan Y celebrated its fifth anniversary by a banquet, where about seventy sat down to long tables arranged in the shape of a Y. Neat programs by each plate, tied with white ribbons, announced the enjoyable after-feast of toasts and responses.

The Newman W. C. T. U. held an Old Folks' entertainment at the Opera House, which was pronounced "one of the best ever given in Newman." The receipts were over fifty dollars. A prize essay upon "The Evil Effects of the Saloon," by a High School pupil, was read at a literary social of the Windsor union.

The Watch-Tower, our state paper, overflows with interesting items about the general work, of which little can be told in this brief synopsis. How can I be expected to do more than to label a few "straws" that may show the trend of W. C. T. U. affairs in Illinois, and send them afloat upon THE UNION SIGNAL breezes?

NEW HAMPSHIRE NEWS.

"Whoso giveth a cup of cold water in my name shall not lose his reward," was the argument used by a prominent minister for substituting water for wine at the communion table, at a recent public meeting; he spoke strongly against the use of fermented wines, as what citizen should not; a church member of all people, to place, in the name of our Heavenly Father, sparkling wine to his brother's lips. Many churches are loth to give up this long condemned practice, and willingly go on trying to win souls to God, only to drive them into the depths of sin and shame by tempting them with fermented wine at the Lord's supper. Can they condemn the open bar consistently? In the house of God the weaker brother flies for support and help to his pastor and fellow churchmen. Can they prove a "staff to lean upon" while this practice remains? Many churches have substituted sweet wine, others have chosen pure water. It is to be earnestly hoped that the use of fermented wine, so offensive to many, so dangerous to some, and in any case questionable in the attitude of the temperance reform, may be discontinued in our churches.

If the men and women of New Hampshire could see the grand work being done at the Mercy Home in Manchester, character building, soul saving, there would be no need of urging for money to carry it on. The Home is non-sectarian, and the aim is to make it self-sustaining as far as practicable. Inmates are received for not more than six months. Each one is given a Bible and made to feel that the managers will always feel an interest in her, even though she may cross the continent.

The question is often asked me, "Who are sheltered in the Mercy Home?"

Through a gift from the state legislature, the earnest efforts of collectors and donations from friends, in 1889, a Home was built where girls too old to be admitted to the industrial school, but needing a sheltering home, could find protection. Around them is thrown the Christian influence and the wholesome restraint of home life. Many in our towns and cities lose their good name, and having once fallen, find it hard to rise and stand alone; the influence of the Home is to seek, by loving counsel, to reclaim and inspire them with longings for a purer and better life, and to aid them to obtain it.

The Rockingham County Temperance Association held an interesting convention in Epping. Ex-Gov. D. H. Goodell delivered an address, also Rev. W. P. Clancy and Rev. A. H. Raymond; after Rev. S. C. Kimball's address there was a general discussion of educational work and the Keeley cure. The W. C. T. U. of Epping has passed through fire and flood to accomplish the object for which they were formed. They have a lively Loyal Temperance Legion, and for several years have had a weekly Sunday temperance school. They have pressed the subject of scientific temperance instruction in the public schools. It is the home of our state superintendent of juvenile work, Miss Ella T. Pearsons, and her influence is felt throughout the town. Whether friend or foe to her cause, they cannot fail to respect her.

A mass-meeting was recently held in Somersworth—once Great Falls—conducted by the pastors; a large audience was present. The pastors expressed their willingness to stand shoulder to shoulder with the voters who would make an effort to close the saloons; a rising vote was called for, and it was found that from the one hundred and fifty voters present less than forty stood up. Is it any wonder that saloons flourish and murderers get bail? Is it to be wondered that women, who have been patient so long, waiting and hoping that something would be done, are well-nigh discouraged?

It is expected that Mrs. Livermore, will lecture in the state soon. The Strafford county W. C. T. U. held a very interesting convention at Rochester. Welcome was extended by Mrs. Wentworth. The Hillsborough county W. C. T. U. meeting was held in East Manchester, the county president, Mrs. E. K. Jewett, of Hollis, presiding in her usual very acceptable manner. The papers were by Mrs. J. H. Hoffman, of Peterboro, upon cigarettes, their effect upon the young morally and physically, and by Mrs. A. C. Tyrrel, of East Deering, upon Sabbath observance, and the discussion that followed was very helpful. The parliamentary drill given by Miss C. R. Wendell, state president, gave important hints as to the best manner of conducting meetings. Mrs. Mary A. Chase had charge of the mothers' meetings. "Make home the pleasantest place and keep the children there; allow a great deal of freedom in their plays and plenty of room to play in; gain their confidence and have patience," were some of her thoughts. A paper by Dr. Ellen Wallace, of Manchester, our state superintendent of hygiene, expressed the urgent need of thorough sanitary conditions of our homes and schoolrooms. At the Demorest contest Miss Grace A. Parker won the silver medal, her selection being "Boys of America." Resolutions were passed urgently petitioning the senators to vote for the bill prepared by ex-Governor Goodell, prohibiting the manufacture of spirituous liquors in our state and a copy of the resolutions was sent to each senator. It was also resolved that each union see that copies of the law with reference to the sale of tobacco to minors, be distributed in all places where tobacco is sold.

nearer the centers could show as good a record. The ladies had the desire to place a fountain in their village, unless the town should see fit to do so. A committee was chosen to confer with the town authorities which resulted in the erection of a fine iron fountain by the town into which flow the clear crystal waters from the mountain side. A recent number of the Granite Outlook contains a long article from the pen of Adelaide Cilley Waldron, on the work of the White Cross and White Shield which should be read by every person in the state. I wish there were space to quote from this pure, healthy letter.

Mrs. Nathaniel White, of Concord, was the first president of the New Hampshire W. C. T. U. She continued in office from 1874 to 1878; Miss A. E. McIntire from 1878 to 1881; Mrs. Janette H. Knox was then elected president and held the office till August, 1892, when she went with her husband to North Dakota; Miss C. R. Wendell, of Dover, for several years state corresponding secretary, was chosen to fill the vacancy in the presidency at the annual meeting in 1892. These faithful presidents with their associate officers have built firm and well our W. C. T. U. ship. "It has been well launched, is well officered and has a well-trained, efficient crew—from its flagstaff floating in the breeze are our stars and stripes inscribed in golden letters—New Hampshire W. NEWS IN A NUTSHELL.

THE temperance cause has lost another champion in Prof. A. R. Cornwalk, who passed away at Ashton, South Dakota, not long ago.

THE Ocala, Fla., W. C. T. U. at a recent meeting passed loving resolutions in memory of one of their most earnest and active members, Mrs. J. D. Buckalew, who was superintendent of the L. T. L.

MR. GEORGE W. WILLIAMS, president of the Carolina savings bank, of Charleston, S. C., has been a life-long advocate of temperance and a staunch friend of the W. C. T. U., frequently aiding the work of the state W. C. T. U. in a substantial way.

THE fifth annual convention of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union of Minnehaha county, South Dakota, convened at Valley Springs, May 16, with a good representation of delegates and visitors. Officers were elected and superintendents of ten departments of work were appointed.

AMERICA'S DEFENDERS is a new eight-page paper, published monthly in the interest of her department, by Mrs. Sarah A. McClees, of New York, National W. C. T. U. superintendent of work among soldiers and sailors. The paper is bright and interesting and destined to do much good.

A BLACK HILLS union, that at Sturgis, South Dakota, has just been blessed with a visit from Mrs. Anna M. Palmer, and the union has been strengthened and encouraged. Mrs. Palmer was with them three days, holding Bible readings and mothers' meetings in the afternoons and gospel temperance talks in the evening. All of which were well attended.

HOPEWELL Baptist church, four miles south of Pana, Ill., was the scene of the annual convention of the Christian county W. C. T. U., May 25. The convention met with the Rounds union, one of the best in the state for effective and organized work, only three years old and numbering forty-three members all living in the country. There were delegates present from six of the nine unions in the county, Mrs. Frazier, district president from Springfield, being in the chair. At night an excellent program of songs and recitations was given.

COLORADO'S Equal Suffrage Association has started out on a thorough campaign for woman's political equality, having addressed to the women of Colorado a stirring circular letter whose opening paragraph explains the status of suffrage affairs in the centennial state: "The enactment of the last legislature convened in this state has made it possible that the right of suffrage may be extended to the women of Colorado at the next general election, which occurs Tuesday, November 7. The voters of the state will settle this matter,—whether the right of full citizenship shall be accorded to all women in Colorado of lawful age and otherwise qualified, or whether the question shall be set back a decade or more. The fact that many states have agitated the subject, some bringing it to a focus as the Colorado assembly has done, renders it imperative that no backward step be taken. The decision at the next election will also affect the situation in every other state." The women of all organizations are requested to unite and make equal suffrage the leading idea for the next half year and the campaign is to be conducted by house-to-house visitation, public meetings, distribution of literature, etc.

THE annual convention of the New London county W. C. T. U. was held in the Episcopal church, Westerly, R. I., May 29. Their entertainers were members of the Pawtucket union of Connecticut, who, having no suitable place for holding the meetings were most cordially invited to cross the river and take possession of Rhode Island. The address of the evening by Mrs. Emily L. McLaughlin, of Boston, was such as must be heard to be appreciated. Her subject was "Barriers to Success." The program was attractive and enjoyable, opening with devotional exercises led by Mrs. S. K. Luce. After cordial words of welcome, twelve unions responded to roll call and gave reports of work performed during the past year. An encouraging word was spoken by the Y's superintendent, Miss Bertha Cheney, of Mystic. In the afternoon an admirable paper was read on scientific temperance instruction by Mrs. M. N. Rogers, of Pawtucket, state superintendent. An interesting account of the labors of the W. C. T. U. women who were instrumental in getting the new scientific temperance instruction law passed by the legislature and signed by the governor was given by Mrs. C. B. Forbes, the valiant state president, who urged upon all unions the pushing of this work the coming year. A parliamentary drill was well conducted by Mrs. M. M. Andrews. After the election of officers came "the children's hour" of the convention. With waving flags and beaming faces the "grand army" of the Loyal Temperance Legion marched in and all greatly enjoyed their exceptionally fine speaking and spirited singing, together with the bright, instructive talk of Mrs. Fitz Gerald.

THE NAVAL PAGEANT IN THE HARBOR OF NEW YORK.

The entrance of foreign warships into American waters, and their anchorage in the bay of New York during several weeks, has been an event of more than usual significance. The fleets of nine nationalities have stood side by side in holiday attire, each distinctive in construction and floating the flag of its own country, yet all vying with one another in friendly courtesies and expressions of good-will.

This first exhibit of the great Columbian Exposition surpassed in scenic effect any naval display ever witnessed in the history of the world. What could be more appropriate to commemorate the discovery of this continent! And what would better illustrate the progress of science in maritime development than the contrast between the Spanish caravels—that baby craft—and the giant cruisers of England, France, Germany, Russia and America.

The Nina, the Pinta, the Santa Maria surely created more interest and excited more curiosity than all the other mammoth ships; but the wonder grew upon all beholders, how such basket cradles, as they seemed, could ride the waves and baffle the winds of an Atlantic voyage! The arrangement for sight-seers, on the days set apart, was complete, our own American vessels being strikingly effective as the White Squadron anchored on the west side of the broad Hudson river, leaving sufficient space for the visiting craft to pass between it and the foreign ships lying at anchor on the east side. Doubtless, to the sailors aboard the European vessels, the miscellaneous character of our river equipages presented as spectacular an effect as the monsters of the deep impressed our unaccustomed vision; the little row-boat, the noisy tug, the sailboat, the trim yacht, the magnificent steamer, all crowded with passengers and radiantly decked with flags of bright colors, sailing in and around them, gave delight as they rested in smooth water after a tempest-tossed voyage. The sailors on one of the belated Spanish ships caught up just in time to participate in the parade, and showed their joy by waving from the portholes towels and other convenient belongings other than the refined handkerchief salute. "One touch of nature makes the whole world kin." Who that saw this homely demonstration could fail to sympathize with Jack Tar's heart tribute!

I need not sketch for your readers the excitement of greeting sounds; cannon booming—drum beating—the music of full brass bands; the screeching of steam whistles; the shouting and hurrahing of human voices—deafening the ear—as the sailors dazzling in white and blue and the marines in scarlet and gold stood on the decks and on the yardarms, their arms interlocked, amid the red, white and blue colors and the officers glittering in resplendent uniforms of their different countries, accepted the hospitalities of America's chief dignitaries from its President to the little aspirant in knickerbockers who expects sometime to fill that high office. All was eye and ear inspiring.

Had the ships sailed away to their own lands the next day the remembrance would have been but a dreamy vision. Their stay, however, being prolonged, has had a delightful result in affording opportunity to make acquaintance with our friends beyond the sea. All the ships have kept open house, and visitors have inspected every part to their heart's content. A daily interchange of courtesies has taken place between New Yorkers and their foreign guests.

The public press, naturally, has given notoriety to those of high rank who have honored us by their presence. First, the descendants of Columbus, the Duke and Duchess of Veragua, were fêted by the city authorities, then the beautiful Spanish Princess, Eulalia, with her husband and suite. The social events on the ships will have greater interest to us plebeians. Especally noticeable were certain exercises on the British flag-ship, under command of that polished Christian gentleman, Sir Henry A. Hopkins. The Blake not only "received" daily, but on Sundays invited the "naval veterans" of the Farragut Association to attend divine service on the quarterdeck, where Dr. Wood, the ship's chaplain, conducted worship. After the morning services, a presentation of medals was made to two brave seamen of the Blake, who risked their lives in rescuing two persons from drowning.

Besides the sixty United States naval veterans, there was present a delegation from the New York lodges of the Sons of St. George who gave the medals of gold, which bear the inscription, "Presented by the Order of Sons of St. George in recognition of an act of heroism whereby human lives were saved, New York Harbor, 30th of April, 1893."

Of course our American fleet received attention from visitors, notably the Philadelphia—the flag-ship—commanded by Admiral Gherardi, than whom neither English, Russian, French nor other foreign commander could surpass in courtly bearing and dignified courtesy, but everybody seemed drawn to the Blake, and it is said, that in comparison with its numbers the proportion was as one to five hundred.

An acknowledgment of favors shown to the officers of the British war-ships was sent to the mayor of New York by a letter of thanks from Vice Admiral Hopkins, before they sailed away. No fault could be found in lack of attention by our citizens to the officers of all the ships; but there was a serious failure to recognize the sailors. An appropriation having been made by Congress sufficiently large to cover expenses of entertainment to all the fleet, it is to be regretted that there should have been neglect of the men, without whose stalwart bone and sinew these ships would never have reached our shores. A call was made through the press for a public dinner to be given in our largest hall; this sentiment was responded to by a representative of the National department of soldiers and sailors, addressed to the New York Tribune as follows:

"Sir: A number of ladies residing in New York unite with me in indorsing the sentiments expressed by two of your correspondents—'friends of Jack Tar.'

"We would like to see the marines and blue-jackets who manned the yards and sides of the ships in the cold and damp weather of last week, and who tramped six or eight miles through our streets for our amusement, not getting even a sandwich or a glass of water, we would like not only to see these men entertained at the city's expense, but we would be glad to assist in making the coffee and waiting upon them.

"They are the bone and sinew of the nations represented at the present time in our waters; and we should honor ourselves in exhibiting a liberal hospitality. Too long have we allowed the 'land sharks' to gather up the earnings of the seaman when he enters the port of New York; men who for their own aggrandizement rob Jack Tar, wrecking him on our inhospitable shores, and despoiling his manhood. Let us now show him a nobler, truer courtesy, emanating from the hearts and homes of the motherhood of our city. We suggest a supper in the Madison Square Garden where women shall be the caterers and entertainers." Readers of THE UNION SIGNAL will perceive that had this suggestion been carried out, it would have been a temperance feast. It is needless to say that in the entertainments given to the officers, such was not the characteristic of their banquets.

Having taken pains to ascertain the drinking customs of our foreign friends by visiting the consulates of the different countries represented in the naval display, I received information that the enlisted men are supplied with a daily ration of liquor of some kind with their noon day meal. Indeed, the Russian consul told me it was furnished "twice a day" on their ships.

A visit to the Blake by Mrs. Chauvet and myself enabled us to see for ourselves the rum-hogshead which occupies a conspicuous place on the upper deck, and which is shown to visitors as punctiliously as the guns that frown from the port-holes. A beautiful, pure-faced boy of eighteen, who had been deputed by an officer as our escort, spoke frankly and honestly about this "evil thing" in our eyes, as if it were as harmless an indulgence, and as necessary to daily living, as bread and meat. In answer to our questions, he said he was not yet old enough to get the ration, as he must wait until he was twenty, the regulation age! The liquor furnished is the best Jamaica rum, served to each mess in half gill rations (a provokingly small quantity one would think, but sufficient to whet the appetite for the groggeries on shore!) As loyal temperance women, we naturally used our persuasive powers to induce this English lad to take a pledge of total abstinence, which he very positively declined, in view of the expiration of his two years' probation, and the privilege then of joining the ranks of the five hundred drinkers! However, with eighty members of the order of Good Templars attached to the ship, we shall look for an increase of total-abstainers. We felt that our mission was not accomplished by this personal effort, but that a responsibility was put upon us to take further steps in the promotion of our holy cause. An interview, therefore, was sought with the school-master, and inquiry made with regard to the books of instruction and contents of the library.

After a very agreeable interview which gave the opportunity to mention the fact that our American government had abolished the grog ration twenty years ago in our navy, the way was opened by this intelligent and friendly gentleman for us to offer some scientific temperance books for his acceptance to add to the curriculum of school studies for the young soldiers and sailors. This pleasant result of our visit was accomplished in good time before the Blake left our port.

This work of supplying ships of every description with temperance literature is actively engaged in by our National department, at its headquarters, No. 22 State street, New York, copies of THE UNION SIGNAL, with other newspapers and magazines being added to the good books that furnish reading to the sailor on his long voyages. It is, however, a source of sorrow and mortification that our great constituency, the Woman's Christian Temperance Union, has not come to the rescue of the hundreds of thousands of seamen that come and go in twenty thousand ships to our great seaport in the course of twelve months, by providing a place of refuge where the temptations presented in our large cities by the ever-present saloons and vile boarding-houses may be counteracted in a degree, by pure and wholesome influences. Realizing as few persons can the importance of securing such a home, we propose to bend our energies to establish such an institution in New York City, and so avoid the reproach of inability to suitably entertain the marines and blue-jackets of the "new navy" of our United States.

DEPARTMENT OF LITERATURE.

To State and Local Superintendents:

DEAR SISTERS:—The demand for free literature for use at the Columbian Exposition will necessarily be very great and the appropriation made by the National W. C. T. U., while very generous under the circumstances, will prove inadequate. I feel, therefore, impelled to request that the literature fund card be freely used, and the percentage of collections due the state and National superintendents under this plan be promptly forwarded. Remember, large sums are secured by the accumulation of small ones.

If any local union will consent to give one entertainment during the summer I will gladly furnish a new idea in the way of program on request. The plan to which I refer has been copyrighted, and the program is offered for sale by the author at $1. I will, however, furnish the same without cost, on condition that ten per cent of the gross returns be devoted to the use of the National literature department, to furnish literature for the Exposition.

Let us appreciate the opportunity now afforded to sow the seed of temperance reform.

Yours truly,
F. H. RASTALL, Nat. Supt.

THE EVANGELISTIC DEPARTMENT AND THE CHURCHES.

To each Evangelistic Superintendent of a National, State, County, or Local W. C. T. U.:

DEAR SISTERS:—January 5th THE UNION SIGNAL contained a copy of the circular appeal outlining a plan for a general arousing of the churches of the nation upon the evils of intemperance and the need of temperance work. This appeal was sent to each local union. The response has been unusual, and the results surpass our most sanguine expectations. Hundreds of special services, under the auspices of the W. C. T. U., and attended by the members in a body, have been held in our churches, the pastor preaching the sermon, or inviting a lady to present the cause. In Corvallis, Oregon, in consequence of the sermon thus preached, at our request, by the Episcopal rector, every woman in the church joined the W. C. T. U. Massachusetts reports "a most flattering response." In Brooklyn, N. Y., over fifty pastors have accepted the invitation and twenty-two services have thus far been held in our most conservative churches. The National superintendent has given the address in many of these. In order to gather the harvest from this widespread sowing of temperance truth, a question circular has just been issued and sent to each state superintendent.

As the National Convention meets early in October it is necessary to commence at once to gather the results of our year's work. Each local superintendent should secure a copy of this Question Circular, make a careful record of the number and character of these church services, and report the same to her county or state superintendent, together with all other evangelistic work done during the year. The state superintendent will then send a summary to the National department. We earnestly urge you to coöperate heartily with us in this ingathering. If the local superintendent does not soon receive a copy, will she communicate with her county or state superintendent?

The questions are as follows:

1. How many copies of the National Appeal were sent out by your union?
2. How many pastors responded favorably?
3. How many unfavorably?
4. How many sermons were preached?
5. In how many churches were ladies invited to give the address?
6. Mention the denominations represented by these services, and number of services held in each?
7. Did committees from the W. C. T. U. attend each service?
8. In how many churches were collections taken for the W. C. T. U?
9. How many pages of temperance literature were distributed at these services, and what leaflets were used?
10. Please give the result of these meetings; in the churches; the community; and your local union. Mention any incidents or features of interest?
11. Did your last state convention observe the hour from 11 to 12 daily, as a season of devotion and Bible exposition?
12. In how many county conventions and schools of methods has this hour been observed during the year? Did you seek to secure its observance?
13. Have gospel temperance meetings been held? How many? How many out: door services,——; How many in jails,——Prisons, ——; penitentiaries, ——; halls, ——; forts,——; ships, ——; depots,——; factories, etc.——; how many mothers' and cottage meetings?
14. Has your union held or participated in evangelistic conferences, days of prayer, schools of methods, or similar services? Give report of such.
15. Has your union held series of Bible expositions for uplifting the workers and reaching those not interested?
16. Please report any evangelistic work done by your union not included in the above questions.

CURRENT LITERATURE introduces some new features in its June number. The World's Fair furnishes no less than forty-eight pages of selections and illustrations. A striking cover in black and red upon a white ground is part of the new dress. In the body of the magazine the usual departments are to be found, as well as the prize sketch, which receives the award of twenty-five dollars.

Current Literature Publishing Company, 52-54 Lafayette Place, New York City.

The leading article in the June issue of THE CONQUEROR is entitled "Power with God," contributed by Major Musa Bhai, of India, and is a strong yet simple exposition of the theme. He says, "Power with God is the crying need of the hour. While this spirit would spread a healthy influence all round about, drawing young converts and weak and hungry souls all harmoniously towards the goal of progress in the spiritual life for the individual, keeping everybody alive, it will also be an inspiration for those who are to follow. Let this be our ambition then, dear comrades, not to live for our own little petty, paltry lives, but to avail ourselves of the glorious provision made by Christ for fallen man to be raised up into a life of steady progress and power with God."

Published by Ballington Booth. 111 Reade St., New York City.

In the June number of THE MOTHER'S NURSERY GUIDE, Dr. Canfield dispels some popular delusions concerning the contagious diseases of childhood which "some mothers think it just as well for their children to have and be over with them." His article on "Immunity and Protection from Disease" will repay careful reading. The advantages of a simple yet varied diet for children are set forth by Dr. Wm. H. Flint, and Dr. Meding contributes some useful "Points for the Summer." The entertaining "Kindergarten-at-Home Stories" are continued and the mothers discuss in the "Parliament" such topics as "A Plea for Patience," "The Monthly Nurse," "Music Books," "Outings for City Children," etc. The Medical Editor answers questions as to "Susceptibility to Contagion," "Disinfection," "Early Tooth Decay," "Evils of Mixed Feeding."

The Babyhood Publishing Co., 5 Beekman St., New York.

THE CHAUTAUQUAN for June contains among its many bright articles the following: "The Modern Maid of Athens and Her Brothers of To-day," by Prof. W. E. Waters, illustrated; "Greek History and the Constitution of the United States," by J. Franklin Jameson, Ph. D., professor of History in Brown University; "The Making of Paper," by Arthur Allen Black; "Epidemics and Our National Health," by Dr. Felix L. Oswald, an article of current interest; "English Poems on Greek Subjects," by James Richard Joy; "Astronomy on Top of a Mountain," by I. H. Fickel, a description of the Lick Observatory and the work of that institution, illustrated; "Dr. Mommsen, the Great Historian," by Frank G. Carpenter, a graphic pen picture of the eminent historian. An engraved portrait of Professor Mommsen accompanies the sketch. This is but a small part of the contents of this number of THE CHAUTAUQUAN. In addition to the above there are a number of articles dealing with topics of wide interest. In the editorial departments are discussed, Shall the President be an Office Broker? Skimming the Dictionary; Temperance Reform in South Carolina.

The Chautauquan, Meadville, Pa.

The REVIEW OF REVIEWS for the month of June is a number which nobody who intends to go to the World's Fair at any time can well afford to be without. However attractive the other departments may be, it will be true of this World's Fair, as it was of the Centennial in 1876, that the great majority of the visitors will derive perhaps more pleasure from the pictures in the Art Department than from anything else. The REVIEW OF REVIEWS sent as its representative to Chicago, in May, Mr. Ernest Knaufft, a well-known art teacher of New York, who is also a writer upon art subjects and who is known throughout the country as the very successful and sympathetic director of the art studies at Chautauqua from summer to summer. Mr. Knaufft has prepared an extended and discriminating article telling in a straightforward way what are the merits and striking features of each portion of the art exhibit, and his article is illustrated with outline pen sketches intended as memoranda of the principal pictures. The article serves as an excellent general guide to the art department and as an auxiliary to the more formal catalogue which gives the names and numbers of the pictures.

A New England Miracle.

A RAILROAD ENGINEER RELATES HIS EXPERIENCE.

The Wonderful Story Told by Fred C. Vose and his Mother-in-law to a Reporter of the Boston Herald—Both Are Restored After Years of Agony.

(Boston, Mass., Herald.)

The vast health giving results already attributed by the newspapers throughout this country and Canada to Dr. Williams' "Pink Pills for Pale People" have been recently supplemented by the wonderful cures wrought in the cases of two confirmed invalids in one household in a New England town. The radical improvement in the physical condition of these two people from the use of this great medicine is vouched for, not only by the eager testimony of the patients themselves, gladly given for the benefit of other sufferers, but also by the indubitable assurances of disinterested relatives and friends who had been cognizant of the years of pain and distress endured by the two invalids, and who now witness their restoration to health, vigor and capacity.

The names of these people, the latest to testify from their own experience to the marvellous restorative, tonic and healing qualities of Dr. Williams' Pink Pills, are Fred C. Vose and his mother-in-law, Mrs. Oliver C. Holt, of Peterboro, members of the same household, which is composed of Mr. and Mrs. Holt, and Mr. and Mrs. Vose, the latter a daughter of the Holts. Mr. Holt is employed in the Crowell shoe manufactory of Peterboro.

Mr. Vose's wife had been in failing health for a number of years, her illness finally developing into a brain trouble, accompanied by intermittent paralysis of the tongue and lower limbs. Death had taken all her children, and the heavy affliction increased her bodily and mental infirmities to such an extent that her husband, himself an invalid, was compelled to take some means toward securing for her complete rest and freedom from all household care.

In February last Mr. Vose heard of a case of paralysis cured by the use of Dr. Williams' Pink Pills. The similarity of the case described to that of his wife at once aroused his interest. After consultation they decided to send for the pills. The beneficial effect they had upon Mrs. Vose was marked. From being unable to stand she was so materially strengthened that she could walk without difficulty, and in other respects her condition was much improved. This caused both her husband and mother to consider trying them for their own complaints. They tried them on the principle that "if they don't cure they can't hurt," but before each had finished their first box they had felt such relief that they came to believe that the pills not only could not hurt, but were actually and speedily curing them.

To the Herald reporter who was sent to investigate his remarkable cure, Mr. Vose said: "I am not anxious to get into the papers, but, as I wrote the Dr. Williams' Medicine Co. I have felt such happy results from the taking of Pink Pills that I am willing, if my experience will help any one else, to state how they benefited me. I am 37 years old, and 15 years of this time I have spent in railroading for the Fitchburg Railroad on the Winchendon and Peterboro branch. For the past three years I have been engineer of the train which connects with the Boston trains at Winchendon. I have been troubled with a weak stomach from my boyhood. Seven years ago, however, the complaint became greatly aggravated from the nature of my work and other causes, and I suffered greatly from it. My stomach would not retain food, my head ached constantly, there was a dimness, or blur, before my eyes most of the time, and my head used to become so dizzy I could scarcely stand. On getting up in the morning my head swam so I was frequently obliged to lie down again. I had a most disagreeable heart-burn, a continuous belching of gas from the stomach, a nasty coating of the mouth and tongue, and my breath was most offensive. I consulted physicians in Peterboro, and took their medicines for two years, but was helped so slightly by them that at the end of that time I gave up in discouragement, and let the disease take care of itself for a long time. I grew worse as time went on. I have been obliged to give up work many a time for a week or two, and have worked at other times when I ought to have been at home in bed. I have lost many months during the past seven years, and would have lost more only for the fact that I stuck it out and would not give up until I had to. My appetite then failed me, and about four years ago I began to notice a fluttering of my heart, which grew so bad after a while that I could not walk any distance without a violent palpitation and complete loss of breath. The pains in my stomach from indigestion lasted two and three days at a time. I lost considerable flesh, and before long I noticed that my kidneys were affected. This came from my work on the engine, I know, as many railroad men are troubled in the same way. I had awful pains in the small of my back, and was obliged to make water many times during the day. I resolved to go back to the doctors again, though their treatment had done me no good before. I was told that medicine was no good for me, that what I needed was a long rest. I could not take too long a vacation, being compelled to work for my living, and so I kept along, taking what stuff the doctors prescribed, but feeling no better, except for a day or two at a time. Finally my legs and hands began to ache and swell with rheumatic pains and I found I couldn't sleep at night. If I lay down, my heart would go pit-a-pit at a great rate, and many nights I did not close my eyes at all. I was broken down in body and discouraged in spirit, when, some time in February last, I was reading in the 'Montreal Family Herald and Weekly Star,' of the cures made by Dr. Williams' Pink Pills for Pale People.' I got a couple of boxes for my wife to see if she would be helped any by them, and then I tried them myself. Before I had finished the first box I noticed that I was feeling better. The palpitation of my heart, which had bothered me so that I couldn't breathe at times, began to improve. I saw that in going to my home on the hill from the depot, which was previously an awful task, my heart did not beat so violently and I had more breath when I reached the house. After the second and third boxes I grew better in every other respect. My stomach became stronger, the gas belching was not so bad, my appetite and digestion improved, and my sleep became nearly natural and undisturbed. I have continued taking the pills three times a day ever since last March, and to-day I am feeling better than at any time during the last eight years. I can confidently and conscientiously say that they have done me more good, and their good effects are more permanent, than any medicine I have ever taken. My rheumatic pains in legs and hands are all gone. The pains in the small of my back, which were so bad at times that I couldn't stand up straight, have nearly all vanished, and I find my kidneys are well regulated by them. This is an effect not claimed for the pills in the circular, but in my case they brought it about. I am feeling 100 per cent better in every shape and manner.

"I am still taking the pills, however, and mean to continue them until I am certain my cure is a thorough and lasting one."

The reporter next saw Mrs. Holt, who said: "I am 57 years old, and for 14 years past I have had an intermittent heart trouble. Three years ago I had nervous prostration, which left me with a number of ailments, for which I have been doctoring unsuccessfully ever since. My heart trouble was increased so badly by the nervous prostration that I had to lie down most of the time. My stomach also gave out, and I had continual and intense pain from the back of my neck to the end of my backbone. I went to physicians in Jeffrey, Newport, Alsted, Acton, and here in Peterboro, but my health continued so miserable that I gave up doctors in despair, and lost faith in medicine altogether. I began to take Dr. Williams' Pink Pills last winter, more from curiosity than because I believed they could help me, but the first box made me feel over so much better. I have taken the pills since February last, and they have made me feel like a new woman. The terrible pains in my spinal column and in the region of my liver are gone, and I believe for good. My palpitation has only troubled me three times since I commenced using the pills, and my stomach now performs its functions without giving me the great distress which formerly followed everything I ate. I have tried everything—doctors' medicines, patent medicines, sarsaparillas, and homeopathic doses. In 14 weeks three years ago I spent $300 for doctors' bills and medicines, and since then have put out as much more money, but the relief I obtained, if any, was only temporary.

"With these pills, however, the effects are different. They are not cathartic, like other pills I have taken, but seem to act directly upon the stomach and liver without any loosening of the bowels. My sleep, too, has improved wonderfully since I began their use. For a long time before I took these pills I lost sleep night after night with my heart and pains in my back.

"I have been too sick in the past not to fully appreciate the value of a remedy that has done me so much good. Dr. Williams' Pink Pills are certainly a grand medicine, and from my experience with them I can cheerfully and cordially recommend them to any one who is troubled with heart palpitation, indigestion, liver complaint, and the many ills consequent upon nervous prostration."

Dr Williams' Pink Pills are not a patent medicine in the sense in which that term is usually understood, but are a scientific preparation, successfully used in general practice for many years before being offered to the public generally. They contain in a condensed form all the elements necessary to give new life and richness to the blood, and restore shattered nerves. They are an unfailing specific for such diseases as locomotor ataxia, partial paralysis, St. Vitus' dance, sciatica, neuralgia, rheumatism, nervous headache, the after effects of la grippe, palpitation of the heart, the tired feeling resulting from nervous prostration, all diseases depending upon vitiated humors in the blood, such as scrofula, chronic erysipelas, etc.

They are also a specific for troubles peculiar to females, such as suppressions, irregularities, and all forms of weakness. They build up the blood and restore the glow of health to pale or sallow cheeks. In the case of men they effect a radical cure in all cases arising from mental worry, overwork or excesses of whatever nature. They are manufactured by the Dr. Williams' Medicine Company, Schenectady, N. Y., and Brockville, Ont., and are sold in boxes (never in loose form by the dozen or hundred) at 50 cents a box or six boxes for $2.50, and may be had of all druggists or direct by mail from Dr. Williams' Medicine Company from either address.

The price at which these pills are sold makes a course of treatment comparatively inexpensive as compared with other remedies or medical treatment.

EVERY ONE CONTEMPLATING THE STUDY OF SHORTHAND

Should read the following liberal offer of the National School of Shorthand, at Washington, D. C. By the terms here offered any girl or boy, young man or woman, who desires an opportunity to become proficient in this now almost universally necessary branch of education, can do so at very little expense. Almost any one can find FIVE new subscribers for THE UNION SIGNAL, and for those five new subscribers we will send them a paid-up scholarship in this school of shorthand. It makes no difference where you are located, as the instruction is by mail. The regular price for one month's instruction is $5, but with a little effort on the part of any one desiring to learn shorthand this expense may be saved for the first month. A knowledge of shorthand has now become so necessary to those who intend to be clerks, bookkeepers, teachers, secretaries, lawyers, ministers or business men and women, and affords so easy and ready a method for a young man or woman who desires to do so, to better their condition and position in life, that it needs no advertising to show its importance or its advantages.

The system taught in this school is the PITMAN, which is the one used by reporters in both Houses of Congress, the Supreme Court, in all departments of the Government, and generally throughout the United States. Any person with a fair idea of the correct spelling and pronunciation of words can learn shorthand, and once thoroughly mastered no one need be without employment, as the demand for good shorthand writers is increasing every day.

To all readers of THE UNION SIGNAL who desire, or who have friends who may desire the course of instruction we would say, Set to work at once, secure five subscribers and receive this scholarship. The offer is for only one month's instruction, but to those desiring to continue after the expiration of the scholarship special terms will be offered whereby the course may be completed without any expenditure of money.

The price of THE UNION SIGNAL is $1 per year. Send five new subscriptions to THE UNION SIGNAL, and we will send you a receipt for one month's instruction in the NATIONAL SCHOOL OF SHORTHAND, Washington, D. C.

IN Great Britain and Ireland three thousand and four women were murdered by drunken husbands from January 1, 1889, to January 1, 1891.

FOUR hundred thousand men are reported as under the influence of the railway mission, where they are being taught the principles of total abstinence.

THE duties on drink in France last year reached the enormous sum of four hundred and seventy million fifty-three thousand three hundred and twenty-five francs.

THE statement was recently made in the German Reichstag that there are eleven thousand persons in hospitals in Germany who are suffering with delirium tremens.

FOUR hundred and eighty-five missionaries are on the staff of the London city mission. French, German, Spaniards and other foreigners are employed to reach special classes.

MR. JOHN HILL, of Paw Paw, Michigan, brother of Madam Willard, died on May 17, aged eighty-four years. Mr. Hill was of sturdy old New England stock, a Vermonter by birth, and a pioneer with the rest of the family in 1815 to Western New York. He was staunch and true, and greatly beloved by his sister and her daughter (Frances E. Willard), who for fifteen years past have been chiefly instrumental in securing a comfortable home for him in his lonely estate, his wife and only child having passed away many years ago. Only one member of the immediate family circle of Madam Willard in her youth remains, her sister, Mrs. Sarah Hill Hall, who still lives near the old home in Churchville, near Rochester, N. Y. Mrs. Hall was a distinguished teacher in her earlier days. She is the fifth member of the circle to attain and pass her eightieth year.

MRS. J. W. ANDREWS, chairman of the executive committee of the Ramabai Association writes: "Will you kindly allow me space in your paper for the following statement, to correct a wrong impression that several leading papers have unwittingly given in regard to the funds of the Ramabai Association and the needs of the Shâradâ Sadana? It is true, as has been stated, that the building fund has been exhausted; but the trustees have been able to supply the deficiency, and to meet all the demands for building purposes, by drawing upon the general fund, as it had the power to do. As the association is the owner of all the expense of enlarging and completing the buildings; and this it has done, greatly to Ramabai's relief. The building fund is kept open, and contributions to it are still earnestly solicited, to reimburse, if possible, the general fund, and for the future needs of the buildings. But all such contributions like those for the legitimate school expenses should be sent to the treasurer of the association, Mr. E. Hayward Ferry, 222 Boylston street, Boston, and not to Pundita Ramabai, Poona. No one would deprecate more strongly than Ramabai herself the transmission of such funds in any other way."

Home Treatment.

A sufferer from disease hears of a physician in a remote city, perhaps in another country, who has effected wonderful cures in cases similar to his own. He expends much money in traveling to the far-off city, and remaining under the treatment of the physician.

In the Compound Oxygen Treatment of Drs. Starkey & Palen we offer to this sufferer a remedy which can be sent to his home, and there used by him, the supply lasting from two to three months; thus avoiding the necessity of a long and expensive journey, as well as the discomforts of traveling and change of residence. The treatment includes consultation by letter, for which no extra charge is made. We furnish the statements of hundreds of persons who have been cured. We are permitted to refer to the patients themselves for confirmation and further information. Book of 200 pages sent free, containing numerous testimonials and much important information. Drs. STARKEY & PALEN, 1529 Arch St., Philadelphia, or Chicago, San Francisco, New York and Toronto, Ont.

A WORD TO THE WISE.
CERTAIN ADVERTISEMENTS FROM TRADE RIVALS,
who fear the phenomenal success of
Van Houten's Cocoa
in America, contain innuendoes against it, and appeal to the authority of Dr. SYDNEY RINGER, Professor of Medicine at University College, London, Author of the Standard "Handbook of Therapeutics."
This eminent physician ACTUALLY writes as follows:—
"From the careful analyses of Professor ATTFIELD and others, I am satisfied that Messrs. VAN HOUTEN'S COCOA is in no way injurious to health, and that it is decidedly more nutritious than other Cocoas.—It is certainly "Pure" and highly digestible.
The quotations in certain advertisements from my book on Therapeutics are quite misleading and cannot possibly apply to VAN HOUTEN'S COCOA."
The false reflection on VAN HOUTEN'S COCOA is thus effectually repelled and the very authority cited to injure it, has thereby been prompted to give it a very handsome testimonial.

SINCE OUR LAST ISSUE.

Last Sunday was Children's Day in the churches.

Baccalaureate sermons were preached at many colleges last Sabbath.

Chicago's "society" has been paying tribute to the Spanish Infanta.

This has been the closing week of the political campaign in Germany.

Edwin Booth was laid to rest in Mt. Auburn cemetery near Boston, June 9.

More than 2,000 miners at Kladno, Bohemia, are on a strike and troops have been ordered to the spot.

Home rule for Cuba is the animus of a measure introduced into the Spanish Cortes by the minister of colonies, and much opposed.

Temperance for the world was the keynote of the World's Temperance Congresses, which closed last Sunday at the Memorial Art Palace, Chicago.

It has been decided by the Department of State to admit Chinese immigrants bearing certificates issued by agents of the Chinese imperial government.

The series of meetings under the auspices of the international order of King's Daughters in connection with the World's Congresses commenced Wednesday.

The World's Conferences of Charities and Corrections met in Chicago last week, Rev. Washington Gladden, D. D., of Columbus, O., preaching the sermon on Sabbath morning.

Religious services in an immense circus tent to a vast audience were held on Lake Front Park, Chicago, last Sunday, by the evangelists, D. L. Moody and Rev. John McNeil.

The injunction to close the World's Fair on the Sabbath was granted by the federal court at Chicago, June 8, but suspended by Chief Justice Fuller, of the United States Supreme court, June 10, and the Fair was open Sunday.

Fifteen thousand Swedish Lutherans gathered at Rock Island, Ill., June 9, the occasion being the three hundredth anniversary of the founding of their church, and the principal orator of the day, Bishop Knut Henning von Scheele, the envoy of King Oscar.

The Daily News sanitarium opened at Lincoln Park, Chicago, for its seventh season of beneficence, last Monday, its record for last summer being 48,641 infants, mothers and children cared for and 3,000 children, mothers and working girls sent to the country for a two weeks' outing, each.

A terrible accident, by which many lives were lost, and which reflects upon the government, was the falling last Friday morning of the notoriously unsafe building at Washington, D. C.—Ford's theatre, the scene of Lincoln's assassination, recently used for the pension record division of the war office.

Dr. G. C. Majunibar, of Calcutta, India, who has been in attendance at the World's Medical Congresses, in an interview at Washington last Saturday, among other interesting statements said that Ex-Consul Webb's scheme to establish a Mohammedan colony in the United States would prove a failure because the natives would not leave their homes in any number, and that on account of his own visit to America he will be barred from social life among members of his own caste in India.

THE ingenuity of man has devised already no less than six thousand different drinks, including mixed drinks. This is the testimony of the New York Custom House, which ought to be reliable.

ONE of our temperance leaders reports that in Cardiff, Wales, in a Congregational church they have two kinds of wine at the communion, the people who favor unfermented wine sit together, while those who wish it fermented sit by themselves; and the two look at each other with a certain amount of self-righteousness depicted on their countenances. This is rather too much of a good thing; we believe the "crathur" should be turned out from the communion service altogether.

BY request of Mrs. Woodbridge, we state that she unintentionally gave the impression by her "Statement" published in THE UNION SIGNAL of June 1, that the "Harvey Temperance Hotel" had not been rebuilt, and readers have inferred that there is no hotel at present on the ground. She regrets that her article was so worded, and has hastened to correct it by issuing a circular letter in reply to all correspondents saying that "there is a hotel in an unfinished state into which guests are being received daily. We are informed that the table is excellent and that Mrs. Russell is doing all in her power for her patrons."

THE management has granted one of the great halls of the Art Palace to the W. C. T. U. on every Sunday afternoon that a congress does not occupy it. Taking advantage of this permit a great mass-meeting was conducted June 11, by Mrs. Mary A. Woodbridge, in the Hall of Columbus. John G. Woolley opened the meeting with a cyclone argument against the "league with death" of the Christian voter who sustains the license system by his party affiliations, and held up before every eye a license blank of Chicago on which the church steeple is sandwiched in between the brewery and distillery. Mrs. Clara C. Hoffman, "the great trombone of the W. C. T. U. band," followed with a thrilling exposé of the army post exchange. Colonel Sobieski, Mrs. Margaret Parker and Miss Claxton, of England, assisted to make this day memorable in the onward march of the principles and powers that shall yet make the contested battle-fields of the individual and national soul the eternal realm of righteousness, and the shining pathway of justice and mercy. A resolution was passed almost unanimously by the audience asking that the United States government should keep its contract with the Christian people of the nation for Sunday closing of the World's Fair.

JUST as we go to press Monday comes the news that Walter Thomas Mills has made an assignment and that his hotel in North Harvey is in receivers' hands; also that in a conference of two hundred guests held early on that morning, Mrs. Stevens and others explained the relation of the W. C. T. U. to this hotel, and on motion of Rev. C. C. Vinal, a New Hampshire minister, the following resolution was unanimously adopted: "We have heard the explanation of prominent members of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union, and we hereby vote to exonerate them from blame, believing that its members were deceived and misled by Walter Thomas Mills and are suffering the same penalty as are those who are not white-ribboners." It should be distinctly understood that the W. C. T. U. as a body has had no connection whatever with Mr. Mills' hotel and that it is not responsible for the acts of its individual members. It must also be stated in simple justice to our great leader, that Miss Willard has never given her indorsement to this or any other private enterprise, and that her name and picture have been used in Mr. Mills' circulars after she has positively forbidden it. It has been asked why did THE UNION SIGNAL advertise the Harvey Temperance Hotel? In reply we would say that the statement of Mrs. Woodbridge and Mrs. Hoffman with the complaints of guests, were the first intimation received by the management of the W. T. P. A. that Mr. Mills' enterprises were not fully worthy of confidence.

"CLOSED for the Lord's Day" are the fitting words that explain the covered exhibits of the W. C. T. U. and W. T. P. A. in the Woman's Building of the World's Fair on the first day of the week. The "organization room," which comprises about one-fifth of the entire space of this building, is a silent yet speaking stretch of unbleached muslin. As regards the big buildings of the Fair, exhibitors do not care to display their goods on Sundays, and the lack of motive power and the covered displays combine to make Sunday an undesirable time to visit the Fair. Germany seems to be nearly alone among the foreigners in its disregard of the Sabbath. So many state buildings are closed that the section of the park given over to them is almost deserted by Sunday visitors. Chains, locks, boards and covered displays are practical protests against Sabbath desecration, which will win the day when petitions and appeals will fail.

A MISTAKE was made in our notice of the work of Dr. Kate Bushnell and Mrs. Elizabeth Andrew in India, as to the authority by which they were commissioned to undertake their investigation, and the scope of that inquiry. They went to India a year ago last December in the regular course of their round-the-world journey as missionaries of the World's W. C. T. U., and did this special work at the request of Mrs. Josephine Butler, superintendent of the purity department of the World's W. C. T. U., under the direction of the English section of the purity society, known as "the British and Continental Federation for the Abolition of State-regulated Vice," of which the Right Honorable James Stansfeld was chairman. In 1888 the House of Commons passed a practically unanimous resolution forbidding the sanction, regulation or licensing of vice, by the India government. That this resolution was being secretly defied by the India military authorities has been fully ascertained through the investigation which Mrs. Andrew and Dr. Kate Bushnell were, by divine help and guidance, able to bring to a successful conclusion.

THE following resolution has been sent to the leaders of the World's Woman's Christian Temperance Union in England from the British, Continental and General Federation for the Abolition of State-regulated Vice: "Resolved, That this committee will be prepared to assist in the expenses of meetings to be organized by the W. W. C. T. U. at which Mrs. Andrew and Dr. Bushnell speak on the work they have done in India. It will be glad to coöperate as far as possible, and is willing that its name be used with the officers of the W. W. C. T. U. if desired." This resolution comes as a sequel to the faithful and heroic work wrought by Mrs. Elizabeth Wheeler Andrew and Dr. Kate Bushnell in India, where they procured undoubted evidence proving that the system of state-regulated vice is in vogue in the military cantonments of the British army. A Parliamentary departmental commission has been appointed to examine this evidence, and it will be placed before Parliament in one of the famous blue books, within the next three months. Great meetings are to be held in England, to be addressed by these ladies. The press of Great Britain is eagerly discussing the pro and con of the subject. Lord Roberts, the late commander-in-chief of the British army in India, denies that which the white ribbon missionaries declare, and now comes the "tug of war." Any one acquainted with these ladies can have no doubt as to the correctness of their statements made, as they have been in every case, with the most careful and thorough investigation, involving great self-abnegation and hardship. Mrs. Josephine Butler, Lady Henry Somerset, Miss Willard and other leaders in reform work are earnestly coöperating with Mrs. Andrew and Dr. Bushnell, and there is no room for doubt as to the outcome, viz., the abolition of the regulated system of vice throughout the British army in India. As is well known the system has been abolished in every other part of the empire.

DANDELIONS.

He stands beside the cages,
Where the lordly lion rages;
He sees the baby lion and he hears the mother roar.
"How could they all get ready
In the country?" asks our Freddie,—
"If these are dandy lions, then I don't want any more."

DANDELIONS.

BY MRS. LAURA RANDALL.

Golden along the wayside,
Glad in their humble lot,
Making the wayside brighter,
Dotting the grassy plot.

Beautiful wayside jewels,
Which little children love,
And gather in golden armsful
From our bountiful Father above.

He sends them another garment,
White as a misty shroud—
They float away in the sunshine
Far above summer cloud.

Sweet lessons from humble flowers,
Perfect in hearts of gold,
Oh, that we all might be like them
As the lessons of life unfold.

When He calls us some glad morning,
In a language here untold,
We may float away in the sunshine
To the beautiful city of gold.

THE DELIVERANCE OF HESTER PERKINS.

BY HELEN CAMPBELL.

(Concluded.)

Only a sprained ankle, but for the first time in her life Miss Hester was helpless, and raged as she lay in bed where Dr. Scarborough had given her positive orders to remain, forbidding the slightest movement for a week, since the sprain was severe and the knee seriously bruised.

"She'll bust, she'll surely bust," Mrs. Jerry said, and shook her head, and there were days in which such fate seemed probable, for never did invalid rail with more bitterness against her fate.

"It's the Lord's will, you know, Miss Hester," said Mrs. Jerry, and Miss Hester dared not sniff.

"It's that pesky Jo," she said. "If I hadn't heard him hollering to the doctor, and been thinking if something couldn't be done about it, I wouldn't have forgot the pan. I'll see the first thing when I get well. I do seem to really hate him," she added under her breath as Mrs. Jerry answered the mother's call. "I s'pose it's sinful, but I can't stand him anyhow; crooked as an S, and always under foot," and Miss Hester turned her uneasy head on the pillow and tried to sleep.

A week went by, and at last a month. There was something wrong, and it was not decided what. Miss Hester lay now, grimly silent, with only an occasional outburst. Mrs. Jerry did her best, leaving Jerry to work his will in the little gray house by the mill-dam, and Mrs. Perkins sought anxiously any means of helping to patience and acceptance of the dispensation.

"It's all the fault of that pesky Jo," Miss Hester muttered at intervals, and so the days passed till an afternoon when Jo decided to see for himself, and came under the window for an interview with the old lady, with whom he had now and then had short conversations.

It was July, hot and drowsy, and every window open Miss Hester's bed had been drawn to the window of the room just back of where her mother sat, and every sound could be plainly heard. Jo's voice, somewhat subdued but still clear, came to her ears, and she started angrily, and then, on the verge of having him ordered away, stopped. What was he saying after that "Hullo!" to which her mother had at once responded?

"She ain't going to die, is she?"

"For mercy's sake, child, no! not unless it's the Lord's will more than anybody knows now. What put that into your head?"

"Because," Jo replied in a quiet, impersonal tone, and settling himself under the lilac bush, through the leaves of which he looked out critically, "I thought maybe she would, and then Mrs. Jerry would take care of you and I could come and see you. She'd better, you know."

Mrs. Perkins gazed at him in silence, too aghast to speak.

"Of course she'd better, because nobody likes her and she doesn't like anybody," pursued Jo, untroubled. "She's 'most dead, anyway. I knew she'd have to be, because that man said so. You don't know him and I don't either, only he sat by the brook and said things. Me an' Gracie was there, an' he come along an' took a picter of us with his box, an' he eat his lunch there an' give us some, an' told a story, an' then we got to talkin', you know, an' one o' the things he said was that unless folks loved folks and some of 'em most of all, they weren't alive at all; they were dead, or maybe 'most dead. So I knew Miss Hester was 'most dead, cos folks said—old Potter said—she didn't care the shake of a lamb's tail for anybody 'ceptin' you, an' she liked to have you to boss. So when she fell down an' had to go to bed I knew she would die all from being 'most dead anyway, you know."

Mrs. Perkins gasped, but no other sign was given, and Jo went on:

"So I went up to the graveyard and looked all round, and there's more places than I thought, because they said the old yard was chock full, and when she dies I'll come and see you every day."

"You go home this minute, an' don't you ever come here sayin' such things again!" said the old lady, closing the window with a bang, and the surprised Jo eyed it for a few moments and then made his difficult way toward home.

Miss Hester closed her eyes as Mrs. Jerry came in softly and looked at her, but opened them as the door closed again. "'Most dead, anyhow." What did that mean? She meant well enough by the world, but it had little for her or she for it. Was it possible that there might be something she had missed? Suppose there were such a thing as a love that could be felt, that would end this miserable spell that had seemed to bind her more and more closely as she lay here, raging against necessity. She wanted somebody to care, and nobody that came to see her showed the slightest symptom of any such state of mind. "Poor dear," her mother said a hundred times a day, but who would say "dear" when this old mother was gone? Not one.

Miss Hester closed her eyes again, and suddenly a tear rolled down her cheek, a tear born of self-pity, but followed by another of longing and strange trouble. She remembered when she had cared. There was a little sister no older than Jo lying in the old graveyard, and her she had loved. There was another who had gone to the war and never come back, and whom she had mourned for awhile till work swallowed up everything else, and she began to forget the world held anything but work and worry. What had made her hate Jo so, for hate it had nearly become? And what else had the man said, for there must have been more? Miss Hester was weak, and her mind wandered on. She wanted to hear more about the man. Somebody must ask Jo what the rest was. Somebody? Why should she not ask for herself?

Miss Hester sat up and rang the little bell by the bed so energetically that Mrs. Jerry came running, and the old lady clasped her hands in sudden terror.

"I want Jo. You go after Jo and bring him here, and bring some cookies on a plate," said Miss Hester a little shamefacedly, as Mrs. Jerry's astonished eyes were bent upon her. "I've a notion to hear him talk and you bring him, an' if he won't come alone you can let Gracie tag along; she is mostly after him."

Jo, discovered after long search sitting on the stone table which made the Governor's monument, and from this point of observation considering where Miss Hester had better be put, shrunk back when he heard Mrs. Jerry's errand.

"I ain't a-goin' to," he said. "No, I ain't a-goin' to. She'll do something or make me ketch somethin' and then I shall go dead and I ain't ready to yet."

"You come along, child," returned Mrs. Jerry. "She's got cookies for you, an' she's a poor sick critter an' you'd ought to behave an' do what she wants," and the reluctant Jo, lifted in her strong arms, found himself speedily in a truly confounding position; seated on the foot of Miss Hester's bed, the plate of cookies in his lap, and Miss Hester's haggard face and small gray eyes full upon him. But somehow there was a change, and Jo, after a moment's survey, rose to the situation.

"I guess you wanter get well," he said. "I guess you think it's better to go round than be in the graveyard. I guess—" but Jo was dumb, for again a tear crept down the cheek of his enemy, and more chased after it. Jo watched them for an instant.

"I guess something's bust," he said, and shrieked as Miss Hester burst into the first laugh he had ever heard from her lips.

"I guess there has," she responded presently, and with her usual determined look upon her countenance: "it'll stay bust too, or I'll know the reason why," and Miss Hester who in these words may be said to have taken her first step into the kingdom of heaven, pushed the door to with the stick by her bed, and having done thus proceeded to interview him as to his views.

Of the details of this interview I shall not speak, nor do I recite that from it Miss Hester, after the manner of the Sunday-school book, came out transformed, and went through life a spirit of brightness and cheer. But something had happened and is happening still, for in this journey adventure by the way is certain, and a day may hold strange tales of conquering or of flight. But when Miss Hester again walked down Linborough street, Jo from his perch shouted "Hullo!" and Miss Hester pausing with gravity, said in a loud and distinct voice "Hullo," and passed on red but triumphant, as Jo added:

"Bully for you!"

SHAKESPEARE, A GREAT MORAL EDUCATOR.

BY IRA GALE TOMPKINS.

(Concluded.)

Our author graphically delineates both the moral and physical pathology of this monstrous corroding social ulcer, drink, and there is scarcely a phase of it that escapes the keen scalpel of his all-unfolding genius.

It has been said that those who dance must pay the piper, and equally true is it that those who continue long to "suck the subtle blood of the grape" must pay the penalty, frequently in publicity. The physical signs of intemperance may often be seen advertised in the face, "that map of truth which deep impression bears," as witness this portrait of Bardolph by Falstaff:

"Thou art the knight of the burning lamp! I never see thy face but I think of hellfire and Dives that lived in purple; for there he is in his robes, burning, burning! . . Thy face is Lucifer's privy-kitchen, where he doth nothing but roast malt-worms. O thou art a perpetual triumph! an everlasting bonfire light!"—Henry IV.

How many such bloated and distorted faces one sees, who carry the flaming banner of their disgrace as a signal light and warning to all to beware the cup!

"The brand of shame is on thy brow—
Poor wretch, misnomered free."

As to that other social evil, involving woman's purity and virtue, Shakespeare infinitely surpasses King Solomon in truth and justice, as he places the moral responsibility where it properly belongs, on the part of the man. Solomon represents man as a prey to the designing wiles of woman—as simply a poor, weak and deluded victim, while Shakespeare conclusively shows that it is in consequence of an abuse of the divine attribute of love on the part of the male sex, and a too tender yielding in her own loving nature which are mostly responsible for woman's errors, as may be well illustrated by a few pertinent quotations:

"Not that devoured, but that which doth devour
Is worthy blame. Oh, let it not be held
Poor woman's fault, that they are so fulfilled
With men's abuses! these proud lords to blame,
Make weak-made woman tenants to their shame."
—Lucrece.

"Then call them not the authors of their ill,
No more than wax may be accounted evil
Wherein is stamped the semblance of a devil."
—Ib.

One cannot fail to remark in how many of Shakespeare's women are emphasized those crowning attributes in woman's nature—female purity and honor. In the "Divine Desdemona," who possessed that conscious virtue and immaculate purity that could not even imagine baseness in other women. In the persecuted Queen Hermione, who, falsely accused and threatened with death, exclaims:

"Honor is a derivative from me to mine
And only that I stand for."
—Winter's Tale, 3: 2.

In the innocent Hero—in the pure and faithful Imogene—in the invincible and conquering Isabella, who says:

"Th' impression of keen whips I'd wear as rubies,
And strip myself to death, as to a bed
That longing I've been sick for, ere I'd yield
My body up to shame."
—Meas. for Meas. 2: 4.

In the lovely and unfortunate Marina, who, thrown into a slum of the vilest kind, prays:

"Oh, that the good gods
Would set me free from this unhallowed place
Tho' they did change me to the meanest bird
That flies i' the purer air."

And the "blessed gods" in the power of her own inherent goodness, do set her free from her base surroundings, and make even her vile environments "stepping-stones to higher things.

As a pertinent conclusion to our many-sided theme, a most instructive moral may be cited by our author, drawn from the results of a life of vice and a life of virtue, respectively, as the heritage of old age.

Look then upon this picture, and then upon this. Here is Prince Henry's portrait of "Falstaff, that abominable misleader of youth—that old, white-bearded satan,"

"Thou art violently carried away from grace;
There is a devil haunts thee in the likeness of a
Fat old man; a ton of man is thy companion.
Why dost thou converse with that truck of humors? that bolting hutch of beastliness? that swollen parcel of dropsies; that huge bombard of sack; that reverend Vice,—that gray Iniquity,—that Father Ruffian—that Vanity in Years? . . And do but mark how ill white hairs become a fool and jester."

—Henry IV.

Now then, look upon the other picture.

"Though I look old, yet am I strong and healthy;
For in my youth I never did apply
Hot and rebellious liquors in my blood;
Nor did not with unbashful forehead woo
The means of weakness and debility;
Therefore my age is as a lusty winter,
Frosty, but kindly."

—As You Like it.

A healthy, hearty old age, in which a kindly frost supplants all disease germs; and the winter is on the hoary head, yet the lusty energy of youth courses through the veins, and eternal spring blooms in the heart, giving ruddiness to the cheek, and clothing "old age, that ill layer-up of beauty" with "angel-like perfection."

"Give me a staff of honor for mine age,
And not a sceptre to control the world."

What is it that makes Shakespeare live forever and seem forever young and new? Is it because the infinite book of nature lies always open before him, from which he is constantly reading us great moral lessons? Is it because he seems to be the conservator of all truth and the best expresser of it? Or is it because he seems to sum up the universal experience of all lives from which he is ever deducing practical and logical conclusions?

No, it is not, probably, because he is all these alone, but because behind all, or nearly all that he has written, there lies a great moral purpose. Because, in his great dramas he teaches by precept, philosophy and example, this unvarying moral lesson: Better, far better are those who always do right, though apparent evil fortune may seem to attend them, than are those who do evil, though crowned with apparent triumph. And, in holding as 'twere the mirror up to nature; in showing virtue her own features, scorn his own image and the very age and body of the time, his form and presence, he invariably points a moral as well as adorns a tale.

This it is that makes him great and the eternal years of God his own.

COLUMBIAN CRUMBS.

BY B. V. CUSHMAN, M. D.

One of the many absorbing topics brought before the Woman's Congress was the of the coming woman. The pity was that it had to be handled in such one-sided fashion. Mrs. Emily Marshall Wadsworth—a kinswoman of the famous beauty—and Rev. Anna Shaw were the two lenses of the feminine "specs" through which the assembly viewed it, but if we could see the matter as married men and bachelors do how different it might look! Since Priscilla blushed by her wheel, as John Alden pushed the suit of his doughty friend, instead of speaking for himself, there have been great changes in both the social and industrial conditions of women. Dr. Shaw tossed the ball playfully, and kept her hearers in merry mood, the gist of her remarks being that woman's marriage prospects are identical with man's marriage prospects, as there are grave difficulties in the way of his marrying without her.

Mrs. Wadsworth went more seriously into the subject, which she very sensibly considers yet in the field of speculation, for the time has not come when we can know what really are the effects of modern changes in industrial and social life upon the marriage prospects of women. She believes, however, that "that these great changes now promise, nay, are even now giving much that is grandest and best in life to women, and it is not in Nature that they do or can or will in any sense jeopardize her marriage prospects, for to women the holy state of matrimony must ever hold the fullest, noblest, completest life, 'that statelier Eden, where wifehood and motherhood take on something of the tenderness and divineness of Godhood.'" The speaker dealt fairly with the class of wage-earners, granting that first intoxicated with the pride of independence, they do not want to marry, but she went on to show that no salary satisfies the warm heart of potential motherhood, and the novelty worn off, the "self-supporting woman" is as easily wooed as any other.

Every working girl and professional woman in the house felt a chord in her inmost soul tremble at the touch of this truth. We who have been really inside the hollow sphere of "public life" know how shut in a woman is there. There is no such skylight opening heavenward as in the happy home. In closing her charmingly pessimistic paper Mrs. Wadsworth said: "All this marvelous American civilization, this great Columbian leap forward, is in the direction of more marriages, of better marriages, of holier and truer marriages."

Of all the brave and true words spoken, none will be longer remembered or more widely pondered than those of Mrs. Helen Gardner in her papers upon and Woman as an Annex. Listen to her exposition of the old proverb, "The hand that rocks the cradle rules the world." "It is true, alas, in a sense never dreamed of by politician or publican. It is true that the degraded status of maternity has ruled, and does rule the world, in that it has been and is the most potent power to keep the race from lofty achievement. Subject mothers never did, and subject mothers never will, produce a race of free, well-poised, liberty-loving, justice-practising children.

"Maternity is an awful power. It blindly strikes back at injustice with a force that is a fearful menace to mankind; and the race that is born of mothers who are harassed, bullied, subordinated and made the victims of blind passion or power, or of mothers who are too petty and self-debased to feel their subject status, cannot fail to continue to give us the horrible spectacles we have always had of war, of crime, of vice, of trickery, of lying, of arrogance, of incompetence, of brutality, and alas, of insanity, idiocy and disease, added to a fearful and unnecessary mortality. . . . We need only to remember that the mental, as well as the physical conditions, capacities and potentialities are inherited, to understand how the dead level of mediocrity must be preserved as a rule of the race so long as the potentialities of that race must be filtered through and take its impetus from a mere annex to man's power, ambitions, desires and opinions."

We are certainly nearing a time when the improvement of the human species will be a subject of wide interest. That inheritance flows through two channels is axiomatic, and when the world wakes up to the high endeavor of self-improvement, it will aim to keep both channels clear and both currents at their very best. The conflict of opinion then will be as to what constitutes the best conditions for both father and mother. The settlement will result in larger life for one, purer life for the other, and truer and fuller development for both. Man, the ruler of destiny, the conqueror, is composite. "In the likeness of God made he him; male and female created he them," and dominion was given to them. Man's kingdom is, and will be, divided and weak until consolidated according to the Divine plan. What is that plan? Find the answer and we have the key to every social problem vexing the race.

THE PRESS CONGRESS.

Surely Susan B. Anthony was justified in making the classic, Congressional inquiry, "Where am I at?" when she found herself before the assembled editors of religious newspapers. Miss Anthony would have been more than human had she not reminded them of her early relations to the religious press. She told them—without malice, however—that for forty years she was the butt of newspaper ridicule and denunciation. Her first reform effort was for temperance. She went down as a delegate to that first great temperance convention in Syracuse. Her credentials were returned on account of her sex. It was all very well for women to belong to temperance societies, but to speak or participate in the deliberations of a convention was intolerable. (In the names of Willard, Lathrap, Hoffman, et al., think of it!) "They were nearly all ministers, and the worst billingsgate that ever came upon my unprotected head was from those preachers; then the religious press followed with all its batteries!" exclaimed the venerable advocate of woman in temperance. She told further how her "hair used to stand on end with fear of going to perdition for being an abolitionist," when she read a certain religious journal of long and high standing.

But whatever her fate, an abolitionist she had to be. A person of her mold can brave "perdition" if she must, but turn her back upon her own deep convictions of right and justice, she cannot. Just she can be toward those who have reviled her most. She places the blame where it belongs, with the reading, subscribing public. "Subscribers determine what the press shall be," was one of her truest sayings. The short address was repeatedly interrupted with applause.

REPRESENTATIVE PRESS WOMEN

had the largest audiences. For some reason the meeting-going public likes to hear women talk. Washington hall was crowded on their evenings. I want to tell you an episode of Kate Field's address. She said she did not believe in universal suffrage. She had never belonged to a suffrage society. This statement caused a narrow ripple of applause. I know where that applause started. I sat just two chairs from its head-waters. The mite who started it was young. He was also weak, belonging to the spider-legged genus. After this semicolon of a "cheer," Miss Field went on to say that she believes in suffrage limited by educational tests, without reference to sex or previous conditions of servitude. That sentiment tickled the palms and soles of the audience and set them vibrating, but my callow neighbor failed to disturb the air in his locality. When quiet was resumed Miss Field went on to say: "Since the action of the recent Republican convention at Louisville, I am ready to strike hands with Miss Anthony, and if she is in the audience she can put my name down as her last recruit." A voice was heard: "I'm here!" Then verily the floor seemed to rise and the roof to come down, and no sign of order appeared until Miss Anthony stood upon the platform and took Miss Field's hand, but all was quiet in the chair next but one to mine. Its encumbent had exhausted himself with the first effort. When opposition to "women's rights" comes from a ripe and stalwart man, who has grown a luxuriant gourd to shade and shield his wife and daughters, I never want to argue with him. I am lost in regret that there are not more like him; but when a boy takes that way to express his contempt for his mother my regret is that she has not applied her slipper with more vigor and judgment.

HILLSBORO CRUSADE SKETCHES.

VI.

BY ELIZA J. THOMPSON.

It must "needs be" that much of interest is passed over in silence as we attempt a report of Crusade incidents—so varied and unique were the duties and thrilling occurrences of each day that of "making many books there would be no end," if all were told.

The following appeal, signed by about two hundred male citizens, had been presented to Mr. Dunn, the druggist, at the request of the temperance people, by a committee, consisting of Rev. J. McD. Mathews and Mr. E. S. Hibben:

APPEAL.

MR. W. H. H. DUNN:—Dear Sir: We, the undersigned, citizens and business men of Hillsboro, would respectfully and kindly ask you to sign the "Women's Temperance Druggist's Pledge." We appeal to you as interested with us, in the good name and prosperity of our town, and in view of the fact that some of our saloon-keepers are trying to make you their covering. We address you in no spirit of coercion, but as your neighbors and friends, who would have you with us in this temperance movement.

Should you decide to adopt the course here suggested, you will entitle yourself to our gratitude, as well as subserve, in our judgment, your own interests.

The subjoined reply was received at the hands of Mr. Dunn's attorneys:

MR. DUNN'S REPLY.

TO HON. SAM'L E. HIBBEN AND REV. J. MCD. MATHEWS:

Gentlemen:—Mr. W. H. H. Dunn, our client, to whom you presented a petition, signed by certain citizens of Hillsboro, requesting him to sign the "Women's Temperance Druggist's Pledge," bids us answer thus:

He is unable to see any difference between the request made in the petition referred to, and the request originally presented by the ladies. He saw fit to refuse such request then, and sees no reason now to change his mind.

The "movement" forced him into the courts, and consequently placed him in direct antagonism with the temperance people connected with such "movement."

Until such a request as the one referred to is accompanied by proper concessions to him, on the part of such temperance people, he can scarcely honor it with respectful or serious attention.

We beg leave to subscribe ourselves, very respectfully yours,
BEESON & SLOANE, and COLLINS & PARKER.

There was also work among our colored friends, many of whom were in hearty sympathy—and others sadly needing our help. Attention to the wants of the suffering because of the "curse of curses"; then the blessed work of guiding the children and the young people to avoid the ways that in the "end thereof are the ways of death!" and by the way, this juvenile work was undertaken in the early part of our campaign, and with more or less success has been carried on to the present day.

Zealous efforts were constantly made to diffuse the spirit of our work throughout the county, and bring all into harmonious action for law, purity and good order. All this united with our daily temperance and devotional services in the churches, halls, saloons and outer courts. The pavements occupied the earnest toilers of 1873 and 1874, in this, as in all localities touched by this pentecostal fire.

At a business meeting about the 17th of January, a resolution was offered and accepted, "that the ladies are recommended and expected to comply with their engagements with Mr. Koch (late saloon-keeper) by meeting tomorrow morning and going together to his place of business, taking and paying for all articles of glass ware or other articles of furniture that they have agreed to purchase of him."

It was a very singular pleasure that our band enjoyed on the following morning, to pass out of the church in a body, after the morning services were concluded, singing (in our hearts) that old gospel hymn:

"Help us to help each other, Lord,
Each other's cross to bear.
Let each his friendly aid afford,
And feel his brother's care,—"

then to go where we believed a man was honestly making an effort to get out of a business so fraught with disasterous results to all concerned. When we arrived at the "Bank Saloon" we found our committee of temperance gentlemen finishing their part of the work of reshipments. They kindly proffered their aid and one was soon mounted on an empty barrel and the auction commenced, which resulted in each woman possessing a trophy and Mr. Koch a full purse and an empty house, ready for (as we had hoped and prayed) a successful shoe trade as that was his original business. The pledge was presented to Mr. K— and from our minutes it seems he signed it with the added clause "never to engage in the business in Hillsboro, Highland county, Ohio."

The ladies of the association were most pleasantly surprised at the evening meeting in the Presbyterian church to find themselves presented with two large and beautifully illuminated text cards from Captain Amen, one to be hung in the Presbyterian church and the other in the Methodist. The texts were:

"In union there is strength."
"God's work pays sure wages."

It was moved (and seconded by Dr. Fullaton) and carried, that Dr. Fullaton be requested to frame these mottoes at his own expense. It was no sooner said than done and those embellished cards with their inspiring texts, and the kindly thought on the path of our "weary way," gave the band much good cheer.

One morning about this time as our ladies were engaged in a song and prayer service in one of the saloons, a message was received from our friend of the "Lava Bed," who had not been forgotten or neglected. A conference was soon arranged with a committee of ladies and Mr. Lance made known his situation and his wishes; plans were immediately formed for the poor fellow's relief from the heavy penalties resting upon him, and Joseph found himself a free man selling fresh fish from a fine business stand, giving strength, not "muddle," to human brains, and peace to his own conscience!

It is needless to say that "fish! fresh fish!" became the popular dish in the homes of the Crusaders (as they were beginning to be called,) and our new "importer" for a time did a flourishing business.

Mr. Wm. Swartz of the Jefferson House now demanded attention. He was only a temporary actor in the saloon connected with the hotel, the property belonging to his widowed sister, Mrs. Luber. Mr. Swartz and his wife had tastes differing from that sort of life, hence it was not a very difficult task to persuade them to withdraw from it. Terms were agreed upon and after the reshipment of liquors to Cincinnati and the auction of beer mugs, etc., Mr. Swartz found himself behind the counter of a flourishing grocery and his little family enjoying the peace of an honest home without the "trail of the serpent."

News still reaching us of other localities coming under the influence of this marvelous "baptism of the Spirit," our hearts were being enlarged for further service, and communications of cordial sympathy were now of frequent occurrence; from cities of considerable size we heard marvelous reports.

THE GOTHENBURG SYSTEM SEEN THROUGH NATIVE EYES.

BY KATE LUNDEN.

It is always well to look beneath the surface of things. The outward appearance is often deceptive and the saying is also true that "distance lends enchantment." A nearer approach may break the spell and rob the scene of all its imagined beauty, but should we therefore refuse to face the reality?

Much has been said of late for and against the famous regulative experiment known as the "Gothenburg System." In most of these discussions one essential feature has been conspicuously absent, i. e., personal observation. Although a native of Sweden I have never seen the system in operation; in the "good old days" when I grew up people managed to get drunk unsystematically. In order, therefore, to form an intelligent opinion of its merits and demerits I wrote to the editor of the Swedish Messenger, one of the Gothenburg weeklies, and asked him for a brief account of the working of this avowed "temperance" measure in the place of its birth, and for a comparison of the "old" and "new." The following is a translation of his reply:

"Under the old system the saloons were owned by private persons who bought the right to sell liquors at public auction. The liquor dealer who paid the taxes for the largest number of gallons was awarded the right to keep a saloon. In some towns this privilege was granted for life.

"Now when the liquor dealer paid a certain yearly license fee it is clear, of course, that his own interest demanded that he sell all the liquor possible. At the same time he tried to reduce his expenses. To that end cheap places of business were rented, in most cases small, unhealthy and filthy. Bartenders and other assistants were paid so poorly that they, in order to make ends meet, were compelled, you may say, to enter the downward road of crime—a road so easily accessible from the bar of the saloon. Liquor was sold on credit or traded for clothing or other personal effects.

"Still the old system had one advantage. The police authorities kept strict watch over the public houses, and every misdemeanor was promptly reported. In ninety-nine cases out of a hundred the saloon-keepers were indicted when brought before the court.

"The 'Gothenburg system' differs widely from the old. It originated as follows: A few of 'the pillars of the city' formed a company for the purpose of controlling or monopolizing the sale of liquor. Said company agreed to turn all profits over to the city, the only condition being that the stockholders should receive six per cent on the capital invested. But the interest received was, in fact, much higher than the six per cent figuring so prominently in all official records. If I remember rightly the original value of each share was one hundred crowns, but only half of the amount was ever paid. For the remaining fifty crowns the shareholders gave a note, which also drew six per cent interest. Consequently, the shareholders really made as much as twelve per cent on the invested money.

"The new company rented light, spacious rooms, and furnished them elegantly. Each saloon is provided with a so-called manager, who, as the employé of the company, draws a yearly salary of twelve hundred crowns besides free rooms, coal and gas. The company also pays all his assistants. In addition to that each of these managers has the privilege of keeping a public eating house as his own private business, where beer, mineral waters and other light drinks also are sold. It is self-evident that these positions are eagerly sought for; they yield an income that enables the incumbent to amass a fortune in a few short years.

"The managers are very seldom, if ever, prosecuted for violations of the law. The chief of police and the city authorities are stockholders in the liquor company, and its reputation must be guarded. The only great advantage of the company, as a promoter of temperance, is that liquor is never sold on credit, at least not openly.

"Drunkenness has not decreased under the new system. Formerly it was considered a shame to step over the threshold of one of the low saloons, but to-day no one needs to blush on account of frequenting the high-toned rum-holes, and any one may patronize them without the least danger of injuring his reputation. The press, although in the 'service' of the company, has refused to be silenced, and the papers have told the sad story of the rapid increase of drunkenness.

"Another fact deserves attention, viz., that it is now much more difficult than ever before to abolish the evil or even restrict it, and this for the following reasons: 1. The city reaps a rich harvest from the liquor traffic.* 2. The capitalists and 'city fathers' derive a large income from the same traffic.

"This is in brief the difference between the two systems. Personally, I have every reason to believe that the Gothenburg system—praise it best you may—is a kind of safety lock for the traffic in intoxicating drinks, which it will be hard, not to say impossible, for the friends of temperance to break open.

"This system has been advocated both in Sweden and other countries in the interest of temperance and morality. I am at a loss to understand what its advocates mean, for as far as temperance and morality are concerned Gothenburg has never been so low in the scale as it is at present. This assertion can be proved by statistical records.

"From what is said you can draw your own conclusions. One thing is certain, viz., that whereas the temperance people under the old régime could, by invoking the law, close the saloons which had repeatedly violated the regulations, such a victory is now impossible. Any complaint is received in such a manner that the complainant usually does not care to appear a second time."

The foregoing is simply submitted to the consideration of the advocates of the much lauded system therein described, or any other measure of "control" short of absolute prohibition. Dr. Gould's statement that the Gothenburg system "is the best means which has yet been devised for the control of the liquor traffic, where the principle of licensing is admitted at all," is no recommendation when we remember that this "principle" is wrong in itself, therefore cannot be upheld on moral grounds, and further that license, high or low, is wholly inadequate to solve the problem. The half-a-loaf-better-than-none theory is, as some one has remarked, altogether dependent upon the quality of the "loaf." Even a starving man will think twice before he accepts a slice of bread saturated with a deadly poison.

EDITORIAL CORRESPONDENCE.

A London Pageant—Queen Victoria and the Great Parade.

DEAR UNION SIGNAL:—"What do they know of England who only England know?" These words of Rudyard Kipling best epitomize the gorgeous object lesson that I beheld, in company with half a million of my kind, on May 10th, "in famous London Town." The central figure of that memorable scene, the Queen of England and Empress of India, has herself comprehended the greatness of her far-away possessions as no other has done except, perhaps, her illustrious and ever lamented Consort, Prince Albert the Good.

The first World's Fair was his thought, away back in 1851, and as a little girl on a wild western prairie, I read with fascinated eyes the record in our local newspaper, of that glittering Crystal Palace in the great world's city far away; of the gracious Queen and genial Prince who opened that first exhibition; and I little thought that well-nigh half a century later on I should witness a scene, compared with which the first World's Fair was but the study for a panorama; so rapidly since then has England climbed the heights of universal geography and oriental Empire.

"Through the eye to the heart" is the truest teaching for the development of patriotism, and no one in all the Empire has attested in so practical a manner her comprehension of the importance of this teaching as Victoria herself, who after her seventieth year has studied the language of her three hundred and fifty thousand oriental subjects, surrounded herself with Hindustanee servants, and yesterday paid to the Princes of India, who came to attend the opening of the Imperial Institute, the compliment of especially greeting them as she descended from the dais where she had just made a magnificent speech.

The new building, with its huge size, its mellow colors, its picturesque sky-line, and its "coronal of towers," the great Queen's Tower rising far above the rest, is worthy to be the one great architectural memorial of the Victorian era. It was in 1886 that the exhibition of Colonial and Indian products and of the great commercial, industrial, artistic and educational achievements of our various Colonies suggested to the Prince of Wales the idea of a permanent institution to be built as a national memorial commemorative of the fiftieth year of the reign of Queen Victoria. The subscription list has now reached £413,000 which includes fifty-eight foundation donors of £500 The foundation stone was laid by Victoria on July 4, 1887. The ground area of the buildings and courts occupies nearly nine acres; the Institute itself covers an entire square, and has been carried out in every detail with masterly skill and princely liberality. It is the memorial of a great people and a great queen.

But to the gala day itself. Surely we had what the loyal Briton likes to call "queen's weather"; "the vasty deep" of London, with its six millions of human beings, was shot through and through with electric arrows of sunshine; there was no trace of fog, but bright blue skies showing the softness of an English spring. Everybody was in the best of humors and the best of "good clothes"; it was not, like the Jubilee of 1887, a national holiday, but the verdict of the press is that the splendor of the pageant was even greater. Thirty thousand people had reserved seats, the most expensive costing from fifty to one hundred dollars; these were adorned with evergreen and the national colors in every form of harmonious device, and filled with the best survivals of the fortunate class—as we say now who hope that some day every class will be fortunate—for as John Burns declared in his speech at the great Hyde Park demonstration of the liquor people three days before this exhibition of the power of royalty, "What we want is an equal chance of sharing the leisure, the treasure, the pleasure, the clothes and food that this world gives." Though deprived of most of these, Demos was out in full force at the Queen's parade. Unable to pay a penny for seats, people flocked to the sidewalks hours before the time, and were in evidence by hundreds of thousands all along the route, which from Buckingham Palace to the Imperial Institute covered about two miles. The order and decorum of the day could not have been more perfect; troops lined the streets on both sides, and six thousand policemen were out in force, dressed in their new clothes and wearing their latest medals. We had the choice between seeing the inside and outside of the great ceremony, and the press says that those who (like ourselves) chose the street view had much the best of it.

We were on hand at ten o'clock although we knew the Queen would not arrive until after noon. The grand stands with their thirty thousand occupants were filled a little after ten. Opera glass in hand we watched the gradual rally of what is technically known in these parts as "the aristocracy," preceded by their gorgeously attired guardians and variegated flunkies. The cheering is but slight as many great ones come, for the waiting thousands are all watching for the Queen. Punctuality is the politeness of royalty, and though famous for this quality, and promised to the crowd at fifteen minutes after twelve, such is the throng through which she has to pass, that the Queen does not arrive till half-past twelve.

"Is it not curious," says an American white-ribboner whose field-glass is faithfully directed toward the distance whence the Queen is to emerge, "that I can be thinking of all this pageantry, the like of which I never saw before and shall not see again, and yet away down in my heart I am observing the noontide hour of the white-ribboners?"

"So am I," was the answer, and no more is said till is seen the flash of spears, the passing of half a dozen carriages containing the lesser lights of the royal household, and then a carriage drawn by six cream colored horses from Hanover, each gorgeously caparisoned in red and gold, the manes being entirely covered by tassels of bright color; a plump postillion mounted on the left hand horse of each pair, besides a gentleman in scarlet who leads each separate horse; two handsome Highlanders in a high seat perched up behind; two fair, attractive young Englishwomen, Princess Christian and Princess Beatrice, on the front seat, and all alone in the middle of the back seat a somewhat stout, short figure dressed in black, without a jewel, without a ribbon, just a kindly, quiet, dignified lady that anybody would have been glad to call his mother or his grandmother. At a foot pace the carriage passed, amid loud hurrahs, while a bright flag bearing the harp of Erin, the Cross of St. Andrew and the Lions of England was suddenly flung out into the sunshine from the top of the tower and bands of music played "God Save the Queen." Victoria and her daughters bowed quietly to the right and left, the Queen simply inclining her head with a most intelligent and kindly expression; and one stalwart republican from the New World looked at her with dimmed vision as she thought that here and now came to a focus all that is best in man's achievement during all the centuries; and that a woman was the chief figure in all that gorgeous pageantry, a woman who has been true to the sacred duties of wife, mother and friend, true to the magnificent powers reposed in her as Queen.

I remembered that when at sixteen years of age she was told that she was to rule over this mighty Empire, there was no exultation in look or tone, but with clasped hands she faltered out, "God help me to be good." I remembered her tender love and loyalty to that pure, noble man to whom she gave her heart in early youth, and that when asked the explanation of England's greatness, she said, "It is the Bible and Christianity." I knew that England did not live up to its high standard, but believed she would some day; and that this great reign—so rich in triumphs of literature and art, in the spirit of civilization, in the uplift of the people, in the emancipation of women—has contributed more than any other reign the world has known to bring about the realization of universal brotherhood. I knew that no human being on the globe concentrates in her history and influence so many thoughts; that this quiet woman is the cynosure of civilization; presidents and princes come and go, but she goes on and on until it seems as if her reign is likely to be the longest, as well as the most beneficent, of which history makes mention.

We waited an hour while the Queen, leaning on an ebony cane, disappeared with her children into the great temple of industry and achievement, and we knew that she had made her speech when the chime of bells in the beautiful tower told that the inauguration ceremony was complete. We knew that Sir Arthur Sullivan had conducted the orchestra, that Madame Albani had led the audience in singing "God Save the Queen"; and that the chimes were to tell us all of the joy that the climax had come.

A few minutes later the whole procession passed us on its return to Buckingham Palace, and it was a touch of nature pleasant indeed to see, when the Queen's sons with their wives and children, Wales, Edinburgh, and Connaught with his blithe young princess beside him, walked along the pavement to meet the carriage of the Queen, and to salute Her Majesty, who smiled on them with the simple kindness of a mother.

Meanwhile the chime of bells rang merrily, each bell named after one of the Queen's children, and the chime christened Alexandra for the Princess of Wales. To me as I gazed at the vanishing figure that was the center of all this pomp and circumstance, and knew that I should never see again the Queen of England and Empress of India, the music of the bells seemed to be saying to us all, even those matchless words of Tennyson:

"The love of all thy sons encompass thee,
The love of all thy daughters cherish thee,
The love of all thy people comfort thee—
Till God's love set thee at His side again."

The great poet is dead, of whom the Queen said that were she to exchange with anybody living it would be with Tennyson, but another has risen, Lewis Morris, who wrote the ode on the opening of the institute. Let me wind up with his words, expressive of that joy and pride, which Englishmen must feel who witness such a scene as I have faintly pictured:

"Peal joybells unawakened yet, nor cease,
Peal till our isles and continents rejoice!
Fling far and wide a new harmonious voice!
While through long ages yet, our realms increase
In unity and peace.

"Till drawn together nearer, they shall bind
Close bonds of love for all of British blood;
Then, our broad subject-realms in brotherhood;
Then, our great alien kinsmen, heart and mind,
Then, if heaven will, mankind!"

MRS. AMELIA THORP—"PROMOTED."

Dear Union Signal:—Some one has said that the Christian religion condemns itself because it represents death as "the King of Terrors." This is not the teaching of Christ. The chiefest of the apostles declared that the last enemy to be destroyed is death.

At the village of Oxford, N. Y., was held last month a service which might well be called a Christian burial. The body of Mrs. Amelia Thorp, who died in California, April 24, was brought to the home of her early married life for interment. The W. C. T. U. had no more loyal member than Mrs. Thorp. The white ribbon was on her breast as she lay in the coffin. The service was held at twelve o'clock in remembrance of the noontide hour of prayer, dear to every white-ribboner. The flowers which decorated the casket were beautiful in color and the sorrowing relatives were not dressed in the conventional black. The service was conducted by those who knew and loved the friend gone on before. Dr. J. H. Ecob, of Albany, read the Scripture lesson and offered prayer. Miss Emma Thursby sang, "Angels ever Bright and Fair," and was accompanied on the organ by Mrs. Ole Bull, only daughter of Mrs. Thorp. Miss Farmer read "Resignation," a selection from Longfellow, and the hymn, "Lead, Kindly Light," was sung by Miss Thursby and Miss Olea Bull, a granddaughter. The whole service was one to uplift the soul and to kindle the thought of the continuity of this life with that to come. In the peaceful atmosphere of the place it was easy to believe that Christ had abolished death.

Mrs. Thorp was a remarkable character and brilliant woman. Her wonderful gift of language, spiritual insight and strong personality commanded the attention of every one with whom she came in contact. She deplored conventionalism and sham. Her friendships were strong and she had the faculty which is always the mark of a great mind as well as a great heart, that of attaching to herself the ceaseless devotion of her friends. The gifts and graces which most women of Mrs. Thorp's social standing give to the world, she gave untiringly to the work which elevates humanity.

Every department of the W. C. T. U. claimed her loving sympathy. It was she who inspired the thought of fitting up "the den" for Miss Willard. At the meeting of the N. W. C. T. U. in Boston, three years ago, she left her beautiful home in Cambridge, and, with Mrs. Shapleigh took rooms in Boston that she might be near the Temple and early at the meetings, which were so full of inspiration. She was an original promoter of the closing of the saloons about Cambridge, and became a literal terror to the liquor traffic by the vigilance and vigor with which she tracked down and ran out every applicant for "the business." Mrs. Thorp was equally interested in the woman question and worked for the enlargement of woman's life, because it means the elevation of humanity.

She fell asleep in the fulness of years, "like ripe fruit, with ease gathered, not harshly plucked—for death mature. Her children rise up and call her blessed and her husband praises her in the gates."

Therefore I say unto you, what things soever ye desire, when ye pray, believe that ye receive them and ye shall have them.—Mark 11:24.

The crowd of visitors to the Temple daily increases, and the demand to have Willard Hall open during the day for the inspection of visitors has become imperative. The Chicago Central W. C. T. U. has now rented the hall, and opened it for visitors, where every one may attend the noon-day prayer-meetings, which are now being conducted by Mr. John G. Woolley with great success and a wonderful revelation of power in this unique speaker and worker, and "brother of girls." Words of appreciation and delight fall from the lips of all visitors to our beautiful hall.

One of our staunch white-ribboners writes as follows to a friend: "I do not believe in inviting failure by discouraging outcries when a shout such as they used to send up in the old-fashioned 'raisings' would send a whole broadside erect. It made a great deal of difference in those dayswhether an alarmist cried out, 'It's going back!' or an enthusiast put life into the timbers by a shout, 'She's coming up, heave her now altogether!' I have heard my uncle tell how life was imperiled once by an alarmist's cry causing a score of men who were lifting timbers to turn and look about for safety, until the fearful calamity was only prevented by one whose quick eye took in the situation, and shouted, 'It's coming up, it's coming up!' which nerved their arms afresh. I have thought of this incident often in connection with the recent controversies about the Temple."

It's coming up, it's coming up, my sisters, but you must "heave her now altogether," if the W. C. T. U. expects soon to become the entire owner of the beautiful Temple, Let us all take hold of the ropes and pull with a will—the little children and the aged saints, as well as those in the prime of their strength. From a letter received a few days ago from our beloved leader, Miss Willard, the following extract is taken: "Lady Henry and I fully purpose holding meetings with you for the Temple enterprise when we return if I am able to do so. We may not get to this for months, but we certainly think we could help you to this extent whenever possible." If the two great leaders of the World's and National W. C. T. U. have determined to thus put their shoulder under the great enterprise, can't you, too, my sister, help a little, at least fill a mite-box during the year, or get others to help you do so? I find there are thousands of white-ribboners that are not so much as lifting a finger to help pay for the Temple; for instance, I met a well-dressed lady in Willard Hall the other day. She was in delight over its beauty and the grandeur of the whole building. I asked her if she owned any bricks in it; with much shamefacedness she admitted she did not, but that their union was filling a mite-box. I asked how many paying members they had. She said sixty-six. Think of it! sixty-six women filling one mite-box, when each should have at least filled one—the entire union sending in $3.65 when it might have sent $240. I spoke to another visitor in Willard Hall the other day. She was old and very plainly dressed and came from one of our far western states. She sat perfectly absorbed with the beauty around her. I asked her if she was pleased with the hall and building. She replied as so many do: "I have no words to express my delight and admiration; it far exceeds my expectations." I said, "I hope you will fill a mite-box and help us pay for it." Her face beamed with honest pride and gratification as she answered: "Oh, I have paid for a great many bricks in this building. I have been filling mite-boxes right along and intend doing so until it is all paid for."

Lois E. Alfred, Newport, Vt., sends $80 which completes the Orleans county pledge of $100, collected from the unions in the county; $18.65 comes from the W. C. T. U. of East Cleveland, Ohio, on a $100 pledge. Mrs. Sarah W. Tudor recently held a delightful Temple mite-box social at her residence in Baltimore, on behalf of the Baltimore W. C. T. U.—the "mother union" of Maryland, which has done a great work, both local and state. The collection amounted to $60.62 which is to be applied on a $100 pledge. Mrs. Tudor truly remarks, "This noble union is deserving a fitting place in Willard Hall." Bethany, Conn., W. C. T. U. sends $25 on its pledge. Mrs. H. N. Lewis sends $34 which completes the $100 pledge of the Wellsville, N. Y., W. C. T. U.; $1 has been received from the Newton, N. J., W. C. T. U., for the Lucy Webb Hayes tablet; $2 has been sent by Maude Hutchinson for the Ames and West memorials; also $2 from Mrs. A. Laundsbury for the Ames and West memorials; $21.59 which was mentioned a few weeks ago as the balance of $100 from Monroe county, Ohio, should have been Monroe county, Michigan. Mrs. E. M. Watkins, of Muchakinock, Ia., sends $1 as her "indignation contribution," roused by the ordeal the Temple work has had to pass through,—and she sends $2 for a mite-box. Miss E. B. Swan sends $25 which completes her gift of $100 for a tablet in memory of her mother, Mrs. V. A. Swan, Cincinnati, O.

A two-cent stamp sent to Mrs. Matilda B. Carse, the Temple, Chicago, will secure a mite-box. Remember, any one placing in the box $2.50 from May 1, 1893, to May 1, 1894, will receive the lovely Columbian souvenir made of aluminum, with a cut of the Temple on one side and on the reverse the face of Miss Willard and the founder of the Temple, with suitable inscriptions. All money orders should be made out in the name of the treasurer, William D. Preston, and sent to our financial secretary, Miss Sara Johnson, The Temple, Chicago, Ill.

LICENSE—WHEREFORE?

BY LAURA H. WILLIAMS.

Though averse to praising Satan,
  See how well he hid his claws,
When he talked about high license
  Helping on the temperance cause.
We have tried it, found it wanting;
  'Tis a blot, a deathless curse
On the nation that allowed it
  For the gold that fills the purse.

Tell me, when has money prospered,
  Gained by slaying innocence?
Ask of Judas, or his pupils,
  In the past or present tense.
What repays the perjured conscience?
  Think you 'tis the princely fee?
When God's voice shall walk the garden
  How will guilty Adam flee?

Why, 'tis trading with the devil
  As he dictates and desires;
We to furnish all the victims,
  He the fierce, destroying fires—
Whence the souls of countless thousands
  Writhe in anguish in the flame
Of the alcoholic monster,
  Which, when wakened, who can tame?

Ye who see the ills that threaten
  Mixed with evils of to-day,
Are you silent and regardless?
  Up! the tide of evil stay!
Never was a call more sacred,
  Never was a cause more just,
Since Jehovah breathed His spirit
  Into mute, created dust.

Up! the Spirit yet shall conquer;
  'Tis of God and not of man.
You may be the missing factor
  In the heaven-directed plan
For the shattering of evil
  And removing error's chain,—
Thus preparing for the advent
  Of a just and righteous reign.

WHO CARES?

BY ELLEN FRACKER PRATT.

"Dear me! I'm not going to change my dress this rainy, dull day; nobody will call, I'm sure, and I'll just take my book and forget the outside world. The children never notice whether I'm in a silk or a calico gown; whether my hair is crimped or straight, and, as for John, he's the most indifferent man in the world about a woman's looks. I wish he did care a little, as he used to in our early housekeeping days. How sweet it sounded to hear his words of praise and approval. Ah, me! how prosaic we grew after the babies came! and yet we women never get too old to like compliments from our husbands, and really, I think I get absolutely hungry for a look or a word of praise, sometimes. Life seems so matter-of-fact, so humdrum, all the romance gone out of it. It isn't right, but it's the solemn truth.

"Ah, well! what's the use of fretting over spilt milk. We wives and mothers have to grin and bear a heap of unpleasant things, but I guess the Lord stands back of it all, and it will all be right some day, only—I wish John wasn't quite so practical and so unsentimental. If meals are on time, and I am at home, it seems all that is necessary to his happiness. I like to look trim and pretty; nothing is so repulsive to me as an untidy woman or an untidy home, but I just feel to-day as if I didn't care whether school kept or not, and I'm going to finish 'The Woman who Dares.' I can't rest until I know how she comes out, whether she draws her husband to her high plane, or whether he pulls her down to his level. She's right and ought to win, and I guess she will, for she's a loyal woman and a royal woman, and he'll come to his senses before giving her up."

After this monologue Mrs. Sutton gave her dish towel an extra shake and hung it on the line, polished the top of the cook-stove, and taking off her work apron, left the kitchen. With a sigh of content she sank into an easy rocker and perched her feet on a hassock, and soon became oblivious to the world, the flesh and the devil.

She read on for two hours when there came a ring at the front door. "There!" flinging down her book and smoothing her front locks, "I knew how it would be if I sat down looking like a scarecrow," and in no gentle frame of mind she admitted—her pastor!—of all persons in the world the one she cared least to see. It was outrageous for a minister to be out calling in such weather; he probably did it just to make discoveries, and she hoped he was satisfied.

She was profuse in her apologies, which he interrupted with: "Now, don't mind it in the least; my wife has been guilty of the same thing on several occasions, and I must confess the lesson has had a very wholesome effect." (Was ever man so abominably candid? but, after all, who had a better right to chide?)

A flushed face and a feeling of dissatisfaction with herself and all the world was the effect the caller had upon this wife and mother. She closed the door upon his retreating figure with a grim, "There, now I don't care who comes! To be seen by Mr. Toogood in this short calico dress, and not a crimp to my hair! Oh, oh!"

She returned to her novel, but not with the same abandon. After another hour she arose and prepared to get supper for husband and children—a girl of fourteen and a boy of ten.

The first to come in from school was Kitty. She sat down as was her wont to chat awhile with mother of the day's doings at school. She stopped abruptly and looked anxiously at her mother, and then asked: "Have you got one of your headaches, mamma?"

"No, dear. Why do you ask?"

"O—I thought you looked kind o' sick—you weren't fixed up any, and when you don't dress up in the afternoon you always look as if something was wrong."

"I sort of feel that way myself, Kitty, and I don't believe I'll be so shiftless again."

At the supper table Ned looked across at his mother, as she made some remark which sounded unlike her usual serene self, and said: "Mamma's tired to-night; I guess she's been housecleaning."

"Why do you think so, my son?" she questioned.

"Cause you look like it."

"John," she said turning to her husband, "do I look sick, or tired, or unusual to you?"

"You look about ten years older than usual. What's the matter?"

She made some irrelevant reply, and kept her own counsel. The next evening her reward came when her husband remarked, during a pause in the reading of the paper, "Mary, you look almost as young as you did the day we were married; I hope I shall not die very soon, for some other fellow will be falling in love with you, sure."

"You didn't think so last night, John," she laughed.

"Well, no; I guess I was out of sorts last night; nothing seemed just right."

"Well, well, how queer men are," was his wife's mental comment; but the lesson was not lost.

THE PROPORTIONATE AND SYSTEMATIC GIVING MOVEMENTS.

BY ESTHER TUTTLE PRITCHARD,
Nat. Supt. Systematic Giving Department.

It is now but little over two years since active measures were put into operation to introduce systematic giving (or, more accurately, proportionate giving) methods into the state unions, and fifteen states have already indorsed the movement. Our department includes both systematic appropriation (i. e., giving so much a week to specified objects) and proportionate giving; but the promotion of the latter is the leading object of the department. Our plan of work is being prosecuted with more or less vigor, according to the aggressiveness of the superintendents and their associate workers, but seed is being sown in all these states from which we may expect a harvest. This kind of seed is singularly reproductive as appears whenever sown under favorable conditions. A few years since the writer placed a tract on proportionate giving in the hands of an intelligent widow of limited means. She went home and gave it to her little boy who became a convert to the tithe system. Not long since I again met the mother and was told that her boy is now a civil engineer, on a good salary and laying aside twenty dollars a month for the Lord. The sowing seemed uneventful, but the harvest will mean much for Congregational treasuries.

White-ribboners will be pleased to hear that this cause is gaining new adherents by the action of woman's boards. The Woman's Foreign Missionary Society of the M. E. church, with its 4,262 auxiliaries and a membership of 147,133 women, has ordered that proportionate giving be the topic of one of the twelve uniform lessons to be studied by the society this year. The Baptist Woman's Foreign Missionary Association of the West indorsed the movement at its late annual meeting in Minneapolis, and appointed an Illinois white-ribboner to draw up a plan of work. The subject of systematic beneficence was presented last week by our good Addie M. Fields before the annual meeting of the Cumberland Presbyterian Woman's Foreign Missionary Society, in Nashville, Tenn. A friend who was present writes me it was the "most enthusiastic hour of the convention." At the close of the discussion the subject was referred, by motion, to the committee on future work, with instructions to prepare "some plan whereby systematic beneficence may be presented practically and personally to every auxiliary. The motion was unanimously supported."

The action of these boards means incalculably much for the strengthening of the movement, and ought to inspire our superintendents with fresh courage. The department plan has proved itself capable of great efficiency, but it is not self-operative. As an educational rather than aggressive agency, it requires aggressive women to push it. Workers who can forcibly present the cause before public audiences and then draw the net, are indispensable to success. I have, myself, seen from thirty to seventy-five or one hundred women pledge themselves to the tithe system at the close of an address. It is surprising to find the openness of the public to this question, and the many who have already adopted proportionate giving methods. At the Nashville meeting mentioned above one-third of the ladies rose in response to a call, to signify they were in the practice of tithing.

A very good way to help the cause is to make this subject a leading feature of programs for schools of methods. Indiana is doing this with encouraging results, and I wish it might be done in all the states. I would take this occasion, also, to suggest that items relative to our department be more frequently sent to our press reporters. We are hardly having our share of notice.

DRESS AND MOTHERS.

BY FRANCES RUSSELL.

Not a citizen of this republic is born whose physical constitution and cast of mind do not bear the impression of his mother's previous health and character. If you do not know that fashion of dress affects both physical and mental health, imagine the situation reversed for a single generation—the girls brought up with the bodily freedom of boys, and the boys dressed from infancy in girls' clothing; their bodies formed to an unnatural shape, and their minds imbued with the doctrine that beauty of appearance should be the chief aim of life. Let the little boy's hair grow long and do it up in curl papers or do it up in hard braids every night so that, night or day, he cannot have one moment of unconsciousness of the importance of artificial appearances. Budget his legs with skirts so that he can have no freedom in running or climbing, and must kick out ungracefully, sideways, to get his feet around his skirts if he tries to go upstairs with his hands full. His form can be trained to "graceful lines of hour-glass shape" if you begin tight lacing early enough, so that the floating ribs can be gradually brought together, if not overlapped. Long skirts worn on all occasions would restrict his exercise and tax his strength and mental capacity. Would not all this affect the boy's health both physically and mentally? Not a father would consent to see his boy's future imperiled by such clothing.

In some heathen countries they kill the girl babies. In America they put them through French fashions. A widely published fashion letter from Paris, under date of January 15, 1893, begins thus: "In Paris women of highest social position are simple and plain in their street dress. Curious novelties and the sensational they leave to those who have no claim to notice except through dress." Yet it is probable that the woman who wrote that paragraph cannot send from Paris anything for which our newspapers will pay so freely as for pictures and descriptions of the "curious novelties and sensational" styles, worn by "those who have no claim to notice except through dress." Thus is the public taste in America constantly corrupted by placing before it pictures of deformed bodies, dressed in senseless costumes.

More than a thousand excellent women—authors, artists, philanthropists, journalists, physicians and college teachers and students have consented, over their signatures, with many cheering words and wishes, to give their "influence in favor of an improvement in woman's dress which will give her the free use of the organs of her body when working or taking exercise." This enrollment has been made under the auspices of the National Council of Women. In adopting the report of its committee on dress, the National Council recommends women to avail themselves of the comfort of one of such styles of dress (modified according to individual judgment) when visiting the World's Fair.

Surely it is an occasion when a short, loose, light "walking dress" will be needed, as it is estimated that to walk through all the aisles of the many buildings, without stopping to look at anything, would require seven days, walking twenty miles a day, and no one can inform us how often or how urgently a "rainy-day dress" may be needed.

A distinct feature of this movement is concerted action. No one has been asked to come out alone in a reformed dress, for it is understood that oddity is often a greater tax upon nerves than can be counterbalanced by muscular freedom. Nearly every woman of the thoughtful, intelligent class enrolled in favor of the movement would prefer to wait until the new dress becomes common before adopting it.

Women are planning to wear it at summer resorts and in colleges. The chivalry and intelligent patriotism of men will then be put to the test. Will they approve and encourage the heroic effort of American women to achieve their own freedom, and to make better conditions for the generations yet to come?—The Arena.

AN OPENING RECITATION.

Dear friends, I have been asked the first
To get up and recite,
And say how very pleased we are
To see you here to-night.

We all will do the best we can,
And if we make mistakes,
Try to be patient with us, please,
Nor heed our little breaks.

We hope you something nice will hear
Before our meeting's ended,
And if you'd join our Band of Hope,
Oh, would it not be splendid!

Now I'll sit down, or you'll get tired,
And so, perhaps, I may;
And if you will, please sign our pledge,
Before you go away!

THE BUTTERFLY AND THE BEE.

[From the French.]

BY M. R. S.

"If it is fine,"
Said a butterfly gay,
"I'll dance in the fields the livelong day,
If it is fine."
"And I," replied a wise old bee,
"Will do the work that is given me
If it is fine!"

UNCLE JOHN'S TALKS.

XI.

MAGNETIC HAMMER, GRINDSTONE.

What's that, Jimmy? Comfort with a clock? So I have, but that is not what I started to say, the other day. I meant this magnetic tack-hammer. Worth a hundred times its cost. Bring it face to face, or face to head with a tack and you see how it takes hold. No, it will not take one from a pile, because the one which it touches becomes magnetic and grabs hold of its neighbors. And that is why you want this tack board. Neither did I ever see one before; but it did not take me long to decide what I wanted. Simply a ½x6x10, with a ¼ inch ledge all around, and a piece to hold one side an inch from the table. Throw on some tacks, take the board up, shake it lengthwise and run them all to the high side. Then gradually tip it, still shaking, so that the tacks will start for the low side. You see they all go head first like polly-wogs; and spread out so you can present the hammer to one at a time. This board is well worth making if you do not have a magnetic hammer, just for the convenience in picking up tacks. But you must have such a hammer. It costs only ten cents.

Of course you must know how to sharpen your tools. Never work with dull ones. Better spend two hours a day in keeping tools in good order, than work at the disadvantage which comes with blunt edges. In fact, it is simply impossible to do good work with dull tools. You will need a grindstone, hone and strap. See that the grindstone is hung so it will run true, getting help if necessary. I never saw a grindstone, excepting my own, that was high enough. For a man, the top should be four and a half feet from the ground or floor. Then you can stand up and do nice work. No, better not have a trough for water or you will leave the stone soaking, some day, and soften one side. Nail a piece across the frame at each side of the stone and almost touching it. Now fold some rags a dozen thicknesses and tack them to these pieces so that the edges will brush the stone. This will prevent water from flying. Put up something to protect your knees. For water, hang up a tomato can with a large awl hole in the bottom. Put in a plug from the inside, long enough to reach out of the can. Make the end into a wedge, so you can regulate the flow and have it fit tight when pushed in farther.

Treadles are never right. They are fastened at the farther end of the frame, so that you are obliged to lift the knee too high. In light work this is a serious objection. Take a 1x6x24, lay it on the ground under your right foot, and attach it to the small crank by a piece of wire, or an iron hook. Now, for heavy work, you draw the board back and put your foot near the wire. For light work, you push it forward, and your heel comes nearer to the still end, so that your foot does most of the moving while your body is practically still. This is as much superior to the kind you see at the stores, as an oyster stew is to a cold potato.

You must have good light for edging tools, and good eyes, too. The light should come from overhead. When you cannot have it so, hang a piece of mirror where it will reflect the light upon the stone. Ever notice a cook looking into a kettle, with the fire shining into her eyes? Shade the eyes with a bright cover, and reflect the firelight into the kettle. I shall continue to emphasize this question of light. You cannot improve your eyes by requiring work that gives them pain. They will find exercise enough without it.

For the hone, get as good a one as you can. Use kerosene, or any oil. Yes, use kerosene on the lawn mower when it is clogged; but after it is clean, apply the lubricating oil. You can make the strap yourself. A strip of soft leather from the shoemaker, glued to a smooth, flat stick, and covered with emery paste, though this may be too coarse for razors, which I hope you will never use. I think you can vary the harshness by the amount of paste you apply. Get five cents worth of emery powder at a hardware or drug store, and mix it with oil. Keep all these things covered from dust.

Now we are ready, and next time we will take up the practical work of sharpening tools, and perhaps wits at the same time. Anyway, be prepared for close attention and hard work.

ALE AND BEER MEASURE.

One day, when the lesson was the tale called, "Ale and Beer Measure," a little boy, remarkable for his correct lessons, was quite unprepared.

"How is this, John?" said the teacher.

"I thought it was no use," said John.

"No use!" said the teacher.

"No, sir; it's ale and beer measure," said John.

"I know it is," said the teacher.

"Well, sir," said the little boy, "father and I think it is no use to learn about ale and beer as we mean never to buy, sell or drink it."

WHAT GERMAN BOYS DRINK.

German boys who work in the open air all day long, every day in the year except school-days, get very thirsty, of course, and must drink a great deal. The German mothers to keep their boys well and hardy, are very expert in making nourishing drinks for them. Honeyade is the favorite out-door drink for German boys. It is made in this way: An ounce of ginger is boiled for an hour, in two quarts of water. Then two quarts of cold water, a pound of sugar, an ounce of lime-juice and two ounces of clear sweet honey are added. When all is cold, the white of an egg is whipped in and a lemon is squeezed over the honeyade jar. The sturdy little Germans are allowed to drink their weight, as the saying is, of this.—Selected.

VEGETABLE POETRY.

Potatoes came from far Virginia;
Parsley was sent us from Sardinia;
French beans low growing on the earth,
To distant India trace their birth;
But scarlet runners, gay and tall,
That climb upon your garden wall,—
A cheerful sight to all around,—
In South America were found.
The onions traveled here from Spain;
The leek from Switzerland we gain,
Garlic from Sicily obtain,
Spinach in far Syria grows;
Two hundred years ago or more
Brazil the artichokes sent o'er,
And southern Europe's sea-coast shore
Beet roots on us bestows.
When 'Lizabeth was reigning here,
Peas came from Holland, and were dear.
The south of Europe lays its claim
To beans; but some from Egypt came.
The radishes, both thin and stout,
Natives of China are no doubt:
But turnips, carrots and sea-kale,
With celery so crisp and pale,
Are products of our own fair land:
And cabbages, a goodly tribe,
Which abler pens might well describe,
Are also ours, I understand.

DEAR BOYS AND GIRLS:—A Scottish niece, who was present at the great temperance meetings in Edinburgh last winter, has written to the Cozy Corner a bright account of them. After describing the beautiful decorations in the Synod Hall, she says:

Lady Henry Somerset gave the principal address the first evening, and Miss Willard on the second. Six little children of the Young Abstainers' Union presented framed addresses and bouquets to them. One was a little boy in full Highland costume, with a plaid, brooch, kilt, silver buckles, all complete, and another a little fishwife, with a creel. Some real Newhaven fishwives occupied a specially reserved seat. They were very imposing in their "braw" short gowns. Miss Willard stood up in the vast assembly, and made her audience laugh or cry as she willed. When she came to any point in her address she gave such a pretty little nod of her head and stopped a minute. Dead silence, and then, as the force of it was realized, laughter or cheers or just a great sigh rolled forth. Oh, it was splendid! I would not have missed it for I don't know how much. When she sat down hats, handkerchiefs, sticks, anything that came handy were waved round and round, and peal after peal of cheering, Hurrah! Hurrah! echoed through the hall. Mother says she has very rarely seen an Edinburgh audience so enthusiastic.

My brother and I belong to the Young Abstainers' Union. It is the organization for children, connected with the B. W. T. A. We have lovely little badges of blue enamel in the shape of a Maltese cross, with the letters Y. A. U. on them in gold. I have made mine into a brooch. The meetings are very interesting, but I will tell you about them another time. I would be delighted if some of your nieces about my age (seventeen) would write to me. I'd be sure to answer.

Let us remember, children, to ask in our prayers this summer that God will bring our beloved temperance leader, Miss Willard, back to us in the fall with renewed health and power; and remember, too, to ask His blessing on all temperance work and workers.

Affectionately,

Aunt Jane

NEPHEWS AND NIECES.

May I have the pleasure of joining the Cozy Corner and call you Aunt Jane with the other little boys and girls? I am ten years old. I think it would be very nice if Aunt Jane would have all the children's names and addresses and we could all write to each other and be friends, no matter if we are far away. LILA TIBBITS.

513 Eighth St., Seattle, Wash.

Anything which will bring our temperance army shoulder to shoulder, is a good plan. I hope a good many warm friendships may spring up, and the temperance work be helped through our Cozy Corner correspondence.

A WEEK OF TEMPERANCE CONGRESSES.

An entire week of temperance meetings representing more than a score of organizations under various names and fully a million of adherents is a phenomenon which history produced for the first time, in this year of our Lord, 1893, between the dates June 5–12. The place, of course, was Chicago, the center of the universe in these latter days.

The Congress was opened by the National Temperance Society with a three days' session, replete with able addresses by world-renowned speakers. Among so many excellent addresses and papers it seems invidious to mention any as superior to the others, but human nature will make comparisons, and even when everything is good there are always some that are better. Two speakers were received with marked favor; these were Dr. Herrick Johnson, who spoke on "Principles and Methods in the Temperance Reform," and Mrs. Mary A. Livermore, whose subject was, "Ought Women to Vote Concerning Liquor Traffic Legislation?" Mrs. Livermore made a splendid hit for suffrage by giving a soldier boy's pathetic story of the war, in which the power of reserves was thrillingly depicted. Leading her audience up to the point of applause for the reserve soldier boy's heroism, she skillfully applied her illustration by exclaiming, "Men, we are your reserves; call us into action." The audience broke into tumultuous approval and for minutes, not seconds, the unconventional applause continued. We hope to present to our readers Dr. Johnson's paper, also a number of the other eloquent addresses read during this three days' session and for that reason will not attempt an outline of them here.

Thursday was occupied with the Catholic temperance societies and other organizations, and intense zeal for the cause was manifested in every meeting. The Catholic Congress indorsed the formation of W. C. T. Unions and Bands of Hope after the manner of Protestant unions and declared that one woman was worth five men in the temperance warfare. Our space compels us to hasten on to the account of our own white ribbon gathering which was by far the most enthusiastic of all.

The Congress of the World's Woman's Christian Temperance Union called together, on the morning of June 9, an earnest assemblage of temperance workers. The hall was fittingly decorated—pure white lilies lending grace and fragrance, the pictured face of Frances E. Willard giving a silent greeting that needed no interpreter, a picture of the Temple, reminding hundreds of faithful workers that their labor in that direction, at least, had been no failure, while overhead flags of all nations blended in significant harmony. Mrs. Carse presided. Among those on the platform were Mrs. Charles Henrotin, Mrs. Laura Ormiston Chant, Mrs. Mary T. Lathrap, Mrs. L. M. N. Stevens, Mrs. Mary A. Woodbridge, Mrs. Rounds, Mrs. Tyng, Mrs. Perkins, Miss Kimball, Mrs. Margaret Parker, Mrs. Barker and Miss Shaffner, of China. After all had united in singing Rock of Ages, in the absence of "Mother" Thompson, Mrs. Stevens read the Crusade Psalm, Mrs. Lathrap following in earnest prayer.

Mrs. Carse voiced the universal regret of all present for the enforced absence of Miss Willard and Mother Thompson, quoting hopeful words from a letter recently received from Miss Willard, stating that it was her firm hope to be present as usual during the coming National Convention. Mrs. Carse introduced Mrs. Charles Henrotin as "the woman that has made possible these Women's Congresses." Mrs. Henrotin spoke briefly, saying, in reference to the W. C. T. U., "not only has this association done much for the cause for which it was inaugurated, but it is also the prime mover in the advancement of the age, teaching, as it has done, the tremendous power of organized effort in creating public sentiment."

Mrs. Woodbridge was the bearer of the "welcome to and from the nations." "I wish it were not necessary," she said, "that the secretary of the organization should bring to you this welcome, but that our beloved president to whom God gave the first thought of this organization, might speak to you her own words of welcome." The speaker also referred to the unavoidable absence of Mother Thompson, whose message was in these words: "The mother's blessing is reached out in the name of our Lord, unto one and all." In closing her warm words of welcome to workers from the wide world, Mrs. Woodbridge said: "As we stand thus united, with one hand on the positive pole of God's power and the other upon the negative pole of man's sin and sorrow, not only will our own hearts be blessed and revivified, but the liquor traffic shall be shattered to atoms."

Mrs. Stevens spoke for the United States W. C. T. U. She referred again to the absence of Miss Willard, making a motion that a cablegram, expressive of the deep regret of the assembled audience, be sent to Miss Willard and Lady Henry Somerset, conveying, also, "our tender love and great appreciation of all they have been and are to us." The motion was carried by a unanimous rising vote and the Chautauqua salute.

Mrs. Laura Ormiston Chant, representing Great Britain's W. C. T. U., was enthusiastically received. Her English greeting was broad and hopeful, looking forward to the time when there shall be an international union all the world over, bound by the white ribbon—when womanhood shall be lifted up into that perfection which is bound to come, because God's will is going to be done on the earth.

Miss Pierce, organizer of the British Women's Temperance Association, brought the word that the organization she represented is now federated to the W. W. C. T. U.

Miss Ruth Shaffner brought greeting from far-off China, where the work began so recently as 1890, there now being eight unions with a membership of forty. She presented very forcibly the need of help for the four hundred and fifty million of people, half of whom are women, "and as the mothers are to-day, so is the nation to-morrow, it is vital we take some step and take it early to educate the growing nation of to-day. I pray that you will give some attention to this outlying post; lend it your prayers, your interest and your material aid."

Mrs. Woodbridge read Miss Willard's beautiful paper, "The Woman's Cause is Man's." It was received with profound interest and will be published in THE UNION SIGNAL.

Mrs. Louise S. Rounds, of Illinois, spoke in her own strong fashion upon the topic, "Three Reasons," stating three propositions as the foundation for her stand upon the temperance question. First. The morals of the people are the foundation of their prosperity; Second. The laws of the people are the expression of their morals; Third The strength of a government is measured by the execution of its laws. Mrs. Rounds gave some ringing arguments in favor of true fanaticism. "It needs courage, certainly, that shall bring you so far to the front in all life's great moral battles, that while you may be a fanatic, you'll most certainly be a target for the saloon element. I would not feel that I was doing justice to the cause I love, to my state, to the great interests of God and Home and Native Land if I did not put myself willingly in the forefront of every battle and be a target for the enemy's arrows."

Susan B. Anthony was called from the audience and received with applause. She spoke a few strong words for the cause so dear to her soul. "What is the reason we have not won before this?" she said; "simply because the worthy governments see under every bonnet some one who does not vote. At a meeting I attended in Leavenworth, where St. John spoke, a paper said 'but if St. John would just note the character of his audience he would see that nine out of ten of them wore bonnets and that would settle the matter.' The rank and file, nine out of ten of the people who want to bring about the day of reform, wear bonnets, and that means they are not voters, and not until a bonnet means a vote can you get ahead."

Mrs. Mary H. Hunt addressed the meeting briefly but tellingly, on the "To-day and To-morrow of the Temperance Reform." She spoke in cheering terms of the progress made in securing to the children of the land scientific temperance instruction, there being forty states and territories where the educational law is more or less enforced.

At the noon-tide hour of prayer, Mrs. Todd, of New Brunswick, voiced the petition of the Congress.

A delegation from the temperance workers in the Catholic church was presented, and in eloquent words from Mrs. Barry-Lake and Mr. Tracy, gave evidence that their feet keep step with ours in the forward march.

One of the old Crusaders, Mrs. Laura Haviland, of Englewood, Ill., eighty-four years of age, was presented, and in clear, steady tones, addressed her reverent listeners as follows: "My heart is too full for expression. I want to say that I feel that my prayers of more than sixty years long, to-day are being answered. Certainly, we are coming on! In uplifting humanity we uplift our own souls to a higher plane. With no north and no south, no east and no west, no ocean between nations, we come here to work heart to heart in putting down this terrible wave of intemperance which has swept over our land to-day. And in all this, when I see younger faces coming forward to the work it makes me feel more like eighteen than eighty-four."

Mrs. Laura Ormiston Chant made the closing address of the morning, which we enjoyed so much that we forgot to take notes. Her text, repeated again and again in earnest, eloquent voice was, "The strength of a chain is in its weakest part."

The devotional exercises of the afternoon session were led by Mrs. S. M. I. Henry, so long and so closely identified with the National W. C. T. U. It was a great pleasure to the large audience to welcome Mrs. Henry to a white-ribbon platform, for her prolonged sickness has kept her from all public work for nearly two years.

Mrs. Carse submitted a petition to be presented to Mayor Harrison from the W. W. C. T. U. for the enforcement of the law to close saloons on Sunday.

Mrs. Margaret Parker, of Scotland, began her brief and pithy remarks by the cheering statement that "every public house and every saloon is closed in Scotland on Sunday. It was in Scotland that the B. W. T. A. was established, and we owe everything in the old country to the inspiration that we have in America. To-day we have fifty thousand of the very best women in our land working in this best cause. We long for the day when the voice of man and the voice of woman shall together give expression to the voice of God at the ballot box."

Mrs. Woodbridge presented for Mrs. E. B. Ingalls, superintendent of department of narcotics, a large bound book filled with signatures to a petition that women paying full fare on palace cars may not be subjected day and night to the poisonous fumes of tobacco, said petition to be presented to Pullman and Webb, praying them to abolish the smoking department on the palace car. The petitioners represent every state and territory in the nation.

Mrs. A. V. Hutchins, president of the Chicago West Side union, read a forcible paper on "A Free Cure for Inebriety," which was described recently in these columns. Mrs. Hutchins' paper will be published later.

Miss Mary Yates, of London, secretary of the vegetarian society of England, made an eloquent plea for pure diet as one of the great factors in the solution of the drink problem, since natural foods nourish without stimulation, and quiet, if not altogether overcome, abnormal cravings.

Dr. Bessie V. Cushman, superintendent of the Bethesda mission, one of the many charities supported by the Chicago Central W. C. T. U., read an able paper on, "Chicago W. C. T. Unions," descriptive of the various active philanthropies carried on in the great metropolis under the auspices of the white-ribboners. Among these are the free kindergarten, homes of refuge for wandering girls, Gospel missions and police matron work. Of this latter the doctor said, "Under the old régime the police court was a door opening down, but never up, for girls and women. The order is reversed now." Our readers will enjoy Dr. Cushman's paper in a subsequent number.

An earnest sister from Germany, Frau Anna Simson, spoke of the need of temperance work in her home land, saying, "When I return to my country I shall try to work in your way."

Mrs. Helen M. Barker's paper on the "World's Fair Work for Temperance," was the eloquent utterance of a brave, fair-minded soul, capable of seeing the good as well as the ill, and glad to give praise where praise is due. "Nothing built on earth by man was ever perfect, and to thousands of temperance workers there has come keen disappointment and sorrow, that in this great Exhibition of the best of every nation, so large place must be given to those poisons that to-day are the world's greatest curse, and yet we all sse that as long as wine and beer and other liquors are regarded as important articles of commerce, they could not well be excluded from the exhibition as exhibits, but we had the right to hope that they would not be sold upon the grounds." Mrs. Barker dwelt upon the danger thus caused to young men who would never enter a saloon who would meet temptation in so fair a guise during hours of pleasure; and the danger to young women acting as waiters where liquor was hourly served, and continued, "The exhibit of the National and World's W. C. T. U., in the Woman's Building, is preaching numerous sermons for sobriety, and the foreigners are learning that it is not only possible, but better, to live without liquor—that this is a Christian nation, and that we have a Christian Sabbath. There is one white spot in the White City where no smell of the poison will greet you, and that is the café in the Woman's Building, controlled by the Board of Lady Managers; another illustration of the purifying and ennobling influence of women, and of the great and growing need of woman's influence in municipal and state government."

Mrs. Carse read a communication from Edward I. Galvin, president of the Hyde Park Protective Association, expressing that gentleman's cordial thanks to the W. C. T. U. for their interest in and sympathy with the association in their endeavor to protect the temperance district from the invasions of liquor sellers.

Miss Belle Kearney, of Mississippi, an organizer for the Y. W. C. T. U., made a bright, spirited speech, embodying therein a list of the many "irons" the Y's are keeping hot in the fire of zeal for the cause, which would be sadly crippled without them.

Mrs. Judge Foster, of Montreal, Canada, spoke at length upon the work "over the border," emphasizing especially the fact of unity in the Canadian work, i, e., unity with other bands not bearing the mystic title, W. C. T. U. Our Canadian sisters also rejoice in scientific temperance instruction under a rigidly enforced law.

Mrs. Dr. Todd, of St. Stevens, New Brunswick, vice-president of the Dominion W. C. T. U., gave greeting in a few words, and a hearty "God bless you."

Mrs. E. Cranmer, president of South Dakota W. C. T. U., said: "South Dakota is grandly keeping step with the great army. We need, however, not only prohibition by law, but prohibition by politics and prohibition by woman's ballot. Let us keep on remembering that God's errands never fail."

Mrs. Mary H. Hunt then announced a great victory for Connecticut—"the children of Connecticut will henceforth get a temperance education," she said.

The last speech of the afternoon was delivered by Gen. J. B. Weaver, who was received with tumultuous applause. He spoke stirringly on the work of the W. C. T. U., paying high tribute to its leader. In regard to the need of coöperation among the different associations for reform, the general said: "The moral forces of this country ought to be together. It occurs to me that the organized temperance political force of this country and that political force which is fighting the battle of the Lord in other fields and which has for its motto right and justice to each and all—these two forces should come together. Let us come together upon such a humanitarian platform with so much of Christ, good sense and moral force in it, that the world, the flesh and the devil shall not be able to withstand it!"

The evening session was favored with a larger audience than any of the previous meetings, and was opened by prayer by Miss Ruth Shaffner, followed by Mrs. Amanda Smith, who sang one of Miss Willard's favorite hymns, "There's a Wideness in God's Mercy." One selection did not satisfy her delighted listeners, and she sang again "The Lord will Provide," emphasizing the beautiful spirit of trust embodied in the hymn by the glowing joy of her own earnest face and her inimitable gestures of hand and arm.

Mrs. Woodbridge then introduced Mrs. Mary T. Lathrap, who held the audience in close attention in spite of weariness and the oppressive heat of the evening, while she read her masterly address upon "What Hinders Victory?" Among the hindrances she declared in ringing utterances against empty theories—"stardust," she scornfully called them—empty resolutions, uttered when feeling was at the floodtide and not crystallized later by deliberate action, sentiment without any core of resolve for work, the failure of the church to stand squarely upon these vital questions, and even the failure of the W. C. T. U. itself, when convention heats are over, to follow up entering wedges with blow upon blow given in the name of God and Home and Native Land. "What hinders the victory? It is lack of conscience!"

George W. Bain followed with a hearty God-speed, giving the young women warm encouragement on their way, and uttering a large prophecy for the womanhood of the future.

Mrs. Hoffman's address on the "Development of Women Through the W. C. T. U." gave an outline of the growth of the organization with the education brought to it by its own efforts to supply the crying needs of the work. To-day the American women in the temperance army are authors, lecturers, organizers, secretaries, financiers—driven to it by the very force of circumstances. The violence of the storm causing Mrs. Hoffman's voice to become inaudible, she sat down while the audience sang "Coronation," led by the colored evangelist, Amanda Smith. Mrs. Hoffman then resumed her stirring speech to frequent applause, which changed to laughter at Mrs. Woodbridge's apt remark that our friends must now believe in the perseverance of the saints!

Miss Lucia Kimball spoke eloquently for "The Child Factor in the Temperance Reform," and Mrs. Frances Leiter, at the head of the National department of physical education, touched "Rock Bottom" in her brief, impressive exposition. The addresses of the evening were closed by Miss Clara Parrish, National Y organizer, who was brightly introduced as "a whole parish in herself." Only the earnest power of the young speaker in her attractive setting forth of the young woman's (and consequently the young man's) work could have kept the audience in its seats at the late hour and in face of an after storm.

The doxology was sung and the World's Woman's Christian Temperance Union day at the World's Congresses was over.

THE WHISKY TRUST COLLAPSE.

In view of the general history of stock companies we must look further than to its "heavily-watered stock" for the cause of the Whisky Trust collapse. During the last few months of its existence this giant monopoly has been a house divided against itself, and therefore doomed to destruction. From the time when internal dissension began to mar the harmony of its manipulations, the failure of the Whisky Trust was a foregone conclusion.

This powerful combination, known as the Distillery and Cattle Feeding Company, had absorbed some eighty-three different distilleries. It was incorporated with a capital stock of $35,000,000. It controlled ninety-five per cent of the entire production of spirits in the United States. It sold its goods through distributing agencies, the distributor receiving at time of purchase a rebate voucher for seven cents on the gallon, payable in six months, providing the purchaser obtained his supply exclusively from the Trust.

The buildings and machinery of the distilleries became the property of the company, the "fancy prices" paid for them being represented by certificates, necessarily sold by the holders at great discount. In most cases the ground upon which the plant stood was leased to the Trust by the owners thereof.

For a time all went well. Then arose a cloud in the shape of a clique. In the formation of this clique four of the largest manufacturing firms (representing five distilleries) were not consulted. However, it is said, "they stood the cold shoulder without much kicking as long as the dividends came regularly and the rental was paid under the leases, but when both dividends and rental stopped a merry war was inaugurated."

In January last it came to light that, notwithstanding the appearance of prosperity, the company was on the verge of bankruptcy, and that increase in dividends had been made solely for the purpose of booming the stock. The embarrassment was due to various causes. In the first place the management, relying upon an increase of the internal revenue tax, had for months continued to manufacture three times the usual quantity of high wines and spirits in order to profit largely by the hoped-for law.

It transpired, however, that the Trust had overestimated its power in Congress. The voice of the people had been heard in no uncertain tones concerning trusts, and the bold movements of the whisky monopoly were such as to sound an alarm throughout the nation, and none of its friends in Congress dared push the desired legislation.

Although the government does for the liquor interest what it does not do for any other industry, viz., bears the expense of storing and protecting its production until such time as it is sold, be it months or years—the immense over-production with which the company was burdened proved a serious drain upon its treasury, confronted as it was by competition from new distilleries. Then when we consider the money spent in the attempt to push their bill in Congress, together with the enormous sums employed during the past two years in defeating temperance legislation in different states (in Nebraska alone it cost the liquor men several hundred thousand dollars), we do not wonder that the great Whisky Trust found itself crippled, unable to meet current expenses and compelled to borrow.

At this juncture it was decided to pay no more dividends until all indebtedness had been cancelled. An attempt was made to raise money by the issue of $8,000,000 bonds (said by the "outside" to be one hundred per cent in excess of the actual value of the property owned by the Trust), but the success of this scheme was nipped in the bud by the quo warranto proceedings brought against the company by the Attorney-General. This suit, doubtless the result of legislative inquiry, will, if successful, nullify the charter of the Distilling and Cattle Feeding Co., on the ground of illegal operations. Meanwhile no bonds are marketable while the suit is pending. Right at this critical point in its career the blow was struck, which must result in the entire collapse of the mammoth bubble. The five distilleries before mentioned, said to be the backbone of the whole concern, withdrew from the Trust, the ostensible reason being non-payment of rentals.

It is a suggestive commentary on trusts in general and on the Whisky Trust in particular that every movement of "insiders" is regarded with intense suspicion by outside stockholders. Even the withdrawal of these five Peoria distilleries is, they say, likely to prove a stock-jobbing scheme, a trick to "bear" the market.

Be that as it may the facts that continue to be disclosed regarding the operations of the Trust are anything but favorable to the interests of organized monopolies. The result of litigation must be to throw still stronger light upon the true inwardness of the whisky power, and incidentally, of all trusts and combines.

Prohibitionists hail with joy any event which concentrates public attention upon the liquor traffic. The more it is held up to public view the more does it fall into disrepute even among its friends. The disclosure of the true spirit and aim of the Whisky Trust hastens the day when this nation shall rise up in righteous judgment not only against every combination which has for its object the coöperation of a few to the disadvantage of the many, but against the entire liquor traffic also, which is the biggest "combination" as well as the biggest abomination on the face of the earth.

THE North-China Daily News, published at Shanghai, is authority for the statement that the Japanese government sent the Yokohama Temperance Union a presentation wine cup in recognition of the union's services at the time of the great earthquake last year. "To the horrified union," says this Chinese paper, "the gift was so incongruous that it was sent back to the Kencho (government). The Kencho, failing to comprehend the straight tenets of teetotalism, has sent it back again." We predict that before another decade the Japanese government as well as every other will realize that in respect to alcoholic beverages "temperance" must mean total abstinence, if it means anything.

ANOTHER new organization is proposed, which seems to us to be getting at the real core of the temperance reform, and that is a "Pastors' Prohibition League." This is to be composed of all pastors of Christian churches who will sign the following pledge:

"I hereby promise, with the help of God,

"1. To preach, pray and vote for the absolute prohibition of the traffic in alcoholic drinks.

"2. To preach every three months a special sermon on the duty of Christians in regard to the drink traffic, with special reference to political activity.

"3. To arrange and hold, as a regular church service, a monthly temperance or prohibition meeting."

These pledges, when signed, should be returned to 10 East Fourteenth street, New York City, the office of the Anti-Nuisance League, which generously proposes its rooms as headquarters for this purpose. It is expected that twenty thousand ministers will enter into this movement as soon as invited, and W. C. T. U. members are urged to extend the invitation, with the pledge, to their pastors. This new league is for the concentration of the great force of the Christian pulpit upon the drink traffic, and as such will form a more uncompromising and intelligent foe to strong drink than any previously inaugurated movement. We wish it success.

NORTH DAKOTA LEGISLATIVE WORK.

Partly owing to a misunderstanding, and partly through an oversight, the work done in our state during the session of our last legislature against resubmission and for suffrage has not been reported. I can assure the dear readers of THE UNION SIGNAL that we are neither dead nor sleeping, but that we have a force of real live active workers of which any state may well be proud.

In January our state superintendent of franchise, Mrs. M. B. Goodrich, sent requests to all the unions to write their representatives asking them to vote and use their influence for the suffrage bill which would be introduced. She also sent suffrage literature to the leading members of both houses. Nearly at the same time there went out from headquarters to all the unions a call for a day of prayer that our prohibitory law might be spared to us. Many yards of petitions against resubmission were sent to the legislature, and Casselton union sent out over the state forty thousand pages of literature prepared by Rev. B. S. Taylor, formerly of North Dakota, now of Iowa. It was a scathing reply to a letter published in the Fargo Argus by Bishop Shanley (Catholic) of North Dakota who endeavored to bring our prohibitory law into disrepute and contempt, calling it a flat failure.

Our faithful young president, Miss Adelaide Kinnear, being nearly prostrated from overwork, was not able to go to Bismarck and the state W. C. T. U. sent our evangelist, Miss Elizabeth Preston, and to her untiring energy and faithful devotion to our cause do we owe heartfelt gratitude. She was present at every session during the last three weeks of the legislature, giving her entire time and strength to the work for suffrage and against resubmission, nearly all the time previous to this being consumed in the election of United States senator.

I was privileged, if a privilege it may be called, to be present during the last three days, and blush for shame at the disgraceful proceedings of men sent there to represent noble but defenseless women who have no voice in the making of laws to which they are subject. Resubmission was carried in the house, but lost in the senate. A suffrage bill was prepared by noble champions of our cause, and presented to both houses. It passed the senate, much to our surprise and joy, and came up in the house in the afternoon of the last day.

The courtesy of the house was extended to Miss Preston, and in the ten minutes granted her she made strong and telling arguments in favor of suffrage, and was heartily applauded. It has been said by one of our prominent representatives, and also by some of the leading papers of the state that it was by far the best speech made during the entire session of the legislature. The senate adjourned and came into the house, and the lobbies were filled with spectators. After much discussion the bill passed by a vote of thirty-three to twenty-two.

A recess was then taken, and the opposition got in their work. Members who had voted for the bill and who had important measures pending were given to understand that if they did not vote to recall the suffrage bill a combination would be made against them and their measures defeated. To the members who came from districts largely populated by foreigners the argument was used that if the measure carried at the next election and the women were given the right of suffrage in a few years only Norwegians could be sent to the legislature. This had the desired effect with some. A system of "trading," known only to the modern law-makers, also had its force. After recess a vote was taken to recall the bill. Those who did not vote the first time voted with the opposition and others changed their vote, and it was carried.

The senate refused to return the bill, thus for a second time indorsing woman suffrage. After the bill had been enrolled and signed by the president of the senate and head clerk, it was taken down to the speaker of the house who refused to sign it although the constitution provides he shall sign all bills passed. Then came a long and bitter fight between the house and the senate. Some of the senators favorable to woman suffrage were anxious for certain bills affecting their constituency to be passed, and as the hour of adjournment was drawing perilously near they weakened and voted to send the bill back to the house, and here its fate was sealed. A motion was made to expunge the records, which was done. Owing to the vacillating conduct of the house hours of precious time were wasted and many important bills were not passed.

The house had an unquestionable right to vote down the bill but the fact that it was passed by a vote of thirty-three to twenty-two would indicate that the sentiment of the majority was in favor of the measure. At almost the last moment a frantic effort was made to recall the resubmission bill but it was lost.

We are deeply grateful that our prohibitory law is safe for at least five years more, and we are greatly encouraged and gratified to note the rapid stride we have made in the cause of woman suffrage. We feel that our defeat, though unjust and disgraceful, means victory in the future, and we are preparing to take up and push this department of our work until victory shall perch upon our banner and the women of North Dakota shall have a voice in making the laws which govern them, and shall send to our legislature such men and women as will be an honor instead of a disgrace to our state.

MRS. D. W. SHINN,
Cor. Sec. N. D. W. C. T. U., Casselton.

OHIO NOTES.

Ohio union is deeply interested in the National Temperance Hospital, and is raising the money to furnish a room in that noble institution.

The mercy department in Ohio is receiving well-deserved attention. Since our last letter Mrs. Lydia A. Irons, National organizer for the department, has given a week to that work in Greene county, visiting the unions, holding mothers' and children's meetings in the afternoons and mass-meetings in the evenings, setting children as well as parents to thinking as never before. In Xenia, through the kindness of the superintendent of the public schools, she was permitted to visit the different grades and addressed seventeen schools, giving one entire day to the work, the superintendent and teachers doing all they could to add to the success of the work. A day was given to these schools. In the evening a mass-meeting was held in one of the colored churches with marked success. One day was spent at the Soldiers' and Sailors' Orphans' Home. Gen. Young, the superintendent of the Home, received the ladies kindly and entertained them royally as his guests. There are nine hundred children in this institution. One half assembled in the chapel in the morning to hear Mrs. Irons, and one half in the afternoon. The superintendent and teachers manifested great interest in the occasion, and the children were delighted.

A most profitable occasion was the annual convention of the twentieth district, held at Yellow Springs. The consecration hour, from eleven until twelve o'clock, was remarkable—like an old Crusade meeting, the presence of the Holy Spirit was so manifest. Excellent papers were read; Mrs. Henrietta L. Monroe, our state president, gave a fine address on Thursday afternoon, and Dr. C. L. Work, of Dayton, gave a stirring address on equal citizenship in the evening. The music was a beautiful feature.

The annual convention of the twelfth district, held at Ironton, has been described by a visitor who attended it, as one of the most uplifting, spiritual conventions she was ever privileged to attend. The church was beautifully decorated with apple blossoms, roses, lilies, geraniums and palms. The ministers were unusually kind and attentive, and the hospitality beyond all praise. The press was as cordial and kind as could be desired. The president had an excellent address. The consecration service and noontide prayer were blessed seasons of divine presence and strength. The papers read were all fine. The state president was in attendance, and was ever ready with timely words of advice and suggestions which were very helpful. The crowning feature of this notable convention was the address of the state president, Mrs. Monroe, which was admirable in every particular.

The annual convention of the seventeenth district held at Lima recently was a great success. The reporter writes she never saw such enthusiasm at any convention. Seven hundred persons were present and three or four hundred more were turned away, not being able to gain admission. Each of the two unions of the city were reinforced by a number of new members, the Boys' Brigade received many additions, and the best people of Lima were interested as never before. The program was very complete and attractive and was carried out to the letter.

The annual convention of the twenty-third district was held at Washington Court House, the historic town where the saloons were first closed in the Crusade. The meeting was one of much interest and business was promptly dispatched. An unusually interesting and profitable feature was the parliamentary drills conducted by our state parliamentarian, Mrs. Lillian Cole Bethel, of Columbus, which kept every one alert throughout the meeting.

Mrs. Agnes Snyder, the district president, gave the address of the first evening and was listened to with rapt attention. A fine paper on kindergarten work and one on the development of W. C. T. U. work, by Mrs. Abigail Hadley, of Clarksville, delighted their hearers. The presence of the state treasurer, Mrs. Purdum, and of the state corresponding secretary, Mrs. Clevenger, insured the attention of the convention to all special state interests. Mrs. Clara C. Hoffman, of Missouri, gave the address of the second evening in her usual forcible manner.

The Washington county annual convention held at Belpre, opened with a parlor meeting the first evening, which proved a very pleasant feature. A helpful annual address by the president interested all present. The state and district presidents and the ministers added much to the profit of the meeting. Mrs. Monroe, state president, gave an impressive Bible reading closing with the noon-tide prayer. The reports of superintendents showed good work done in several departments. Dinner served at the church was highly appreciated, as the day was rainy. The address of the state president in the evening was inspiring indeed.

A pleasant joint convention of Guernsey county and the eighth district was held at Cambridge on May 2 and 3. A successful Demorest medal contest occupied the first evening. The district president, Mrs. Paden, gave her address which was full of suggestions and inspiration for future work. Mrs. L. C. Bethel was present, and instructed and entertained by her parliamentary drills. On Wednesday evening the address was given by Mrs. Clara C. Hoffman, of Missouri.

Huron county union held its annual meeting in Collins. The beautiful decorations and good music awakened an interest from the moment the meeting opened, and the morning prayer service led by Rev. Mrs. Danforth, prepared all hearts for the day's work. Miss Mary Stewart, of Norwalk, read a spicy paper assuming to set forth the reasons for opposing woman's suffrage. It was a clever bit of satire and was enjoyed by all present. The address of welcome, the response and the paper by Mrs. Buck are reported as deserving more than passing mention because of unusual merit. An impressive memorial service for promoted comrades was held. The address of the evening by Rev. Mrs. Danforth was greatly enjoyed.

The state convention will be held in Marietta the last week in August.

The fourteenth district convention, held at North Baltimore, May 4 and 5, was complete in every arrangement. Mrs. Townsend, the president, had rolls of the Messenger, state minutes and W. T. P. A. literature at hand. Her annual address was very fine. The ministers were very helpful and acknowledged inspiration received. Mrs. Monroe, state president, was present. Her evening address was uplifting, presenting our departments of work most clearly with Christ in the midst.

The quarterly convention of the Medina county W. C. T. U. met in Seville, May 10. Mrs. Hull, of Cleveland, and Rev. Mrs. Danforth, of Peru, added much to the interest of the meeting. Miss Lampman, of Medina, read an excellent paper on "The influence of a true woman." Mrs. Johnson, of Medina, and Mrs. Reynolds, of LeRoy, each presented papers full of witty, sharp truths regarding the inequality of women in law and politics. One of the good men had the courage to oppose the position taken by the women, quoting Scripture, etc. This brought Mrs. Danforth to her feet and the appeal she made for the redress of the wrongs that rest upon the home touched every heart. Our cause has received a new impetus.

PERSONAL.

Mrs. Monroe, our state president, attended the State Woman's Suffrage Convention at Delaware, May 9–11. This convention was the guest of the Delaware W. C. T. U.

Mrs. S. M. Perkins has been on the wing as usual. She gave eight lectures in New Jersey and three in Pennsylvania, this spring. She also held a woman's suffrage convention in Bryan, O., May 16. As Mrs. Perkins is also editor of The True Republic she certainly lets no time go to waste.

Mrs. Dora Webb, state superintendent of the purity department, will represent Ohio W. C. T. U. at the Social Purity Congress to be held in connection with the World's Fair.

Mrs. Bethel, of Columbus, our state parliamentarian, made a tour of the unions of Clinton county the first week in May, lecturing and giving parliamentary drills, closing with the county convention at New Burlington.

Mrs. R. J. Trego, National evangelist, is holding fine meetings in Iowa.

Mrs. M. M. Farnsworth, president of Defiance county, is pushing the work with her usual activity, though her health has been very poor.

Mrs. E. J. Gray, of Medina, has been appointed a member of the advisory council of the woman's branch of the World's Congress Auxiliary for Ohio Congregational churches.

Absolutely Pure

A cream of tartar baking powder. Highest of all in leavening strength.—Latest United States Government Food Report.

Royal Baking Powder Co.,
106 Wall St., N. Y.

27 Per Cent. Stronger.

The amusing advertisement of a rival Baking Powder, claiming that "it is 27 per cent. stronger than any other," must refer to its smell (as it is a well known ammonia powder).

Dr. Price's Cream Baking Powder

Is a pure cream of tartar powder. brought to the highest degree of strength and perfection.

Truly the ideal Baking Powder.

Its superiority over every other can be clearly shown by any fairly conducted competitive test, whether made in the laboratory or kitchen.

WESTERN WASHINGTON.

KING COUNTY CONVENTION.

The following cigarette law, which was passed by our last legislature, is copied from our new state paper, Puget Sound White Ribbon:

SECTION 1. That it shall be unlawful for any person or persons whatever, to manufacture, buy, sell, give or furnish to any one cigarettes, cigarette paper or cigarette wrapper.

SEC. 2. That whoever manufactures, buys, sells, gives or furnishes to any person or persons cigarettes, cigarette paper or cigarette wrapper shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and upon conviction thereof shall be fined not more than $500 or imprisoned in jail not exceeding six months, or both, for each offence.

SEC. 3. This act shall be liberally construed to the end that its object shall be enforced.

SEC. 4. All laws or parts of laws in conflict with the provisions of this act are hereby repealed.

Representatives of the American Tobacco Trust maintain that the law does not prevent the sale of cigarettes in this state in original packages, and so there will be an effort made to evade it. Retailers will be urged to continue the sale. Thus we see that there is no intention on the part of tobacco dealers to obey the law. They are just as lawless as saloon-keepers and just as conscienceless in regard to the ruin of the boys.

King county held its fourth annual convention, May 3 and 4, at the Presbyterian church in Kent. There was not a full attendance owing to several causes, such as inclement weather and high railroad rates. Some of our members have already gone and others are preparing to go to the World's Fair. Those who were present declared themselves well pleased with the working and social features of the occasion. The first day was taken up with reports and routine work of the convention. Central union, Seattle, reports a membership of sixty and carries forward sixteen departments of W. C. T. U. work. They have circulated the following petitions: World's, police matrons and saloon limits. Parlor meetings have been very successful under their management and they expect to continue them. They hold religious services at the almshouse every Sabbath and a number now walk in the light, who were blind hitherto to spiritual things. The faithful superintendent of flower mission sends flowers with Scripture texts attached, once a month to the city hospitals where they are gratefully received. When flowers are unobtainable she sends literature. Mothers' meetings are held monthly.

Kent union reports weekly meetings; keeps a column filled with temperance literature in the local paper; helps the poor; distributes quantities of literature and keeps open a free reading room. They expect to build a house of their own for their free reading room this summer. They have socials and entertainments to help defray expenses. A pleasant social feature is their birthday parties. All the birthdays of members that fall in the same month are celebrated together by each member bringing some dish of her own preparing and having a social tea, seasoned with wit and good feeling. Gifts are not looked on with favor although a few have been given. The object is a closer drawing of the "tie that binds." Auburn reported $21.30 spent in work during the year and a goodly amount of literature distributed among lumbermen. As their report was verbal, some of the facts are lost sight of.

DesMoines and Enumclaw are our twin unions, one year old, organized by Mary Bynon Reese, both strong and healthy. Des Moines has twenty-six active members. They have held a series of Demorest medal contests and are now preparing for their sixth. A great deal of interest has been manifested in the contest work. They have had no saloon in their town for over two years. They hold Sabbath-school and services every Sabbath, prayer-meetings, Sunday and Thursday evenings. Mrs. Reese offered a book to the member of the union giving the best recitation, which resulted in a book contest. This was held in the afternoon, followed by a social tea and a lecture by Mrs. Reese in the evening after which the ladies repeated their recitations that the gentlemen might enjoy them as they were not present in the afternoon.

Enumclaw union reports nine active members and one honorary. They have had one lecture, held socials to raise funds, and responded to all calls made on their treasury, and have distributed some literature. The work of this union devolves largely upon an earnest, Boston woman, whose taste and education make transplanting to western soil a great trial. She is trying to do what she can for temperance and Christianity, and she has gathered a few loyal souls about her. May heaven bless their efforts.

Fremont has seventeen active members and four honorary. They entertained the quarterly county convention last year; have furnished a room in the White Shield Home and supported a public water faucet in Fremont.

The Julia Ames union, of Seattle, has disbanded until fall. They have nine active members. The evening was devoted to speeches and song, the music all being taken from the "White Ribbon Vibrations." Mrs. Barrett led the devotional exercises, Rev. F. F. Whitcomb offered prayer and gave an address of welcome in behalf of the temperance people of Kent. Mrs. R. Miller gave an address of welcome in behalf of the W. C. T. U. Responses were made by Mrs. Rockwell, of Seattle, and Mrs. Lacy, of Auburn. The choir sang several choruses. The children did finely under the leadership of Mrs. Kate Berlin. Frances Willard's picture occupied a prominent place on the platform, decorated with an evergreen wreath. The children sang "Beautiful Flowers," and between the stanzas Mrs. Berlin played a march, the children marching in a circle and each placed a white flower in the evergreen wreath. Nellie Jones sang a solo, "Gather them in," all the children joining in the chorus.

The president's address was given respectful attention. Mrs. Miller gave a recitation; Mrs. Genie Alvord sang "Mother and Son," with much feeling. Mrs. I. T. Alvord sang "There's no Light in the Window." Miss Maude Filmore, of Des Moines, gave a recitation. Little Gertie Morkin read "The Bridal Wine Cup."

On Wednesday p. m., the school children came by invitation. They sang a few of their school songs and were addressed by Mrs. Barrett. Thursday morning Mrs. Barrett gave a sweet and touching memorial service in honor of our departed comrades, Mary Allen West, Jennie Casseday and Sister Tanner of Auburn. The speaker was personally acquainted with Miss West, and paid a high tribute to her worth and character.

The election of officers resulted as follows: president, Mrs. Etta Jones, Kent; vice-president, Mrs. M. C. Ewing, Kent; secretary, Mrs. Fannie Webster, Enumclaw; corresponding secretary, Mrs. Mary Wade, Kent; treasurer, Mrs. Eleanor Wilmot, Fremont.

We expect Mrs. Mary Clement Leavitt with us in June. Skagit county has been organized about a year and a half and say: "We were doing nicely until we had the Murphy meetings, that broke into our work very much." They have only eight members at Mt. Vernon and four or five honorary; have had seven lectures; an entertainment last summer netted $25 which was sent to the White Shield Home at Tacoma. They have distributed 300 copies of the Voice editorials, "The Unholy League" and 300 copies of "The Nation's Opportunity" and about the same number of leaflets from the Woman's Temperance Publishing Association. Mrs. M. McDowell, the county president, sent subscriptions to THE UNION SIGNAL and to the Voice. They hope much good will result from Mrs. Leavitt's visit.

Mason county has but one union. The president was sick for four months the first of the year, after that she took a trip presumably for her health. The members are women with families and most, if not all, have numerous home duties that leave little if any time or strength for outside work. They held a memorial service for Mary Allen West on a Sunday evening, and it was a great success, calling out a large audience and a good collection.

NEW YORK.

DOINGS IN THE EMPIRE STATE.

The W. C. T. U. at Ithaca, organized less than a year ago, now numbers nearly one hundred active members. They helped to elect a no-license mayor this spring, and mean to have a clean government, if possible. Dryden owes its no-license victory almost entirely to the efforts of the five unions in the villages of Dryden, Etna, McLean, Varna and Freeville.

A very helpful county convention was held at Groton, with a good attendance, and the interest manifested promised well for the future. Mrs. Ella A. Boole, first vice-president, conducted a school of methods and delivered the evening address.

Mrs. P. J. Adams, state evangelist and organizer, was present, and also Mrs. Nellie Hutchinson, organizer of L. T. L's. Dr. Helen Westfall, of Cayuga county, gave a talk on physical culture and dress reform.

Orange county W. C. T. U. met at Walden, and in addition to their goodly delegation twenty visitors from Ulster county were present. After devotional exercises came welcomes and responses. Mrs. Pope, of Cornwall, gave a paper on "Tobacco and its Captives." A paper on physical culture, by Mrs. Dr. Van Etten, of Port Jervis, was much appreciated. Miss Yates, of Maine, gave the address in the evening, and conducted a parliamentary drill. The pastors took an active part in the meetings, encouraging the workers. This county is as active as ever. Newburgh union secured the services of Col. Geo. W. Bain for two lectures. Pine Bush held a "Temperance Temple Tea," the object of which was to raise the sum of one hundred dollars, the amount pledged for the Temple at Chicago. Middletown W. C. T. U. secured the catering of a large and fashionable wedding in their city. The result was that the finances of the union were helped to such an extent as to purchase a new piano for the Loyal Temperance Legion.

Herkimer county convention was held at Ilion. The county president, Mrs. Delight R. Keller, opened the meeting. Roll call showed twenty-six officers and delegates present. Interesting exercises were given by the L. T. L., and were followed by a paper on juvenile work by Mrs. Richards. Mrs. Boole delivered the evening address and conducted a school of methods.

The white-ribboners of Schuyler county gathered in the M. E. Church at Havana. Scientific temperance instruction received a goodly share of attention. Townsend is the banner union, though the youngest. The pupils of the Union school entertained the convention with song and recitation, and some earnest workers from Chemung county were present. The county is glad to welcome to its ranks Mrs. Drake, the former president of Seneca county, who has recently come among them, her husband being the Methodist pastor at Watkins. Mrs. M. M. Allen, of Bellona, delivered a telling address.

Havana union mourns the loss of a little friend and comrade "little Belle Weed" who although only six years of age had wisdom far beyond her years, and had endeared herself to the union. She had a strong faith in the power of the white ribbon, always wearing it herself and frequently tying it on her father's coat, saying with a beautiful faith, "He'll be all right, mamma, I put a white ribbon on him." She attended the meetings regularly with her mother, who is almost heartbroken over the taking away of her only child.

Schenectady county met in Schenectady City, holding a two days' meeting. The attendance and the interest manifested, together with the excellent reports, proved this to be one of the most successful meetings ever held in the county. Discussions on Sabbath observance and social purity were held, followed by the question-box. A parliamentary drill was in charge of Miss Delevan. The afternoon was given to the children, opening with a discussion on L. T. L. work. One hundred children marched in under the leadership of Mrs. Gates, and after music and recitation they listened to an address by Mrs. Helen G. Rice, of Boston. In the evening Mrs. Rice delighted a large audience, speaking from the subject, "The Child in the Midst." A splendid set of resolutions were adopted before the close of the meeting.

Tioga county held its semi-annual convention at Flemingville. An unusual thing was the absence of both president and corresponding secretary, but it seemed to make each one feel a personal responsibility for the meeting, and the result was a most successful gathering. Mrs. E. A. Spring, of Waverly, filled the chair most creditably. Mrs. Rice was present, and throughout the convention was most helpful and instructive. Every union in the county was represented, and all expressed themselves as greatly helped.

Erie county met at East Buffalo and the convention was full of interest. An interesting paper on narcotics, by Mrs. Browne, county superintendent; a topical Bible reading, by Mrs. Dr. Purdy, of Buffalo; an address, by Mrs. Geo. W. Townsend, president of the "Woman's Educational and Industrial Union," of Buffalo; a paper on "The Property Rights of Women" by Mrs. Mary L. Rice, of Buffalo; another on "Rescue," by Mrs. Dr. Denton; and an address in the evening by Mrs. Hawthorne, all formed part of the excellent program of the first day. The second afternoon papers on scientific temperance and literature were read by Mrs. Ferrand and Miss Kate Kimball. Miss Adella Fay, director of physical training in the Buffalo public schools, gave a talk. So much was done during these days which cannot be reported!

The quarterly conference of the W. C. T. U., held at Cohoes, was one of the most successful conventions ever held in Albany county. The reports of unions showed that good work had been done. Papers were read by Mrs. I. D. Van Valkenburg, West Troy, and Mrs. Bessie Jones, of Albany. The report of the coffee house committee showed that much had been done to aid this enterprise, two hundred dollars having been raised, while larger sums were pledged by many present. Strong words of encouragement were given by many of the pastors present in reference to this work, and mention was made of the good effect of coffee houses in different parts of the state. The evening exercises were opened with music and an interesting paper on "The Y's and Their Work," by Mrs. W. S. Beers, of Albany, followed by an address on "The State and Liquor Traffic," by the Rev. A. Kennedy Duff, of Albany.

Your Wife's Watch

ought to be equal to yours; at least.

Her minutes cost her more than yours and bring her less. You see that at dinner time, at supper time, at breakfast time, and—well, all the time. Haven't you learned her needs? She needs a watch that she can risk anywhere; accurate, stylish and genuine—and not expensive: the new, quick-winding Waterbury. Handsome as a hundred dollar watch, though it costs only $15 down to $4.

It is cased in gold, filled, coin-silver, etc. It is stem-winding and setting, a jeweled movement. It may save a costlier one. Every jeweler keeps this watch in all styles. 42

In morning sickness, Burnham's Clam Bouillon is a specific that gives instant relief and tones the stomach for other foods. Take it first thing in the morning, hot or iced as preferred, dilute to suit taste; it soothes the stomach and drives off all feeling of nausea. A little fresh milk or butter renders it more palatable to some. Serve in cup and season to suit. It supplies the place of tea, coffee or cocoa at breakfast.

Niagara county workers are earnest. A new Y organized at Ransomville, with eight members, now numbers thirty, and a public meeting held recently shows us that they mean to accomplish something. The union at Lockport has been especially helpful during a revival season which has just closed. Nine of the churches united in these meetings and among the workers, white-ribboners were prominent. The regular meetings held each Tuesday are largely attended. Cottage prayer-meetings are held every Thursday evening.

Many hearts go out in loving sympathy to our sister, Mrs. Emily U. Burgess, president of Ulster county, who has been sorely afflicted in the loss of her husband. Mrs. Burgess is one of our most active workers, and has many warm friends not only in this but other states, who feel deeply for her in her bereavement.

PRESSING TOWARD THE MARK.

Many duties have prevented me from writing of that which gave me much pleasure and greatly advanced the W. C. T. U. in our state—the work of Miss Belle Kearney, of Mississippi, during the month of March. The weather much of the time was at variance with our plans, and several appointments suffered in consequence, but the record is altogether good.

Coming into the state from Louisiana, the first work was in the southern counties. At Whistler, a suburb of Mobile, a good union was organized, and at Brewton, in addition to a W. C. T. U. an enthusiastic L. T. L. This gives us a name and a place in a new county.

At Evergreen, a Y composed of ten young ladies was the result of one evening meeting. In Montgomery, the capital of the state, where several unions have failed, and the sentiment and prejudice against the W. C. T. U. seems an almost insurmountable barrier, a few brave women have again launched out, and through the courtesy of the secretary, Miss Kearney was given the Sunday afternoon meeting, usually "for men only," at the Y. M. C. A. rooms. It was the "open door," and accompanied by her kind hostess and a few friends, with all earnestness and kindness she gave her message of warning and appeal, and secured many signatures to the pledge, in this unusual, unthought of opportunity.

A fine audience at Prattville, and a splendid organization well repaid for the long stage ride of thirty miles over rough country roads with a tipsy driver. At Calera the state president joined Miss Kearney and was warmly welcomed and most hospitably entertained by the now corresponding secretary of that live union.

The local president, Mrs. Anna Varnon, was formerly of Selma and not unfamiliar with W. C. T. U. work, will make an efficient officer. At Gadsden a Y was organized that will keep warm the sympathies of the old and tried union there. I cannot give in detail a report of the meetings at Talladega, Anniston, Atalla, Tuskaloosa, Birmingham and Selma, though they were replete with interest and enthusiasm. A Methodist Episcopal minister in Birmingham, made this comment through the columns of the Advocate published in that city: "Rarely have we been so thrilled by human voice and ideas; the largest house in Birmingham will be taxed to seat future audiences."

At Greensboro, the seat of the splendid South Western University, one of the oldest and most famous institutions in the state, a college town with all that name implies, a work was begun which already exerts a wide influence in the community. Miss Kearney was invited to speak in Rev. John Keener's church, who, by the way, is a son of one of the most conservative bishops in the Methodist Episcopal Church South, and at the close of her meeting which was a great success, was asked by President Andrews to visit the University and address the students. I copy her own report of the meeting in a personal letter to me: "It was one of the most delightful experiences of my life; after a charming introduction by Dr. Andrews, who cordially endorsed the work of the W. C. T. U., I talked to the fine body of students before me, speaking of the evil effects of tobacco upon the human system, and the inconsistency of ministers and professed followers and imitators of Christ indulging in the tobacco habit. At the close of my talk Mr. Keener rose and said: 'Young men, I have used tobacco continuously for twenty years, and have risen superior to its effects in many respects. It may be a struggle to give it up, but you shall never say that I have stood in your way or been a stumbling block to you. In your presence I now deliberately sign a pledge never to use tobacco in any form again.' The wildest enthusiasm prevailed and when President Andrews said, 'I want my name to go next to his,' the students eagerly followed these splendid examples. It was indeed a red-letter day in many lives."

The Y organized there has now thirty active members and many honoraries. A reading room has been opened, Demorest contests held, and under the leadership of Miss Martha Young, a lady of rare literary ability and culture, success is assured. In the Normal College at Livingston, so long under the direction of our well-known educator and philanthropist, Miss Julia Tutwiler, a Y was also organized and well officered. This is just a glimpse of the month's work. Hundreds of pledges were secured. The meetings were well attended, the collections most gratifying, and new life and vigor was diffused throughout the state.

I would be glad to tell of other work in our borders: The increase of Demorest contests, notably one at Selma, where by charging a small admittance the treasury was enriched by $85; the new union at Bridgeport under the able presidency of Mrs. Maria R. Douglass, formerly editor of the Temperance Herald, organ of the Harlem W. C. T. U. of New York; the growth in influence and usefulness of the Mercy Home under the auspices of the Birmingham W. C. T. U., abundantly blessed as it has been; and the interest in the Temple and raising the $100 pledged some time ago. The amount has now reached $62.65 and numerous letters promise early payment of the remainder.

President Alabama W. C. T. U.

VIRGINIA.

AT WORK.

Of the work in our state, I think I can say safely that there is no flagging in the efforts of the departments this spring, but rather an increase of zeal and activity along many lines of our work. Mrs. I. W. Newton, of Staunton, was appointed state organizer by the last convention. Her husband is grand chief templar of Good Templars of the state of Virginia, and willingly aids and coöperates with her in what she has undertaken to do. Mrs. Newton is greatly beloved by the W. C. T. U. women of Virginia, and having been an active and efficient member of the executive committee for many years, is well known. She has been traveling over the state visiting cities and towns and country places and is doing good wherever she goes. At this time, May 22, she is in Ashland and will go to Richmond and its sister city, Manchester. She has organized several new unions and revived others, and is altogether, we think, in the place best suited for the work.

Richmond has three unions and two Y's, all active. The West End union is, perhaps, the most active, but not more earnest than the others. It is only a few years old, but is abreast of any in good works. The Richmond Y has suffered from providential afflictions. The president, Mrs. J. Tyler Jobson, lost her mother, and several of the young ladies lost a parent by death. It was a peculiar and sorrowful dispensation that seemed to afflict this bright and happy band of young women and girls. Their president, who has been very ill for several months, still keeps her bed, but has never stopped planning and praying for her young people, and it has been a touching sight all these past months, since last convention, to see so many young, earnest faces gathered day after day around this couch of suffering, reporting and planning as if there were no sickness or sorrow in the house. The patience and faith there exemplified by this sufferer, and the zeal and determination demonstrated by these young people, teaches a lesson that older people might do well to learn. This Y has just furnished a room in the "Retreat" for the sick, a most beautiful charity, and has other plans on foot.

When the Grand Army of the Republic met at Washington last fall, great numbers of visitors from the North and West came to Richmond. They were received kindly everywhere. The G. A. R. people were carried around by R. E. Lee encampment, and among other places of interest were taken to the Confederate Soldiers' Home. They saw there the remnant of "The Lost Cause" the suffering for which there is no relief, and also the great difference between the provision made for these poor fellows and what the government makes for union soldiers. Their hearts were touched and the desire to help resulted in Washington G. A. R. Post furnishing in the best style, with all conveniences and modern improvement, one ward in the hospital in the Soldiers' Home. We are all greatly pleased at this—being, we think, an indication that the "cruel war" is almost over. The furnishing of this ward has encouraged our ladies to attempt furnishing another. The thought originated with the West End Y. They are working for that end, and will in time succeed. I mention the Soldiers' Home and the beautiful, kindly deed that was done by our brethren north of us, because that home and the poor sufferers there have been our special work and any good that comes to it seems in answer to prayer and almost W. C. T. U. work.

Some of the members of Ashland union have undertaken to supply the great and pressing need for Bibles and hymn books in the penitentiary. It is a strange fact that many religious people have no sympathy with what we call "prison work" but that does not deter or discourage those who labor in this sorrowful field. That others will not is but the more reason why we should be more abundant in labors and self-denying efforts for the lost. The precious Saviour came to seek and save the lost. We follow in His footsteps though the way be rough and thorny; though the world does not approve nor the church applaud.

The prison matron, Mrs. Lavinia Page, who, on the recommendation of the W. C. T. U. was appointed last year, has remained in her place now for more than a year without relief from duty day or night; such self-denying devotion to duty merits the praise of all good people.

The Norfolk unions are always active. The president of the state, also president of Norfolk union, is wonderful in her ability to work and to make others work. To her in a great degree is due the increase of interest in temperance in Norfolk. Many bar-rooms were closed in Norfolk this year and there is hope that a purer atmosphere will in the future surround the cities by the sea. Virginia is too wide to go over it all at once so will postpone until the next time. We are all intensely interested in the "Sunday opening" and pray God to put in His hand and check the wicked who regard not His Sabbaths.

NEWS IN A NUTSHELL.

SOUTHERN California has entered upon the work of securing homes for homeless children, by appointing Mrs. Elizabeth R. Townsend, of Pasadena, as superintendent.

MRS. S. A. MORRISON, of Wayne, Michigan, National superintendent of almshouse work, has suffered a severe shock in the sudden illness and death of her husband from pneumonia, May 24. The sympathies of all white-ribboners go out to her.

MISS BELLE KEARNEY, of Flora, Miss., National Y organizer, will make her headquarters at Chicago during the summer. Unions in the vicinity and adjoining states desiring the services of an earnest and successful speaker should address her at The Temple, care Mrs. H. B. Kells.

THE fourth annual meeting of the Ohio Valley Prohibition Assembly will be held at Moundsville, Pa., July 14 to 24. Col. Geo. W. Bain and a dozen well-known speakers will be present. The music will be rendered by the popular Silver Lake Quartette and Mrs. Frances W. Graham, of Lockport, N. Y. A good time is inevitable.

BEATRICE, Neb., Chautauqua convened June 13th, the school of W. C. T. U. methods being conducted by Mrs. C. M. Woodward. For Wednesday, June 14, at 4 p. m. the program reads: "In memoriam, Mary Allen West. Paper by Mrs. Caroline A. Jones, of Lincoln, Neb., formerly president of Erie county, Pennsylvania W. C. T. U." Dean Wright is in charge of Bible work at this Chautauqua and the program throughout promises the best of class work with many rare attractions upon the platform under the care of Dr. W. L. Davidson, of Ohio.

MRS. M. M. LOVE thus describes her recent meetings and the union at Sardis, O.: "The mission consisted of three public lectures; one afternoon was given to the L. T. L. and one to a mothers' meeting. All these meetings were well attended. Skillful fingers had decorated the church with flags, flowers and mottoes, while the face of our beloved World's president beamed upon the audience from the platform. The young people's choir added cheer to the meetings as they sang "Some Glad Day," "Bands of Ribbon White Around the World," etc. This band of workers, who only number twelve active members, circulate literature, keep a bracket at the railroad station well supplied therewith, conduct a Demorest contest, and have taken up the departments of unfermented wine, of mercy and the juvenile. Their men are beginning to vote as they pray, the church uses unfermented wine, and their two L. T. L's number one hundred and sixty-eight members, including some of the saloon-keeper's children. They use the triple pledge, and are circulating German literature among that nationality. The secret of their success may be attributed to the fact that they procure all helpful literature from the W. T. P. A., especially THE UNION SIGNAL, the weekly readings, etc."

LOYAL TEMPERANCE LEGION.

A new and important "open door" is before our Loyal Temperance Legion graduates. The authorities having in charge the Youths' Congress, to be held in Chicago, July 17–19, have announced that each L. T. L. graduate is entitled, ex-officio, to membership in that Congress, and certificates will be sent to each. The Congress is one of the series held through the entire season in the Memorial Art Institute, and membership therein will be an honor worth receiving, one of which our young people may well be proud. The secretary of the Congress writes: "We have sought, generally, those young people who, between the ages of thirteen and twenty-one, stand highest in deportment and scholarship in the public and private schools. To these qualifications your Loyal Temperance Legion graduates add the other important one of having successfully pursued to completion a well-arranged course of special study calculated to greatly improve them as soon-to-be citizens and members of society. It would be difficult to afford too high a recognition of the meritorious work of these worthy young people, and we shall be only too glad to offer them the small meed in our power."

If possible, I hope our graduates will plan to be in Chicago at the time of the Congress. Let each one wear the L. T. L. badge, that of either grade, as is most convenient. The addresses have been sent to the secretary from the office of the Crusader. If any graduate fails to receive proper notification by July 1, word should be sent to Miss Alice M. Guernsey, The Temple, Chicago, Ill.

Special speakers, including an official representative sent by the Chinese government, will be present at the Congress, and it will be an occasion of great interest.

Yours for a rallying of our temperance army,

National Supt., L. T. L.

AN interested Connecticut reader writes encouragingly: "God bless you and give you courage and grace to follow out your grand editorial on 'Columbian Dollar Getting.' Who will call 'halt'? The W. C. T. U. in the name of God and humanity. I have taken the matter to God in prayer, and there is no question in my mind of the power of God to subdue these arrogant rum-empowered men, even though His will be carried out by weak, timid women. Remember only 'All things are possible with God.'"

Our Library Table.

PIECES TO SPEAK, by Emma Lee Benedict. Published by Lee & Shepard, 10 Milk St., Boston.

This little book contains about fifty bright pieces of poetry for recitation by children, including several suitable for use at temperance gatherings. A very desirable collection for ambitious little orators.

A rich adornment to Our Library Table is the bound volume of THE CENTURY from November, 1892, to April, 1893. Its table of contents presents such names as Mark Twain, Washington Gladden, Thomas Bailey Aldrich, Edward Eggleston, James Russell Lowell, Elizabeth Stuart Phelps, James Whitcomb Riley, Mary Mapes Dodge, etc., etc., etc. Every page of THE CENTURY as it comes to its subscribers month after month is a treasury of art, in authorship or delineation, and the bound volume for the half year is simply a multiplication of wealth.

The Century Co., New York City.

Companion papers in the ATLANTIC MONTHLY for June are "A National Vice," by H. C. Merwin, and "Ennui" by Agnes Repplier. Mr. Merwin's paper is a deprecation of the intense love which Americans have for doing things in companies, and their equally strong avoidance for themselves, and intolerance for others, of independence in action when accompanied with privacy. Ennui, which we are led to believe is often the result of the tendency which Mr. Merwin deprecates, is the subject of a clever essay by Miss Repplier, who, although she does not tell us how to escape from it permanently, enables us to flee from it for the length of time which it takes us to read the article itself.

Houghton, Mifflin & Co., Boston.

Five of Margaret Deland's charming short stories appear bound together in book form, published by Houghton, Mifflin & Co., Boston. These are, MR. TOMMY DORE, THE FACE ON THE WALL, ELIZABETH, AT WHOSE DOOR? and a FOURTH CLASS APPOINTMENT. Mrs. Deland's stories bear the happy merit of an individuality in the plot of each one, not trespassed upon by its fellows, but they all touch upon pathetic phases of life, and frequently receive criticism therefor. It is true, however, that into all earnest living there creeps clouds, and it is likewise true that in the world of fiction, tragedy and pathos make a fuller appeal to readers than comedy and humor. Margaret Deland's stories touch mainly upon the shadows, but there are delicate side lights of humor that finely relieve the gloom, and her character delineations give evidence of careful studies in real life.

TWENTY MINUTES LATE, by Pansy (Mrs. G. R. Alden). D. Lothrop Company, Boston.

A bright young heroine, who shows herself "a little woman" under difficulties; a kind-hearted car conductor and his family; a fair, delicate flower of an invalid child; a noble physician; these are a few of the characters that appear in this interesting story. The incidents are curiously grouped around the seeming accident of a lost train of cars. But how true it is that important events often hinge on "little things!" In Pansy's belief there are no happenings; even the slightest event is ordered, and what seems blind and contrariwise is sure to be controverted. So the seeming accident, by which a little group of young people lose their train home from a picnic and return by separate ways, is ingeniously made to form the starting-point for a series of events that affect the happiness of several families. Pansy has given us a beautiful story, marvelously natural, and with that peculiar sympathetic quality that makes Mrs. Alden such a world-wide favorite.

LITTLE PAUL AND THE FRISBIE SCHOOL. By Margaret Sidney. D. Lothrop Company, Boston.

The success of the Frisbie School in reclaiming street boys and civilizing them into self-respecting, manly young fellows, was demonstrated in the story of "Rob." The work goes on in the present volume, with some hard cases to be made over, and some reckless, cruel deeds done before they are redeemed. Little Paul, the boy-hero, is one of the most winsome of the many boy creations of the author, who seems to understand boy nature by intuition; a great heart in a frail body, he is a power for good among the coarse, rude, hard natures that surround him; his sway over them and the refining influence of gentle Mrs. Faraday are forces that the roughest boy finds it difficult to combat long. The unexpected marriage of Aunt Philena and the impetuous, choleric, but kind-hearted, Mr. Bronson gives another friend and ally to the school, and the boys find a most indulgent patron in Uncle Asa. It is a thoroughly good boy's book.

Imitation is the Sincerest Flattery. Why is Pearline the mark for every soap powder, or so-called washing compound, which is brought out? Everything is called "the same as" or "as good as" Pearline. None of them say "better"—they cannot. They should not say "as good as"—they are not. The simple fact that Pearline is so largely imitated would be enough to prove it the best.

And when a poor washing compound can do so much damage, do you want anything but the best? 369 JAMES PYLE, N. Y.

ARE YOU Sterilizing Baby's Milk?

MISS CLARA A. PENNISTON, Graduate of Mack Training School, St. Catherines, Ont., who has had the good fortune to nurse under some of the most eminent and painstaking physicians in New York City, writes: "I believe the sterilization of milk the greatest advance of the age. Babies are fortunate who are born since its introduction. My reasons for preferring sterilized milk to any other artificial food are that I have never yet seen a baby who did not thrive on it, and gain from eight to fourteen ounces a week of good solid flesh. Let me emphasize this, as babies fed on condensed milk for example gain, but are white and flabby, and have not any stamina when taken ill. I prefer, to any other, the Arnold Steam Sterilizer."

It is simple and inexpensive; anyone can use it. For sale by druggists. We will send you our Nursery Hand-Book for Mothers free, if you mention this paper.

WHY WRITE TO THE EDITOR?

And sign yourself "A constant reader" or "An old subscriber," if you want to know when Christopher Columbus discovered America, or the date of the great fire of London, or what is good for whooping cough.

It is true the editor is only too willing to oblige you, but why get your information at second hand? Is it not better to have it in your own head, ready for use at all times, and to realize in its full significance that "knowledge is power?"

All knowledge is useful, but well assorted, well digested knowledge will enable you to fill satisfactorily any position in life to which you may be called.

How is the best way to acquire this knowledge? Not by a stray question, asked at odd times, but by having by you, in convenient form, the best and most carefully arranged compendium of human knowledge extant.

You know with what care the present edition of the Bible was revised. How many learned men consulted for months over each chapter, each paragraph. How every word was weighed with thoughtful care, so as to bring out its best and truest meaning.

In the same way scholarly men, well versed in all branches of knowledge, selected on account of their eminence in the professions which they adorned, labored for years to produce in concentrated form a comprehensive library of all useful facts. The result of their labors was the Revised Encyclopedia Britannica. It is a wonderful work. It contains the history of all things and an explanation of natural phenomena. It is as useful to the carpenter as it is to the poet. It remains for us to place this useful work within reach of the people. For the price of one cigar a day, the poorest workman may make himself master of any art, and have at home a library that will be the pride and delight of his wife and children.

A GREAT OPPORTUNITY.

On receipt of only One Dollar we will forward to you, charges prepaid, the entire set of 20 volumes, the remaining $9.00 to be paid at the rate of 10 cents a day (to be remitted monthly). A beautiful dime savings bank will be sent with the books; in which the dime may be deposited each day. This edition is printed from new, large type on a fine quality of paper, and strongly bound in heavy manilla paper covers, which with proper care will last for years. Bear in mind that the entire 20 volumes are delivered to your address, with all charges paid to any part of the United States.

CUT THIS OUT AND SEND TO THE UNION SIGNAL.

PUBLISHERS UNION SIGNAL:

Please deliver to me the entire set of 20 volumes of Revised Encyclopedia Britannica, as above described, together with your Dime Savings Bank, for which I inclose One Dollar, and further agree to remit 10 cents a day (remitting the same monthly) until the remaining $9.00 is fully paid.

SINCE OUR LAST ISSUE.

Last Thursday was German-American day at the World's Fair.

Many colleges have been sending forth alumni during the past week.

Arguments of counsel on the Bering Sea arbitration still continue.

Five towns in northern Minnesota were burned by forest fires, Sunday.

The world's trade and finance congresses commenced in Chicago on Monday.

The result of the German elections last Thursday show an important gain for socialists.

New England papers are filled with accounts of the Lizzie Borden murder trial now nearing its close.

The closing services of the moral and social reform congress were held Sunday, in Memorial Art Palace, Chicago.

The Methodists announced on Saturday that owing to the decision to open the Fair on the Sabbath, their exhibits will be removed.

The one hundred and eighteenth anniversary of the battle of Bunker Hill was observed by loyal residents of Massachusetts, also on the World's Fair grounds, June 17.

A victory for the gambling element and a disgrace to the state senate of Illinois was the defeat last week of the Berry anti-pool bill which prohibited gambling at races.

A novel strike, the first of its kind, has occurred in Spain where the proposition to abolish district criminal courts has resulted in this action on the part of the Spanish lawyers.

By an act of the state legislature, June 15, the South Park commissioners of Chicago are enabled to purchase the art gallery at the World's Fair and to maintain it as a public art museum.

Word was received from Hawaii during the week that the Hawaiian National flag was floated over the palace and the building dedicated by the provisional government as its capitol.

The thirty-eighth general assembly of Illinois, after appropriating nine millions of dollars and passing about twenty of the one thousand two hundred bills introduced, adjourned sine die June 16.

During one of the sessions of the International Typographical Union at Chicago last week a resolution to adopt a "sliding scale" with differing rates for men and women compositors was rejected, the idea prevailing that equality of rates should obtain.

By decision of the United States circuit court of appeals, consisting of Chief Justice Fuller of the Supreme Court and two associate judges, the injunction issued by the United States circuit court restraining the local directory from opening the World's Fair on Sunday was dissolved June 17, and the Fair will be open on the Sabbath hereafter.

THE General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church South, which recently met at Macon, Ga., expressed itself thus upon the woman question: "The session must absolutely enforce the injunction of Scripture, forbidding women to speak in the churches (I Cor. 14: 34) or in any way failing to observe that relative subordination to men that is taught in I Cor. 11: 13, and in other places." This statement has at least the merit of being definite and explicit. In the meantime, it is a matter of no small significance that the Presbyterian Church South feels it necessary to make such a statement at all. A few years ago it would not have thought of it. A few years hence, this present action will be rescinded as a well meant but ignorant and injurious misunderstanding of God's word.

OUR hearts have been cheered hundreds of times within the last few weeks by the sight of the white ribbon on the dresses of the World's Fair visitors. Nothing has so strengthened our courage and renewed our enthusiasm as this silent display of principle and we honestly believe that this kind of preaching is the one that will win "in the long run." Wear your white ribbons, sisters, and thus show the strength of our great organization.

ON account of meetings elsewhere the Lake Bluff W. C. T. U. convocation has been changed to July 9-16. Ex-Gov. St. John, will speak Sunday, July 9, and at a platform meeting in the evening. There will be conferences led by experts in W. C. T. U. work held during the week and the closing meetings Sunday, July 16, will be addressed by our best speakers. Come to this beautiful, restful place. It is only one hour's ride from Chicago, via Northwestern Railroad.

THE latest news from Miss Willard is that she is "holding her own nicely." She is attending a few large meetings in London in the way of "support"—the English phrase for personal indorsement. She is not accepting any engagements to speak nor taking burdens of any kind, simply resting quietly in Lady Henry Somerset's country home, twenty miles from London. She goes to Switzerland about July 1. We confidently expect marked improvement after that.

No greater stroke for women has ever been wrought than by the English judge in the famous Clithero case when the wife had left her husband for what she deemed good and sufficient reasons and he claimed his marital authority to compel her to return to him. This was not recognized, and the woman was granted her liberty. Thus at one stroke were swept away the cobwebs of centuries of prejudice and precedent, and the woman was recognized as first of all and above all an individual.

FOR the information of naturally anxious readers, we are requested to state that the receiver of the "Harvey Temperance Hotel" says he will recognize the bonds of the stockholders as far as possible and that he will continue running the hotel for the present, at least. In this connection we would again emphasize that the National W. C. T. U. has no interest whatever in this hotel, having never received a penny from this or any other business venture, and that it deplores beyond expression the fact that any of its prominent members have officially indorsed any enterprise of any kind.

WILLARD HALL noon-meeting was led, June 17, by Mrs. L. M. N. Stevens, bringing greetings from Maine to the comradeship. She introduced Madame Magnüsson, president of the W. C. T. U. of Iceland, who, as the product of a long line of total abstainers, had never tasted an intoxicant, and among the seventy thousand inhabitants of her island had heard of but three women who drank. Nevertheless these sober women who crowd Iceland's three hundred churches (Lutheran) have no specific recognition by the church. Only primary education is provided for girls, and this chiefly at the hands of the mother—"the universal school mistress." Madame Magnüsson's special work has been to provide a school for older girls at Reykjavik, under the patronage of the king of Denmark and English friends, where tuition for higher education should be free. She says only Miss Willard's sisterly kindness gave her courage to represent her countrywomen in the great congresses, and to lay their cause before the American people. The noon meetings have been led the past week by Dr. Dorman, of Connecticut, Miss Todd, of Boston, John V. Quinn, Mrs. Margaret Bottome, of the King's Daughters, ex-Governor St. John and John G. Woolley.

IN a preface to his sermon before a large Christian Endeavor audience in Chicago, last Sunday, Rev. B. Fay Mills, the well-known evangelist, announced his determination to relinquish attendance upon the Fair, because of the decision of Chief Justice Fuller, the day previous, reversing the injunction of the circuit court against open gates on Sunday. While asserting that every one must decide this question according to the light of his own conscience, Mr. Mills plead powerfully for Christian witnesses in this time of testing and made a strong impression upon his young and thoughtful audience.

WE have been asked to publish the resolution unanimously adopted at the last National Convention of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union at Denver. This resolution will be found on page fifty-nine of the minutes of last year, and is as follows: "Whereas, We feel that our name has been baptized into a sacredness which should confine its use to reform movements only, therefore, Resolved, That we heartily condemn the use of the name of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union or the initials W. C. T. U. as an advertising medium in any enterprise that has not been indorsed by the National W. C. T. U."

THE Sunday-School department of the World's and National Woman's Christian Temperance Union is steadily fulfilling its motto: "And all thy children shall be taught of the Lord, and great shall be the peace of thy children." Over two millions of lesson leaves have been sold by the Woman's Temperance Publishing Association in Chicago during the past year, to say nothing of the vastly greater number sent out by the regular Sunday-school channels. Miss L. E. F. Kimball writes from Portland, Me., that already 172,000 autograph pledge cards have been ordered directly from her department, to be signed by the children and added to the collection of children's pledge autographs for the World's Fair.

THE annual meeting of the society for the prevention of state regulation of vice was held in London, on May 24. Mrs. Josephine Butler presided, and Mrs. Andrew, Dr. Kate Bushnell, Mr. Naoroji, M. P., Lady Henry Somerset and Mr. W. T. Stead spoke. The resolution of thanks to Mrs. Butler was proposed by Professor Stuart, M. P., and seconded by Miss Willard. On the platform were Percy Bunting, Esq., editor of the Contemporary Review, and other leading men and women. Mrs. Andrew gave in her clear, earnest voice, which has wonderfully developed since she left Chicago, an account of the evidence obtained by herself and Dr. Bushnell to prove that legalized vice still flourishes in the military cantonments of the British army in India. Her speech was most womanly, logical, tender and effective. Not a doubt could have remained in any reasonable mind of the correctness of her statements. Dr. Kate Bushnell made one of her vigorous and convincing addresses, adducing testimony from various authorities who little imagined they would be quoted to support the position taken by Mrs. Andrew in her speech. William T. Stead was at his best, and that is saying enough. He is the bravest of the brave for women's cause and speaks out with an emphasis that cannot be excelled. Lady Henry Somerset was her own earnest, tender, eloquent self. Mrs. Josephine Butler was the central figure of the platform; her sad and reverent face and bearing making a deep impression on all who witnessed them, but her voice did not permit her to be heard beyond a few seats at the front. Like all English meetings this one was turned to practical account by the adoption of ringing resolutions against all forms of legalized vice either in England, on the Continent, in the British possessions, or elsewhere, and declared the untiring determination of this society to overthrow all such inventions of the Evil One and his satellites

"LET THERE BE LIGHT."

BY KATHARINE LENTE STEVENSON.

[Read at the World's Christian Temperance Congress.]

"Let there be light!" God's great creative word
Came sounding o'er the void of chaos dim,
Ere yet the sun rose on Creation's dawn
Or morning stars together sang their hymn.
"Let there be light!" and lo, the darkness turned Pale at the thought of Him, throned all in white;
The mists rose swift, the sulphurous vapors fled,
Heaven stooped to kiss the earth; "and there was light."

"Let there be light!" To prophet-souls of yore
Came this divinest ministry of earth;
In them, through anguish and through travail sore,
The thoughts of God came to their newest birth.
In Moses dawned the light; in David's song
Isaiah's rapt soul shone—a crystal white;
Down through the lengthening years fresh sun-bursts came,
Until He rose who is Himself "the Light."

But mists obscured e'en that one cloudless dawn,
And still o'er earth's glad sunshine hovered night;
Again the breath of God breathed o'er the deep,
Again new prisms showed His own white light.
Luther and Dante, Huss and stern Knox, too,
Savonarola with his heart of flame;
And many a soul obscure amidst the throng,
Who, dying, left more light—nor cared for name.

"Let there be light!" Columbus heard the word
And soon the world gazed on a new-found strand;
"Let there be light!" the Pilgrim fathers came,
Built in the wilderness Immanuel's land.
"Let there be light!" and straight at Freedom's call,
The newborn nation gave up of its best;
"Let there be light!" and slavery shrank appalled,
While Peace's white star shone in the glowing West.

"Let there be light!" our Crusade mothers heard
This voice of God, nor dared to question why
He chose the weak things to confound the strong;
They gave themselves to Him to do or die.
They saw an evil thronèd in the land
Mightiest by far of all the hosts of hell;
They dared to show God's lightning scorn of sin;
They followed where He led; aye, followed well.

"Let there be light!" A mighty army stands
Clear-eyed, faced sun-ward, gazing down the East;
Already have their foreheads caught the glow,—
Shekinah-glow that marks the future's priest.
Light pulses from their every garment's fold,
Light for each form of sin, or sorrow's night;
Linking earth's shadows fast to heaven's bright throne,
They belt the vast globe with the ribbon white.

"Let there be light!" Aye, more and more shall be Light in its fulness, light intense and clear;
Pulsing from God Himself, its rays shall gleam
More and more radiant through each coming year.
We stand but on the portals of the dawn;
Eye hath not seen its perfect effluence bright;
Courage, the clouds are lifting; some glad day
Earth shall shine white as heaven in God's full light.

Heralds of dawn! we greet you, sisters dear;
All hail! brave souls, who dare believe God's true;
Who look, not only for the heavenly dawn,
But for an earth in righteousness made "new."
We'll shine, each in her place, though seas divide,
Though ne'er again on earth we clasp the hand;
To-day is earnest of that day to come,
In this hope toil and shine, white-ribbon band.

MISS PAMELA'S FRESH-AIR TWINS.

BY ELIZABETH CUMINGS.

"I never said I'd take two boys!" shrilled Miss Pamela Burbank, with something very like panic. "Whyee! I'd as soon take a couple o'—hyenas, Mr. Tilley," and the little lady shook her neat head in a perfect flutter of protest, while before her stood Tom and Tim McCutchin, duplicate pictures of disappointment and chagrin.

Never before in their brief lives of nine years had it been to their discredit to be boys. Their gray eyes opened wider, and their pouting lips grew very pouty, indeed, at the thought. Had not Granny McCutchin assured them with her last breath that they were the delight of her dim eyes? Had they not for three years earned their bread selling papers? It made a queer tightness in their two skinny throats that this lady did not like boys, for more than any other at the railway station she resembled the picture drawn by Maggie McMinn, who was just home from a two weeks' stay in Cato Junction.

"She's sure to wear the neatest gown an' a silk man-killer, an' to have hair a fly'd slip up on, it's that slick," had prophesied Maggie, "an' she's sure to worrit ye aboot jist wan thing, an' that's the number o' times ye clane yerself."

"I'm not used to boys," went on Miss Pamela, impatiently, "and I don't see's I've any call to begin with city boys I don't know the least thing about."

Curiously enough, of twins one is sure to be leader and spokesman, and one meditates and seems to follow. At this point, when the nervous pastor was wondering if the parsonage spare bed could be made to hold six visitors, Tim, who was a shade smaller and skinnier than Tom, stepped forward: "Please, me'm, I'm sorry we're not ixpected," he said, "but if ye'll try us ye'll think 'tis girls we are, we'll be that light steppin'." Tim's heart beat painfully. He was dreadfully afraid they would have to return to Zoar and to suffer disappointment, and worse yet, be laughed at. Then, Tom had not recovered from the dreadful measles, which they had taken both at the same time, as became twins, and endured in the friendly protection of the hospital.

"'M, well," sighed Miss Pamela, who was really very kind-hearted, "I s'pose I can live through the two weeks somehow." Then noting the unmistakable trouble in the young-old faces of the brothers, she added, "You'll have a good time if you half behave."

Pompey was little more than one long grassy street shaded by lindens, now honeysweet with blossoms and full of droning bees. Tom and Tim thought it beautiful, but when Shadrach's nipping walk carried them on between orchards, and then between fields of clover and ripening oats and tasseled corn, they felt sure the heaven of which Granny so often told them could not be much fairer. As for Miss Pamela her heart more and more misgave her, and she was quite willing to go slow to put off the difficult moment when she must face her half-brother Philander, and the despot of the household. He was fifteen ears her senior, and she had been reared to believe he should have his way in everything. An old bachelor, he carried on the great farm they owned jointly, and spent his leisure on the invention of labor-saving devices usually more curious than useful.

"'M, well!" he exclaimed significantly when he came out to greet his sister. "'M, well! I do say! E-m-m! 'M, well, some folks are so benevolent an' et-cetry, they load up 'ith more'n they can carry, but I allays begin as I can go on." Then he stroked the wisp of gray hair on his peaked chin and looked the boys and then Miss Pamela over coldly.

Even the worm will turn, and Miss Pamela had the courage of desperation. "For mercy sake, Philander, wa'n't you a boy once yourself!" she retorted, "and what's more, if I choose to have two boys here a fortnight, I guess it's my privilege without havin' feelings stomped on. Them boys is human bein's, Philander, and as for the city, our own father was city born, which I don't see's he was responsible for. There is such a thing's bein' too censorious to live."

"'M, well, I hope you'll enjoy yourself," dryly returned Philander, "and I guess I'll let you take all the comfort you can, for I'll go over to New Berlin Junction and see a man 'bout manufacturin' my wind-churn. I'll drive Tinker, an' be back in two days, sure."

It was Philander's way to choose inconvenient seasons in which to take advice about his "paytents," and to come back only in the very nick of time; but argument was thrown away upon him, and Miss Pamela could only gaze at the bending rye and the ripening oats, and hope they would not begin to drop their treasure before her brother returned. Meanwhile Tom and Tim had seated themselves close together on the spreading porch and were gazing about them with quivering delight. The rambling old house with bushes of all sorts snuggling about it, the weeping willows in the stretch of ill-kept lawn at the front, and the row of locusts along the lane drive filled them with a strange, dumb happiness. Cabbage alley, the only home they had ever known, was set as full of tall tenements as it could hold, and reeked of odors indescribable. Smoke swirled down into it from the tall chimneys of the Dubbs' iron mills, and all day and most of the night there was a continuous roar, the roar of life in a great city. But here were perfumes from flowers and grass, and the sunshine lay in blothes of gold on the green stretch before them, while the only sounds were the songs of birds and the swish of leaves. The little fellows could only hunch each other and breathe long and deep, and the old, old lady who came out of the door had time to give them a good looking-over, before they discovered her. What was left of her hair was done up in little puffs each side of her face, and she wore a white lace cap trimmed with a good deal of narrow satin ribbon, and she looked not unlike a monster chrysanthemum. Tim was the first to see her, and he got up at once and took off his hat, and of course Tom followed his example.

"They're twins," shouted Miss Pamela in the old lady's ear, "fresh-air twins."

"Yes, I understand the name's Fisher, but have ye taken 'em for good?" piped the old lady. "What on earth do you expect to do with 'em?"

"Oh, just let 'em be happy for two weeks, Aunt Lucinda," screamed Miss Pamela.

"If I took 'em at all I'd take 'em," replied the old lady. "I wouldn't shilly-shally. Take 'em, or leave 'em. But you've got more sense'n I give ye credit for. I allays did like the boys." Then to the twins' mingled embarrassment and relief she went over and shook hands with them.

"It's six or five ekks I want, mo'm, an' it was not wan I found," complained a German voice from the kitchen window, "unt here was mine putter unt sugar mix, unt milk for dose kooken." A moment later a round German face was thrust out between the leaves of the wisteria, and two round blue eyes looked at the twins wonderingly. "Ach!" exclaimed their owner, "dose poy can hunt dose ekks for me."

"Of course we can," cried Tom and Tim in duetto. Maggie McMinn had described egg-hunting to them in full. "We'll go round in the barn and the bushes."

"You don't go a-whoopin'," interposed Miss Pamela, warningly.

"'Tis like a feather I'll be," said Tim with twinkling eyes.

"Go down behind the corn house and then behind the hay barn," said Miss Pamela, pointing, "and when you come back there'll be something ready for you to eat."

Nothing succeeds like success, and when Tim returned with eleven eggs, discovered in a fence corner, and Tom with four speckled beauties hidden away by a guinea fowl, even the fault-finding Philander grew benevolent, and insisted upon giving them each a third helping of green peas.

The next two days were golden to the brothers. There were, to be sure, drawbacks. Tom knew nothing of the nature of cross black rams, and tore his trousers scrambling over the south pasture wall escaping Pollux, fierce old fellow with very curly horns, and Tim slipped into the trout hole while trying to cross the brook on the stones; but the tireless patience with which they helped Hans kill potato bugs, and picked peas and currants for Kristine, hunted for Aunt Lucinda's spectacles, and waited upon Miss Pamela, had its effect.

Meanwhile the rye was bending low, and Hans had been too brief a time in America to be trusted alone. But Wednesday evening came and went and brought not Mr. Burbank;—surely the wind-churn must be making him the millionaire he declared it would to let him forget the reaping—and Thursday Miss Pamela's anxiety cast a shadow over the whole house. Perhaps it made Aunt Lucinda wakeful. It is certain that Tim was very much excited by it, and even Tom was stirred to wish he might go forth to discover what had become of the missing inventor. The moon was past its full, and though it was after midnight, the house was full of light when Tim awoke with a start, hearing a strange rustling in the next room. He sat up trembling very much, for the country is quite as scarey a place to a city child as the city is to the country-bred. Somewhere a tree toad called melodiously for rain. Then came that odd noise in the next room. Tim slipped out of bed beset with visions of robbers and adjured Tom, in whispers, to "get a move" on himself. He was sure something was to be done and his Scotch heart rose to the occasion. But when he tiptoed out into the moonlit kitchen he saw tiny Aunt Lucinda was his disturber. It was slower Tom who made the important discovery that Tinker had come up the lane and was nibbling regardless of the buggy at his heels. They waited to see the tall, angular figure of his owner, or the squat one of Hans, but in vain.

"Tom," said Tim, "something's got to be done, and I guess we'll have to do it."

"I let Hans take Kristine over to see their parents two miles down the West road," said Miss Pamela when she had been roused, "and I told them they need not return afore daybreak. They took Shadrach, and I can't do anything with Tinker."

Neither of the twins had ever touched reins, and Tinker was a colt with a great many notions of his own. But the boys had seen feats of horsemanship unknown to the quiet roads of Pompey, and had the courage of their inexperience. Their assertion, "We can drive Tinker," was accepted by Miss Pamela, who had a country-bred woman's belief in a boy's ingrained power to manage a horse, and they had set forth on a drive of twenty miles in as many minutes after Tim had wakened.

"I guess we'll be all right if we impress him with the notion we're boss," said Tim who naturally took the reins.

"It's not Tinker as troubles me, Timmy, it's what's become o' the master," said Tom. "It's never whisky as tiled him, or she'd not sind us. Maybe he's killed dead by robbers on account o' his machine."

"If 'twas robbers they'd a-took Tinker to run off with," argued the practical Tim. "If some is good to a thief, more is better."

In the gray of the early dawn they entered the winding valley of Owosso Creek. Not once had they let Tinker go faster than his swift, springy walk. Rocky ledges rose at the left, and at the right the rocks as abruptly broke away to the creek level, which was sometimes two, sometimes twenty feet below. Tinker seemed to have unpleasant recollections of the place, for he twitched his ears nervously, and held up his head as if expecting something startling, till, as the road bent at a sharp angle, he stopped short.

"G'lang!" said Tim, clucking his tongue loudly. Tinker did not budge, and Tim reached for the whip.

"I wouldn't," said Tom. "Just wait till I look around that corner. I'm sure a hoss has some sense." Just what it cost Tom to round that corner only He who knows all hearts knew. A small rock occupied the middle of the road, and on the grassy bank at the left reclined Mr. Burbank, a bare and swollen foot on the fragments of the wind-churn, and fast asleep.

"I'll tell you how it was," he explained as Tim drove slowly homeward. "You see I'd stayed longer'n I meant to, an' when Tinker stopped last evening afore that fallen rock, I just give him a touch o' th' whip not knowin' what he see. Gee whiz! he went right over that rock and strewed that there paytent right all over creation. Then he cooled off, an' I clim out to pick up things, an' what with bein' mad, an' hurried, an' it darker'n a pocket I slipped an' sprained my ankle, and Tinker got tired o' waitin', an' not bein' tied he went home. I'm awful glad you come as you did. Them oats o' ours need tendin' to, not to mention th' rye, an' with the nib o' my paytent yet as you may say, though it ain't right to neglect a bird in the hand for one in the bush."

"Go along with you!" exclaimed Aunt Lucinda, when Tim sorrowfully spoke of the fact that Cabbage alley would be a poor place after two delightful weeks on a farm. "Go along with you, I say! Poor place or no, on this farm you'll stay. I allays did like boys. After having something useful folks don't know how to do without. An' this place is Pompey postoffice. Thought I heard you say 'twas Cavassally. Ain't no such place 'round here."

"We don't want to spare ye," said Mr. Burbank leisurely pulling at his serviceable bit of whisker. "If you'll stay, we'll send ye to school like you was our own folks. I'll go down to-day and see Mr. Tilley if there's word you want to send."

"We don't want to send," said Tim, after a moment's struggle with the lump in his throat; "we didn't leave nothin' but hard times behind us there in Cabbage alley."

"They're real handy," Miss Pamela would explain, "but why folks should always call 'em my twins, stid o' Philander's, when 'twas he an' Aunt Lucinda as adopted 'em, passes me. I guess 'twas my bein' the one who took 'em home. I don't deserve credit. I wanted girls or nobody. But there they were, and not to blame for bein' as they was; and I will say, keepin' a farm 'd be dreadful unhandy without 'em, now we've had 'em."

WHAT HINDERS THE VICTORY?

BY MARY T. LATHRAP.

Read on W. C. T. U. day, June 9, in the World's Temperance Congress.]

The temperance reform is but a segment of the irrepressible conflict between righteousness and unrighteousness—a conflict which has marked the ages and cannot cease, until truth is victorious and He whose right it is shall reign. The battle is invoked by the real presence of God in controlling the destinies of this world.

Not more certainly does the shore line of rock and sand shut in the sea, with the mandate in force from the beginning—"Thus far shalt thou go and no farther"—than does the shore line of omnipotence hedge in the ways of men and nations, and bring at last to the rewards of goodness and the losses of evil doing. The stable continent does not cause the roar of the impatient surf that beats at its edge, nor is the eternal kingdom of God responsible for the fret of passion, appetite and sin, that resists even to blood and revolution the throne that shall be established forever.

No reform is begun or sustained by the voice of the reformer, but by the presence upon yet contested battlefields of two principles, two armies and two powers that must be opposed until one is supreme. In such a struggle as this convocation represents, three active, human factors must be in agreement, and these all in harmony with its divine background. These three are: 1. The principles to be defended; 2. Forces which pronounce one shibboleth of truth, and shout one battle-cry of aggressive and truceless warfare, and 3. The methods employed to bring success. A study of these three is interesting in the light of the question, WHAT HINDERS THE VICTORY?

Two principles are easily our casus belli,—total abstinence for the individual from the alcoholics vended as a legitimate commercial transaction under sanction of law, and total prohibition of the right of any citizen to conduct a business so, beyond question, harmful to the state. Total abstinence—right because it is safe and safe because it is right, is the point where our war begins with individual destiny, and makes the issue with self-indulgence where Christ made it when He said: "If thy right hand offend thee cut it off and cast it from thee. It is better to enter into life maimed than having two hands to be cast into hell."

Alcohol is a poison is the dictum of science, no matter how environed in the doctored drinks of commerce. It is ever the deadliest of the ingredients in the cup of cursing. Independent of the will and conscience it has the power to create an uncontrollable appetite for itself. This appetite once fixed ruins the victim body, mind and soul, until false to every human relation he finally shudders out of this world through a doorway over which the unchangeable law is written, "No drunkard shall inherit eternal life." Affected thus, the drinker harms each life he touches in the present; curses the future by the entailment of his shame and weakness upon the lives that spring from him; and is a blight upon the commonwealth. To say, therefore, that to drink alcoholics or not to drink them is a matter of opinion, or self-restraint, or taste lying quite beyond the eternal ought of things, is false.

To drink alcohol as a beverage is a sin per se, and smites the shining face of Truth with the brutal fist of appetite, or flings at her feet the glove of self-indulgence, and the one or the other is a call to war.

Back of these vital reasons is another deeper yet, the value of the individual. Because of such value, divinely computed, we have the plan of salvation, the cross of Calvary and all we know of life immortal; anything, therefore, which attacks the soul Christ reckons priceless, crosses the pathway of divine justice and invites its stroke. Prohibition for the state is but the same principles in a different relation. Ruskin says, "A nation has but one value, and that is human life." The license policy deliberately debauches this wealth of the human, and exchanges souls for revenue.

Material prosperity without conscience in control is the lightning express which bears a nation to destruction. Money at par in the kingdom of commerce, and citizenship at par in the kingdom of morals makes the only true equipoise of safety. This true, nothing is secular; even the roots of our harvests stand in heaven's beneficence; God takes time and eternity both to deal with the individual, and so sends the rain on the evil and the good. But He deals with nations in time, and when mischief is framed into law, iniquity put into statutes, cities built by blood, and revenues gathered by unrighteousness, a nation treads the path of doom.

Call us fanatics who will, but how shall any overthrow these principles without overthrowing their divine foundations, and removing from supremacy the throne of the Almighty? The principles to be defended standing thus the test, they should succeed and come to victory in the lives of our people and in the laws which govern them. The hindrance is not in these.

Turn now to seek the forces which pronounce one shibboleth and sound the battle-cry of this reform. Until the irrepressible conflict between good and evil is ended there will always be two forces at work in civilization; one that makes for righteousness and peace, and another for disquiet and final disaster. Sometimes in the march of progress the battle lines grow dim, sometimes they are sharply drawn. This clear outlining of forces comes from test questions which try the moral fibre of great people, one of which is represented here to-day.

The forces making for settlement may be divided into 1. Principles expressed in the thought life of the nation, and 2. Principles expressed in the action of living men and women. We have more of the first than the last afield at this time. The air is full of the star-dust of new and ideal spheres that seem of the same moral formation as these principles we defend, but this floats in luminous and hypocritical splendor above the battlefield, instead of being a force upon it. The admissions of science, the positions of legislation, the finding of judicial heights, the reports of students of crime, the mouse-colored protests of charitable associations, the cordial sympathy of political parties, the expression in favor of temperance by the beer brewers' congress, the pointless arguments of nonpartisan temperance and the thundering resolutions of church assemblies—all mingle and float in misty nothingness ten miles above the real battle that rages below.

The forces which mean living soldiers, and real action, alas! are not so large. We come out of the realm of abstract opinion to search for the concrete warrior, and find that the scientist, the legislator, the judge, the humanitarian, the politician—and the churchman, have been content with filling the air with theories, resolutions and smoke that only hide the light and choke the real army while they never come near enough the engagement to feel the jar of the conflict; and when they do stand where they might affect the outcome, the vote cast in the ballot box says just the opposite of the resolution skyrocketed into the air.

What then are the forces afield? Farthest out and highest up is the WOMAN'S CHRISTIAN TEMPERANCE UNION. Here is the enlistment oath:

PLEDGE.

I solemnly promise, God helping me, to abstain from all intoxicating drinks, wine, beer and cider, included, and to do all in my power to discountenance the use of and traffic in the same.

The principles are these: Total abstinence for the individual, prohibition for the state. It is the marvel of the century—this band of women. Ballotless patriots doing such service as theirs the present cannot appreciate because they are ahead of their time.

There is but one way to settle the total abstainers' attitude to alcoholic liquors, and that is to quit drinking them. There is but one way to settle the Prohibitionists' attitude towards the liquor traffic and that is to quit voting a ticket with a license quality and power.

Now apply Sam Jones' test of "quitting this meanness" to the great organizations that represent the intelligence and conscience of the nation, and the present evolution of the real conflict is found. Of the four million men in the churches, probably one-fourth believe in the present methods of license, the three-fourths believe more or less strongly in Prohibition sometime and someway—but only two hundred and seventy-eight thousand express that faith in a Prohibition ballot. So the only political organization which has come out of star-dust to the battle, are these voters of the Prohibition party.

I would be fair with all who think they have a right to be counted as on the field—but the years have taught that a man who drinks moderately does not count for total abstinence, and it is equally true that the man who votes for license does not count for prohibition. So this is true—the women with the white ribbon and the men with the white ballot are at the battle's center, and their responsibility is something awful in this hour when to stand requires the highest courage.

These forces are natural allies; it required no bargain or sale to affect it—they are the only forces of the field that are in full harmony with the principles announced—the temperance reformer or organization turning from either of these lapses into misty nothingness. Whatever may linger on some distant dawn in the way of new alliances and "getting together of reform forces"—the fact stands—that to-day there is no "getting together" with any other for the white ribbon or the white ballot that does not mean a striking of colors and surrender of principles. Under a no compromise banner where the fight is thickest, is the only place for the forces that do not flinch under the tests of total abstinence and prohibition. Let these beware lest one hindrance is with them—for the days are heavy with fate.

Lastly—The methods which must be worthy of both principles and forces deserve a moment's consideration. Without shame or fear the banner of this reform must be upheld and its principles brought to the people. Some of our populations need education. More need conviction, and more still—action. So soon as man and woman know that alcohol is a poison, harmful to self and to others, they have education enough to stop drinking it and henceforth they sin against conscience and harden their hearts. So soon as a citizen knows that the saloon is morally wrong he is sufficiently educated to cease voting to make it legally right, and henceforth sins against moral light and defies God's law of righteousness in government. What he needs is to "quit his meanness" and do what he knows he ought.

The demand of the present hour is such bold and aggressive agitation as shall stir to its center the slumbering conscience of the nation and move to action. Bombard the heights of thought and morals, scatter the subterfuges, cyclone the star-dust, and bring the curse of the century to the judgment seat of a conscience ballot.

This final test of grit and grace is coming to the women as well as to the men. Michigan has just given the village and municipal ballot to women and their day comes on. Will they stand the test, or betray as men have done this solemn trust? The methods of this reform must be as radical and aggressive as its principles, and the forces afield, worthy of both, that they may conquer.

It is four hundred years since the Spanish reel struck the sands of this continent's outlying islands—and destiny unfolds. It matters little whether Columbus was saint or pirate; he was only the servant of the future when he pushed open the door of a new world for the multitudes that followed, and it is with the future we have to do. Our civilization was not built on the ideals of the daring Spaniard, or the people he represented. Columbus discovered America but the nation was born in the high, white faith of the Puritans.

Two ideals are in mighty conflict and undertoning the music of our great jubilee. The thoughtful may hear the slogan of two camps, and see beneath the wreaths of glory the gleam of a sword that may be unsheathed in deadly strife before it is decided whether Christ or antichrist shall possess ultimate America. The reformers gathered here have no small part in the final decision.

The slumbering conscience of the nation is to-day the chief hindrance to the success of the temperance reform; light has been trifled with; greed of gain and power have stifled moral sense, and we have not, in the church or out of it, a soil on which to grow a reform which means truth, right, patriotism and self-denial; that soil must be made by the most radical effort before victory.

There are hindrances in the forces on the field—some of them have gone into camp, and are busy with easier things, while often the prophetic trumpet given them to sound has been all too softly blown to arouse those who sleep.

God clear the reformers' vision in this time of need! AGITATION, CONVICTION, ACTION is the path that principles, forces and methods must tread to victory.

Stand with the few till the night is past,
God's day shall dawn on the truth at last;
His arm shall awake for those that sigh,
His strength shall stand for the weak that cry.
Through dark or dawn His day draws on—
And right shall triumph by and by.

WORLD'S FAIR AND TEMPERANCE.

BY HELEN M. BARKER.

[Read on W. C. T. U. Day, June 9, in World's Temperance Congress.]

The World's Fair is one of the most stupendous enterprises ever undertaken by energetic men and women. The vast scale upon which it has been planned and wrought out, the millions that have been raised and expended, stamp it as a most remarkable and praiseworthy enterprise. When we consider the brief time in which it had to be accomplished, look upon its successful completion in a little more than two short years—this splendid achievement challenges the admiration of the world.

Not only upon the government that has contributed large sums, and upon every state that has helped, but especially does it reflect great credit upon the grand Chicago men who have sacrificed time, money and energy in untold measure to bring about this magnificent result. I verily believe no other city in America could or would have wrought so grandly. Who can count the almost insurmountable obstacles these brave men have overcome, the unforeseen impediments they have encountered and removed, and the storms of adverse circumstances that have expended their fury in vain, and which these indomitable men have either driven back or have chained by perseverance to their chariot of success. Truly, the men who have carried this great World's Fair thus far in this unprecedented manner are entitled to and must receive our warmest commendation and our heartiest admiration.

It was too much, perhaps, to expect that in all their plans they would show perfection. Nothing built on earth by men was ever perfect. To thousands of temperance workers there has come keen disappointment and sorrow that in this great national exhibit of the best of every nation so large place is given to those poisons that to-day are the world's greatest curse; yet we all see that as long as wine and beer and other liquors are regarded as important articles of commerce, they could not well be excluded from the Exposition as exhibits; but we had the right to hope that they would not be sold upon the grounds. Thousands of petitions were sent in to the management, asking that no intoxicants be sold within the gates. This was a reasonable request, especially as Jackson Park is within a prohibition district. The management so far recognized the right of the petitioners as to pledge that no liquor should be sold over a bar, and that nothing like a saloon should exist, but that out of deference to our foreign visitors it must be served at tables with food. For this privilege concessionaires have paid large sums of money to the management.

Was it disinterested regard for the comfort of foreigners, or was it anxiety for the revenue that led these good men to grant these privileges in violation of the expressed sentiment of the best people of this country, and in violation of the law of the district? It is the same old story—the liquor traffic pays a revenue, men want money, license follows.

Have the rules adopted by the management been observed? Is liquor only served at table? Walk through the Manufactures Building. You will become conscious, by fumes that reach your olfactories, that you are near a groggery. You will see beer sold over a counter and drunk at a counter. Did these shrewd business men believe for one moment that men who sold drink would obey law? That if money were offered them at a bar for a glass of liquor they would refuse it unless they also paid for a cracker at the same time?

Liquor sellers are a law-breaking class, with no regard for decency or order, and should never have been given a foothold upon the Fair grounds. It is a sad thought that thousands of young men who would scorn to enter a saloon will be tempted to drink in the liquor restaurants of this respectable Exposition. Sadder still is the spectacle of hundreds of young girls turned into barmaids. Who can doubt that many young girls, whose anxiety to see the Fair and the offer of good wages have brought them as waitresses into these restaurants, will be injured by coming in contact with influences akin to the saloon, their finer sensibilities blunted, their moral susceptibilities lowered, and the pathway to ruin entered by unwary feet? These are the inevitable results of liquor selling, whether in a low down-town groggery or a high-toned World's Fair restaurant.

While our civil war brought great good to this nation in doing away with slavery, it also brought incidentally a long train of inebriety and other evils. While the World's Fair has many elevating features, and will do much to help women in the years to come, it is not an unmixed good. How much grander the influence of this great Exposition would have been upon the assembled nations if only the best and purest products of our Christian civilization had been put on exhibition.

While we mourn that the trail of the serpent must be so conspicuous and must leave a poison in its train for us to combat, yet I have no sympathy with the spirit that would boycott the Fair and forsake the field, giving it all over to the enemy. As well might we refuse to live in Chicago or in America, because city and nation are not purged from the evils that we deprecate, as to forsake the World's Fair because these same evils, for the same reasons, are found therein.

These facts are a vivid illustration of the great need of more universal education and more determined and persistent effort for the spread of total abstinence, for better laws and for an uncompromising and continual fight for unconditional and everlasting prohibition of the liquor traffic. Many who are greatly shocked that liquor should be sold upon the Fair grounds, are complacent and even apologetic for its legalized sale in the 7,000 saloons in this city. Why?

One of the most potent elements of an ongoing reform is agitation. What could have provoked more earnest discussion, aroused more righteous indignation than this action of these good men? I say good men because they have been chosen for their irreproachable personal character, for their business sagacity and their honorable dealing with men.

If such men for money can be induced to introduce this cruel blight to an otherwise elevating and civilizing exposition, can we not learn a valuable lesson of the need of greater work in all our educational and reformatory lines? The exhibit of the National and World's W. C. T. U. in the Woman's Building is preaching numberless sermons for sobriety. The foreigners on the Midway Plaisance are, by all this agitation, learning that there is a class of people which believes it is not only possible, but better, to live without liquor, and that this is a Christian nation, and that we have a Sunday. I believe God will overrule this evil, and in some way our great reform will advance in spite of this huge blot upon the Fair. Then let us work for all that is pure and good and everywhere condemn the wrong.

In closing let me say there is one white spot in the White City where no smell of the poison greets you, where no liquor is sold or drunk, and that is the café in the Woman's Building, controlled by the Board of Lady Managers—another illustration of the purifying and elevating presence of women, and of the great and growing need of woman's influence in municipal and state government. Then we have frequent addresses by noted W. C. T. U. women, philanthropists and reformers in the assembly room of the Woman's Building; fifty-four organizations of Christian and philanthropic women also have headquarters in this same building, and we expect great good to go out from this clean center to the nations of earth. Our God is marching on and if we keep near to Him He will not only lead us, but He will redeem the world in spite of avarice, appetite and ungodly ambition.

"RELAPSES come. Kings fail and prophets come, only to be stoned and killed. The church rises with apostolic zeal, and in all the splendor of a simple, personal, vital faith in Christ, but heresy comes and corruption wastes. Luther dies and schism wracks and torments the earth. Christianity becomes too pious to be really moral, too refined to be robust and stern. As a human theology or philosophy, it is nothing. As a life and eternal progress that has the purpose and will of Almighty God at the heart of it, it is everything. "Only as an inspiring, passionate energy," an unfolding and perfect plan, does it, can it, regenerate the world."

HILLSBORO CRUSADE SKETCHES.

VII.

The Drug Store Day.

BY ELIZA J. THOMPSON.

Saturday morning, January 24, 1874, was a morning long to be remembered. After devotional services of more than usual interest and power the women of the band, numbering about eighty, sallied forth from the dear old church that witnessed their first consecration, to encounter the piercing blasts of nature's cold, but more to feel the sting of malicious persecution and witness the frowns of former friends, as they gathered in front of the "Palace Drug Store" for an all-day service of prayer and song.

It may be well to give our readers an idea of this day's work from an outsider's conception of it, as given in an organ of the Baptist church, The Watchman and Reflector, of Boston. The editor prefaces the narrative by saying:

"If any think this is a work to be sneered at, let them read the following report of the efforts in Hillsboro, where the work began with a lecture by Dr. Lewis on December 23, 1873. We confess we did not read it with dry eyes:

Turning the corner on last Saturday afternoon I came unexpectedly upon some fifty women kneeling on the pavement and stone steps before a store. . . A daughter of a former Governor of Ohio was leading in prayer. Surrounding her were the mothers, wives and daughters of former congressmen and legislators, of lawyers, physicians, bankers, ministers, leading men of all kinds. . . There were gathered here representatives from nearly every household of the town. The day was bitterly cold; a cutting north wind swept the streets, piercing us all to the bone. The plaintive, tender, earnest tones of that wife and mother who was pleading in prayer, arose on the blast and were carried to every heart within reach. Passers-by uncovered their heads, for the place whereon they trod was "holy ground." The eyes of hardened men filled with tears, and many turned away, saying that they could not bear to look upon such a sight! Then the voice of prayer was hushed; the women arose and began to sing, softly, a sweet hymn with some old, familiar words and tune, such as our mothers sang to us in childhood days. We thought, Can mortal man resist such efforts? Then they knelt, and once more the earnest tones of prayer were borne upon the breeze. So from ten o'clock in the morning to four in the afternoon the work went on, the ladies relieving each other by relays.

Close by was the residence of Hon. John A. Smith, our former congressman, and now delegate to congressional convention. His noble, warm-hearted wife, one of the band, provided a bounteous lunch, to which the workers resorted for rest and refreshment, then returned to kneel and pray. The effect upon the spectators was indescribable. No sneer was heard, scarcely a light word was spoken. The spirit of devotion was abroad; those who would scorn to pray themselves, yet felt that here was something which they must, at least, respect. Many a "God bless them!" fell from lips accustomed to use the name of Deity only in blasphemy. There was not a man who saw them kneeling there, but felt that if he was entering heaven's gate and one of these women were to approach, he would stand aside and let her enter first.

The end is not yet; the hearts of these women daily grow stouter, their faith brighter, and their prayers more earnest. A thoroughly Christian spirit pervades the community, and the feeling is one of yearning love and pity for those who stand out against their duty to their fellowmen.

A large and enthusiastic "mass temperance meeting" was held in Music Hall on that Saturday evening, addressed by Rev. A. C. Hurst, of Washington Courthouse. Subscriptions were then received to the guarantee fund, raising the amount to $12,000. The total abstinence pledge was circulated (as was our habit at all public meetings), and many signatures obtained.

As the women retired from Music Hall that evening, in their hearts came welling up: "One more day's work for Jesus!" then the blessed promise: "They that suffer with me shall reign with me."

THE BANEFUL CITY.

Man's First Dwelling Place Was In A Garden.

DEAR UNION SIGNAL:—In the leading editorial of THE UNION SIGNAL of May 25th were some very thoughtful facts in regard to the baneful effects of large cities. One point was presented to which a diverging view might be offered. The statement was made that "large cities seem a necessary part of our civilization." While this has been the case under the past and present civilizations, based on the animalism of a competitive industrial system, it seems that under a more Christian method of mutualism the great city as now built will become a thing of the past.

Since the days when a Solomon planted the seeds of decay for the Jewish nation in the luxury and profligacy of his great city to the present, the first steps of national decay have come from the unnatural conditions inherent in great cities. So, it is probable, it will ever be; man's natural place is near to the face of Mother Earth, and only in combining some of the better features of city and country life, is there hope for the elevation of character with the highest intellectual attainments, that shall make a higher type of civilization possible.

When a system of mutual good will to men can be begun where the goal is not how many dollars for the few, but how high an average of character and attainment for all; when organization begins for production and distribution on a systematic basis for the good of all, then will great cities begin to disintegrate, as one of the excrescences of the past and imperfect civilizations. Then great factories and distributing stores will be taken from the center of the city and placed out among the fields and flowers, where every worker may have his own home and garden, and work indoors only six or less hours per day, having the remainder of his time for the practice of the gentle arts of horticulture and home-making, or for intellectual improvement, imbibing the love of nature as the Creator intended.

This type of life and the bringing the scattered, isolated farmers into central villages may be so modified as to give to all the best advantages of both city and rural life, to the development of the highest type of Christian citizens, in a civilization based on the promise of the angels singing His coming who came to establish a new kingdom of "Peace on earth, good will to men."

Steps in this direction are already being taken, with results that show, in individual cases, that the rush and crush of a great city is not the place to make or keep the highest type of citizen. This error must be corrected before the coming of a "diviner civilization" whose coming signs may even now be discerned in the earnest study for "a better way." S. H. COMINGS.

THE CONDITION OF THE W. C. T. U. WORK IN TENNESSEE BEFORE AND AFTER THE PASSAGE OF THE SUFFRAGE RESOLUTION.

DEAR UNION SIGNAL:—Having read in the Woman's Column that at the recent session of the Georgia state convention of the W. C. T. U., Mrs. M. L. Wells, of Tennessee, made the statement that the "Tennessee W. C. T. U. had been ruined by suffrage." I desire as the best means of refuting such a statement to make a few plain statements of facts. We have not so many unions as in 1886 and 1887 while the hot fight for constitutional prohibition was on, and we had the help of all men favorable to a prohibitory amendment.

But it was old partyism—not woman suffrage—that turned them away from us. Our prohibition party plank was much more objectionable to them than our suffrage plank. And though our number of unions is smaller, our department work is larger and much better done, and grows better each year, as does also our representation at the annual convention.

Previous to 1887 the largest number we had was at Columbia in 1886, delegates and visitors numbering sixty-two. At Harriman in 1891, where our clear-cut franchise plank was nailed down by a unanimous vote, we had seventy voting delegates and one hundred and fifteen voters and visitors. At Nashville in 1892 we had fifty-six delegates and a large quota of visitors, but reports were excellent, and local work reported amounted to $5,000.

The W. C. T. U. was the means of all petitions sent to the legislature for raising "age of consent," and Tennessee girlhood owes her protection to the white-ribboners.

Previous to the year 1886 we had never paid over forty dollars National dues. During the amendment campaign in 1887, when new unions sprang up in a night, like Jonah's gourd, to perish in a day, we paid two hundred and fifty dollars. And in just one year when no word had ever been spoken in convention for woman suffrage, our dues to the National had dropped down to seventy-five dollars. Since we have had the suffrage plank our National dues have remained nearly the same each year, between fifty and sixty dollars. These facts speak for themselves. MRS. E. J. ROACH,

First Supt. of Franchise.

The above statement by Mrs. Roach has my hearty indorsement. Indeed, the white-ribboners of Tennessee for several years past have been more sanguine for the early coming of woman suffrage than for the speedy advent of prohibition. Studying the signs of the times even in our own state, we believe it is woman's ballot that will give us prohibition. This our faith we show by our franchise department.

A very strong editorial appeared in the Knoxville Journal of May 13, in favor of woman suffrage, a daily paper which has extensive circulation in East Tennessee.

SOCIAL PURITY CONGRESS.

DEAR UNION SIGNAL:—Advocates of the social purity movement have been singing the last week: "Our cause is marching on," as shown by the World's Congress of Social Purity convened in the Memorial Art Palace. Hon. C. C. Bonney, who is rendering a priceless service to humanity by arranging these congresses, welcomed the social purity workers. Mr. Aaron M. Powell, that veteran champion of womanhood, presided and proved the great need of this congress in keeping out of America the scourge of state regulation of vice.

Archbishop Ireland made a fine speech taking in all phases of the social purity question, urging preventive and rescue work, and especially denouncing the licensing of vice. Papers were presented by Julia Ward Howe, Mary A. Livermore, Dr. Elizabeth and Dr. Emily Blackwell, Dr. Kate Bushnell, Mrs. Ballington Booth, Rev. J. M. Cleary, Mrs. J. Ellen Foster, Baron B. de Waltville, Frau Fischer, Lette Berlin, Anna Rice Powell, Madame Marie Marshall, France, who paid a high tribute of praise to Frances E. Willard that brought loud applause.

The second day was under the auspices of the National W. C. T. U., and the splendid program, arranged by Dr. Mary Wood Allen and Mrs. Lydia A. Prescott show grand work and the results will be a wonderful impetus to the good cause.

Welcome came by Mrs. Helen Henrotin. The lady greeted the Social Purity Congress in the name of the Woman's Branch of the World's Congress Auxiliary and then delineated the grand work done for chastity of women unjustly accused by husbands desiring to get rid of them, by the protective society for women and children. She also showed that women should stand by unfortunate women in police courts, and see that justice is done them.

Hon. Elbridge T. Gerry, of New York, sent a startling paper on "Child Prostitution," sickening in its details, and yet insisting that the cancer must be uncovered before remedies can be applied. The revelations of William Stead, that shook the British empire from center to circumference, have a duplicate in the story told in this paper. New York, the great exponent of Western civilization, equally needs its human instincts aroused to stop the inhuman sacrifice of little girls to the moloch of lust.

Mrs. Prescott read well the admirable paper, "Some Causes of Present Day Immorality," written by B. O. Flower, the well-known editor of the Arena. The following extracts show the solution of the social purity problem: "There is something terrible beyond words in the subtle power exerted by both alcoholic stimulants and opium in obliterating all lines of moral rectitude and destroying that high moral nature which is the glory of manhood. Nay, more, their baleful influences reach beyond the victim to his offspring, cursing the unborn, not only with the appetite for liquor, but frequently with insanity, or a brain in which affectional instincts are absent, and in the chamber of whose mind dwell the dreams of an assassin.

What then is our duty? Inaugurate a three-fold crusade:

1. For a childhood resulting from an awakened conscience, the fruit of intelligence and love.

2. For the right of woman in the marriage relation to say when she will become a mother. For the bestowal upon her of individual rights in property interests in common with her husband. For the right of franchise—in a word, for that noble justice which rests on the Golden Rule.

3. For a purer, simpler, less sensuous, less extravagant, less artificial life, with a determined warfare on all things which artificially stimulate passion and lower the moral ideal, chief among which are intoxicants and opium.

A paper by Mrs. Eugene S. Willard, Juneau, Alaska, was upon morality among the Alaskans, in which it was shown that in many respects morality among this so-called uncivilized nation is far above that of America.

Mrs. Josiah Leeds, of Philadelphia, representing the Moral Educational Society, told of the good work done in Pennsylvania, where the society defeated a bill to license prostitution. She also showed the great harm done by such papers as the Police Gazette.

Rev. Joseph H. Flint discussed with vigor the "Psychological Aspect of the Question of Morality," in which he plead for more care over the boys and that they be shielded as are their sisters from these evil influences.

Mrs. Caroline B. Buell, corresponding secretary of the National W. C. T. U., presided well in the afternoon and highly praised Miss Willard's vigorous work in the social purity department.

"The White Cross," organized by Rev. B. F. DeCosta, D. D., New York, in America, and present in an able paper, strikes at the root of the whole matter, and by pledging young men to lives of purity, will forever banish that pitiable thing, a fallen woman.

"Mother" Prindle, the noble matron of Florence Crittenton Mission, New York, thrilled her listeners by depicting the awful traffic in girls and their toilsome rescue through Florence missions established by that grand philanthropist, Mr. Charles N. Crittenton, whom Mother Prindle denominated as one of the noblest men in the world. Her own efforts in saving these poor girls have been wonderful and she was initiated by Miss Willard in the Chicago work. Archbishop Ireland took her speech as a text and denounced in an impassioned manner the slave traffic in girls, and highly praised such rescue work as the Florence Crittenton mission under Mrs. Prindle.

"The Ethics of Dress" was well considered by Mrs. Helen Gilbert Ecob and Mrs. Henrietta Russell. Mrs. Sarah B. Cooper showed the inestimable value of the kindergarten in saving children from impurity, and Professor Woodward delineated "The Good Influence of Manual Training." Mrs. French Sheldon, the African Explorer, spoke with great animation, and Mrs. Mary A. Livermore, Susan B. Anthony and Rev. Anna Garlin Spencer closed the social purity congress by a splendid meeting on the Lord's Day. CHARLTON EDHOLM, Jesus said unto him, If thou canst believe, all things are possible to him that believeth. —Mark 9:23.

We have just got out a beautiful little photograph of the Temple, which we sell for ten cents; every one is greatly pleased with it. All persons who send one dollar to the building fund during the year 1893 will receive the photograph. We find that it is quite expensive to have Willard Hall open all day, as the electric lights have to be kept burning, to show the hall to advantage. Besides, two attendants have to be paid to keep it open, clean it and keep it in order; consequently we have been forced, so as to enable us to cover expenses, to charge the nominal sum of ten cents to visitors between the hours of 9 and 11:45 a. m. and 1:15 to 5 p. m. The hall is open and free of charge to all between the hours of 11:45 a. m. and 1:15 p. m. All who pay for admission are presented with a small photograph of the Temple above alluded to. For two weeks Mr. John G. Woolley has held most memorable noon meetings in Willard Hall. They have been attended by many hundreds, who will be manlier citizens, truer Christians, stronger, steadier and more victorious workers, and better vertebrated church members for the undiluted gospel temperance they received from Mr. Woolley. He is the unflinching friend of the W. C. T. U., and if any W. C. T. U. woman is not his friend she should be ashamed of herself, and the W. C. T. U. ashamed of her

Mrs. Caroline E. Merrick, of New Orleans, is a name greatly beloved by all white-ribboners in the state of Louisiana. To show their appreciation and love for her noble services as state president for the last ten years, the local unions through the state have united in raising $100 to place her name on a tablet in Willard Hall. A check for the above amount has just been received from Mrs. A. M. Zable, of New Orleans, for this purpose. Mrs. Jane P. Drysdale, North Adams, Mass., sends $3.65 for the Miss Tobey tablet. The W. C. T. U., of Wyman, Iowa, sends $1 for the Mrs. Dunham tablet.

The great books of record for the Temple which were ordered some months ago are completed and have been received. With their heavy leather binding and thick parchment paper leaves, they look as they were intended to, to last for centuries. The work of entering in these books the names of all donors who have given one dollar or upwards to the building fund of the Temple is to begin at once. The names will be entered in alphabetical order in each state book, giving place of residence. The vault where these books of record are to be placed has walls four feet thick, the floor paved in marble mosaic. It opens from Willard Hall and is reached by a flight of marble steps. Visitors will be admitted to it. We trust there will be no white-ribbon woman, or L. T. L. boy and girl, but will in some way strive to secure a dollar for the gift fund and thus insure the placing of their names in these books of record that are to go down to the coming generations.

The following children will be sure to have their names recorded in these books: Laura Brink, Denison, Iowa, a little girl who has sent us $3.65, which she earned in various ways; one way was in picking beans and preparing them for market. Little Helen Smith, of Ulysses, Neb., eight years old, sends $3.65, which she earned mostly by clearing the dishes off the table for her mother. Kenneth Randolph, a little ten-years-old girl of Fredericton, N. B., sends $3.65 saved in her mite-box. Little Daisy Bell Carson, of Wyman, Iowa, also gathered $3.65 in her mite-box which she has sent us. Little Emma and Arn Norse, Wellington, Kansas, send their mite-box savings, amounting to $3.65. Little four-years old Lillian-Eves, Evansville, Ind., sends $1.30, the proceeds of the sale of eggs from her temperance hen. Mrs. A. F. Burgess, Crystal, Minn., sends $3.65, which her dear little son, when but two years old, commenced gathering in his mite-box. He never gave up until he got it full; no visitor could escape him. He would go up to them and say, "Give me some pennies to pay for my Temple in Chicago."

Mrs. G. W. Walker, Browningsville, Md., sends $10 in memory of her beloved daughter Rosa, who was a devoted white-ribboner. Mrs. Alice F. Munroe, Berkeley, Cal., sends $3.65, which she says, "I want credited to the name of my dear little girl, many years 'over there' but waiting and watching for me, Emily Nelson Munroe." Mr. N. H. Blosser, Logan, O., sends $20 towards pledge on tablet to the memory of his wife, Austiss O. Blosser. Mrs. L. I. Stiver, Bunker Hill, Ill., sends $2 which she says, "I send in memory of my angel baby, Kenneth. It seems to me it could be put nowhere else where it could do so much good." Mrs. E. R. Parsons sends $1 which was found in her mother's, Mrs. Sarah J. Wilson, Osgood, Ind., pocket-book after death.

A two-cent stamp sent to Mrs. Matilda B. Carse, The Temple, Chicago, will secure a mite-box. Remember, any one placing in the box $2.50 from May 1, 1893, to May 1, 1894, will receive the lovely Columbian souvenir made of aluminum with a cut of the Temple on one side and on the reverse the face of Miss Willard and the founder of the Temple, with suitable inscriptions. All money orders should be made out in the name of the treasurer, William D. Preston, and sent to our financial secretary, Miss Sara Johnson, The Temple, Chicago, Ill.

OH, PURE IN HEART!

BY MARY WOOD ALLEN, M. D.

[Read at World's Social Purity Congress, June 3.]

Oh, pure in heart, to thee 'tis given
  To face the eternal presence now,
To catch a radiant glimpse of heaven,
  And feel God's touch upon thy brow.

But sight of God enlarges sight,
  And thou canst see a sullied earth,
Revolving in the baleful light
  Of passion's flame with ghastly mirth.

Thou seest manhood oft despoiled
  And woman's robes trailed in the dust,
And e'en the pure and trusting child
  Betrayed through her most holy trust.

Oh, pure in heart, to thee 'tis given
  To help lift up a fallen race,
And to build up a glorious heaven
  That still on earth could find a place.

That blessed time when man, as king,
  Shall rule himself with stern control,
When he his passions all shall bring
  Under dominion of the soul.

When woman, strong, and brave and free,
  No longer waits man's royal nod;
And children born in purity
  Shall be a heritage from God.

AUNTIE POLLY PIX TALKS.

Sister Jane's husband says I hain't no politician because I say there is power in the ballot and that is why good, God-fearing, temperance women want it, so as they can help get shet of some of these here "evils of the day"—and the night time, too.

"Why, Polly," says he, "there hain't a mite o' power in the ballot. It's in the caucuses."

"All right," says I, "then let's go there and get the power. I'll go wherever the power is, if I can get there, if it's in the bowels of the airth."

"You don't know what you are talking about," says he. "Why! us men tried it and we couldn't stan' it. It's like gettin' into the slums. They act like very fiends. No, Aunt Polly, it's no use. You can't do nothin'. Why, good men jest have to keep out of it."

"Well," says I, "if that ain't pussylanymouse! Can't stan' it to go where the power is and do suthin' to make the liquor and gamblin' fiends ('you called 'em that,' says I,) right-about-face, but you can set down and be governed by 'em; an' you can let 'em go on settin' their death traps and layin' their snares right where your children have to walk. Oh! Jerome!" says I, "it's no wonder the devil's got the upper hand, when Christian men are more afeared of the saloon-keepers than they are of God. Why, Jerome, you're slaves—every last one of ye, and you've sold yourselves, that's the wust on't—twice sold yerselves—once for their revenue and once for their vote."

"Well, there ain't no use talkin'," says he, walkin' off.

"No more there ain't," says I, "but when them air Republican clubs hev studied up on the equal suffrage business, and Mr. Tracy gets that plank nailed in good and tight, and the time comes, which it surely will, when good women'll hold that ballot which hain't got the power, these same God-fearing women, who never get scairt—when they are doin' right—will go into them caucuses; and Aunt Polly, if she is an old maid, has enough faith in men folks to know there won't be nothin' to be scairt about. We'll clean house; we'll begin with the cellar, and go clean through to the ridge-pole, an' then the 'housetop saints' needn't be afeared to come down an' sit in the parlor, or even go down cellar—for a change."

To-day man stands colossal. To-day he has temples and arts, eloquence, poetry and song. To-day he has universities, colleges, asylums, hospitals, refinements, humanities, churches and a death-bed, all lighted with the matchless radiance and love of that immortal gift, eternal life through Jesus Christ. He is learning that it is better to educate the criminal than to stone him. Better to liberate and educate the man than to enslave him. Better to close the saloon than support its paupers. Better to cultivate and develop the child than to whip and frighten him.—F. E. W.

HOW THE MOTHER OF THE SALVATION ARMY BROUGHT UP HER CHILDREN.

BY FRANCES E. WILLARD.

Some papers on the training of children have reminded me of a conversation recently had with a lady who was an intimate friend of the great mother of the Salvation Army. From her I learned that Mrs. Booth determined early in her married life and with almost passionate earnestness, that she "would never have a wicked child." This she was wont to declare to her little flock that finally numbered eight. She often told them that she "would pray her children dead rather than have them depart from righteousness." One of her daughters recalls how her mother was wont to gather the little ones around her and pray that they might rather die than ever become wicked, and the thrill she felt when her mother's hot tears dropped on her bare neck while she prayed.

This undying zeal was the less remarkable in a woman who had read the Bible through eight times before she was twelve years of age and had wrought into the warp and woof of her nature its law as well as its gospel. Sometimes she was very severe against what are called "society" sins, and especially spoke out her mind when she was preaching at a seaside resort. One of her daughters said as they left the church together, "I think, mother, you are a little too heavy on them." Whereupon Mrs. Booth responded, "Ah! you are like the rest of them, pleading for the syrup without the sulphur." One of her constant reiterations was, "I not only wish to know what you are converted from, but what you are converted to."

This forceful spirit had perhaps its earliest manifestations in Mrs. Booth as a mother when her son, Bramwell, was but six months old, and for the first time showed symptoms of rebellion in the refusal to lie down in his little cradle. He fought, struggled and roared; his young mother held him one-half hour exactly as she wanted him to lie in the cradle, and although he began to grow blue in the face she never swerved for an instant from her decision. From that time he never gave her any trouble. His friends call him a seraphic spirit; one whose knowledge of the higher ranges of Christian experience cannot be doubted by any who know his daily life.

Talking with a young mother who had come to her for counsel, Mrs. Booth said with great earnestness: "Never let anything pass, that is my motto. It is the little foxes that spoil the vines, it is the slight departures in little children from what their mother has taught them that undermine her power. If, when they are small and easily guided, you polarize them toward yourself in obedience, faith and love, they will never wander away. You must not let them cheat at games, you must not let them use any words of doubtful tendency, for if one's words are right down to the smallest particular, one's deeds are almost sure to be the same." If in their simplest play Mrs. Booth saw her children attempting to overreach, she would stop them, then and there, no matter who was present, and tell them "no child of hers could do a thing like that."

When her son, Ballington, now at the head of the Salvation Army forces in America, was fourteen years of age, she noticed in him a tendency to exaggerate in speech, and checked him with the words: "If you go on like that you will be a liar, and no child of mine must ever become that." She was at this time almost too ill to move, but she told the boy to go up stairs and take off his jacket. He pitied his mother so much to think of the undertaking before her that he burst into tears, crying out, "Let father do it," although he knew that his father was much more severe; but his mother followed him to his room, saying, after a most earnest talk, "I have impressed these views on your mind; it is now my painful duty to impress them on your body," and she gave him as sound a thrashing as she was able.

Mrs. Booth was urging her friend thus to take her own little ones in hand. "Oh, but!" was the response, "you have more power in your little finger than I have in my whole body." "Never mind," said Mrs. Booth, "then you must believe for fierceness. Behold the goodness and severity of God; that is what the Scripture says. You dread, perhaps, to do this; you think your children will not love you. Let me show you a letter from my son in America; it reads like that of a lover." And so it did, as the two women bent over its beautiful pages, and the mother, whose goodness and severity had helped to mould his character, shed happy tears upon its loving lines.

I am neither indorsing nor condemning this method of bringing up children; the exact opposite was the one my mother used; she never struck me a blow in her life, almost never gave me a command, and yet I remember writing her in my maturer years: "I cannot be driven by Niagara, but you have always led me with a straw." But the question of training children is many-sided. Inheritance, environment and character produce such different specimens that it is well for us to consider various methods, and that of Mrs. Booth merits our thought for two reasons at least. First, it was followed by one of the greatest and best women that ever lived; second—it has produced a family of eight children who are probably by their combined efforts doing more good to-day than any other mother's eight children that can be named.

WORDS TO THE WISE—A COMMON NATURE.

BY ABBY MORTON DIAZ.

"It seems plain to me," continued Aunt Phosie, "and it seems important to see it, that apart from its clothing and its housing one human body would get no more respect than another; and that putting on them bishop's robes or marketmen's frocks does not make them to differ any more than various kinds of wrappings can make broom sticks to differ. Every one of these human bodies is liable to the same feelings, and death changes them all to the same kind of nothingness.

"Also, a pleasant smile will light up any face and cause it to gratify the beholder, and anger will becloud any countenance and ruin its appearance. But now mark! Just here we are shifting our ground. When we speak of anger or pleasure or grief we quit bodily substances. For these cannot light themselves up, nor make scowls, nor start tears. This seems a little queer. I mean a little queer that the bodily stuff should be set in motion by what is not body's at all; for instance, grief will start tears, yet of course water cannot feel grief. And then there is blood, a substance that can never feel an emotion of shame, yet shame sends it to our faces and turns them red. Some say that emotion does such things by acting on the heart, but the bodily heart is as inanimate as water and blood.

"It is curious how my thinking leads me on to see the alikeness continuing from the body, which books tell us is biggest part water and lime, up to the we or the I, or whatever it is that enjoys and grieves and loves and smiles and likes praise, and gets mad, and is stingy or generous or cross or good-humored and shows pity, vanity, pride, scorn. Whatever it may be, this I is just about the same everywhere.

"The other day waiting in a depot, I saw a nice-looking girl scrubbing the floor in one of the waiting-rooms, hurrying with all her might, and now and then speaking with the depot woman. I was fixing my front hair a little at the looking-glass and straightening out my bonnet, and making it stay on, and bowing up the strings, and poking the frowsles away from my eyes, and it took me some time and I never thought of listening, but could not help hearing, and by their few words of talk I found that he was coming to take "Mary" to a dance, and she was in a great hurry to go home and make herself ready, and he was on his way, and it was about time for his train, and she was afraid he would call at the house for her before she'd have a chance to crimp her bangs over and get her best clothes on. She told about some of the other girls and what they were going to wear. She kept looking at the clock. The depot woman seemed deeply interested and finally she took the rest of the floor to do, and sent the girl home, and I hardly ever witnessed a happier countenance or a more lively tread as she hurried her things on and started.

"I remembered this the other night at Col. Saunders' when their Maud was dressing herself for a grand ball. I noticed that he was brought into the conversation in just the same way, and Miss Maud was as particular about her bang-crimps as Mary was, though a hair-dresser did them; and I don't doubt that when Mary looked at her own face in some cheap little looking-glass in some dingy little attic-room, she was just as pleased with seeing a pretty face in there as Maud was when she stood on the soft carpets in her elegant chamber and looked at hers in the great gilt mirror. And when he rang the bell and was let in, Maud colored up just as Mary did when the depot woman joked her about the young man that was coming on the train. Both the girls were going to have a good time with their lively associates where there would be quickstep music and lights and gayety and motion, and where he would be hovering round and making the heart to sing its 'oh, be joyful!'

"And just so it is with fun and drollery. One day when I was in that same depot I walked past two hard-working, young trunk handlers. They were fooling with each other and laughing and joking, and standing with their hands on each other's shoulders, and they seemed just as full of fun and nonsense, and of liking for each other, there in their working clothes, as some of the dressed up, lively young fellows I have seen at the Colonel's.

"Laughing and drollery come by nature, if they come at all, and so does true love and so does keeping time to music, and what comes by nature shows a common nature."

A LITTLE TEMPERANCE MAN.

BY FANNY L. FANCHER.

Yes, I'm a little temperance man,
Not very big or old;
But mamma says she wouldn't sell
Me for Australia's gold.

Yet dear and precious though I am,
I might be ruined quite,
If I should let old Satan tempt me
From the path of right.

If I should smell or touch or taste
His wicked, sinful bowl,
Which spoils the body, we can see,
And God's word says the soul.

And old tobacco, too, so vile,
Will ne'er taint my sweet breath,
Or sap my strength, such poison bad
Harms health and hastens death!

Then help, ye voters! shut saloons,
Close up the wretched devil's den
Which ruins now so many boys
That would grow noble temperance men.

THE CHILDREN.

A dreary place would be this earth,
Were there no little people in it;
The song of life would lose its mirth,
Were there no children to begin it;
No little forms like buds to grow,
And make the admiring heart surrender;
No little hands on breast and brow
To keep the thrilling love-chords tender.

The sterner souls would grow more stern,
Unfeeling natures more inhuman,
A man to stoic coldness turn,
And woman would be less than woman.
Life's song indeed would lose its charm,
Were there no babies to begin it,
A doleful place this world would be
Were there no little people in it.

BE TRUE.

Listen, my boy, I've a word for you,
And this is the word, "Be true! be true!"
At work or at play, in darkness or light,
Be true, be true, and stand for the right.

List, little maid, I've a word for you,
'Tis the very same, "Be true, be true!"
For truth is the sun, and falsehood the night;
Be true, little maid, and stand for the right.

COMPANY K.

BY EVA K. JONES.

Frank Thurston was enjoying a vacation visit at his Uncle John's. His Cousin Tom, a year older than himself, had been showing him their smart little Minnesota town.

"Well, it's something bigger than ours," remarked Frank, "and you're maybe a little ahead in tall buildings, but we beat you in one thing—we haven't any of these horrible rum holes," nodding contemptuously at a curtained window they were passing.

"But a fellow can't help that. I don't suppose we could get rid of them in Hunterville if we tried," said Tom.

"I tell you we made them leave in Sanborn," Frank answered, "and we keep the fight right up and keep them out."

"'We,'" said Tom. "You don't mean that fourteen-year-olds like you cut any great figure in it? What army uniform did you wear?"

"Well, we did figure in it just the same. Here is my badge, now. See? And ours is Company K, Senior Loyal Temperance Legion. We carry the handsomest banner in parade of any society in town. We seniors made it ourselves, too."

"Well, I'm blest," said Tom, eyeing Frank's silver pin admiringly, "if I understand what all that stands for. How did you come by your Legion and how does it work? That is what they used to call the Band of Hope that they had for the little tots here, but we big boys thought it was fussy and no fun for us."

"We run our own society with our own officers and plan of work committee. Of course we have an older superintendent, Mrs. Leonard, and I can tell you she's not fussy. She is a brick, and full of ideas and plans, but putting us always ahead to think over and decide our own work. We have some teachers, too, and they all are ready to help us every way."

"What is it? Just a school?"

"More like a company under its own captain," said Frank. "You ought to have been at our state L. T. L. convention this year. Only graduates and those studying for diplomas could be voting delegates. We've lots of work laid out for the coming year."

"What work—after you have graduated?" demanded Tom.

The boys were resting under one of Uncle John's big shade trees by this time. "Here is my diploma in my pocket. Now I'll tell you," said Frank; and then he explained how much work the diploma stood for, and what work each of the seals represented. There were two seals on his diploma already. "And now I am working for the scarlet seal, reading the World's Fair course in The Advance Guard," said Frank.

"But how does all that knock out your saloons?"

"Well, it helps. Most folks don't understand all this we are learning, or care much for the facts, and we are all the time spouting it, and waking them up. Then, every quarter we hold a public meeting. We have had four Demorest medal contests, and managed them all ourselves. I have a silver medal. I won it in the third contest. And by these meetings and other ways we have earned a hundred dollars the past year, and put it all into temperance work. Every family in our town now has a temperance paper. We paid for it for a good many poor families. Don't you fancy that helps?"

"Yes, but, Frank, see here. You boys can't vote. And it is votes that put the saloon out or in. We could get rid of saloons if we only had enough of the right sort of votes."

"And so you want to make them, Tom, as we do. The lessons we learn and the books we read are chuck full of facts and reasons, and we are all the while arguing with the rum fellows and telling them what's true about liquor and why it's true, and all about license and moderate drinking and everything. We convince lots of young fellows, and sometimes old ones. We have had temperance votes enough now for five years, and are getting a bigger majority all the time.

"And then we have stacks of fun at our meetings, too," continued Frank. "We do a good deal of business of one kind and another, and always have a part of the hour for something entertaining. I'm going to work while I am out here to write a prize essay. About twenty of us boys and girls are going to write. The subject is 'Uncle Sam's Boys and Uncle Sam's Beer.' For prize we will have our choice among some first-class books. We have two prize essays a year; and the meeting for the public where the best eight are read is the biggest thing of the year."

"That must be fun," declared Tom. "I'd like that sort of a Legion, just young folks by ourselves. If we only had a leader and some teachers to start in and help steady the thing."

"Well, let's get Uncle John and Aunt Mary to take hold, and they can get others. You can find young folks for the members, and there you are. There is no end to the things your Legion can do after you take the pledge and fairly begin. You can make it mighty lively for your Hunterville saloons before a great while, you'll find. Hurrah for the Hunterville Senior L. T. L.! Here comes Aunt Mary now. Let's tell her about it."

A TINY SALVATIONIST.

You have all heard of the Salvation Army. And, no doubt, many of you have seen its members going about the streets with their big blue bonnets and blue dresses trimmed with red. At the great convention of Salvationists, which was held in New York not long ago, the youngest recruit of the army was brought upon the platform to be baptized. Her name is Myrtle Theodora Booth. And she is the daughter of Commander Booth and the lovely Mrs. Booth, whose beauty and sweetness add many a name to the ranks of the army. "Myrtle" signifies "love," and "Theodora" means "gift of God."—Selected.

DEAR BOYS AND GIRLS:—I rode out to the World's Fair the other day, and where do you suppose I went? To the Children's Building, of course! And I can't begin to tell you all about it in one short letter. On entering the doorway, I found myself in a room which had been fitted up with all sorts of gymnastic apparatus. Here the boys and girls were having a merry time, and the railing was crowded with their friends and sightseers. In the glass cases round the hall were exhibits of child life in other lands. I peeped at one of the kindergartens through the glass doors which keep out the people, and I saw a dozen happy little ones in there. In the crêche just beyond the little babies were received, some being rocked in cradles and others playing among soft cushions on the floor. One of the pleasant, white-capped nurses laughed as she held three babies on her knee. And everybody seemed to be having such a good time! I couldn't help but think of the mothers, and be glad for them, that they were thus given an opportunity to see the great Fair.

I met two nieces from Delaware out there one day, who didn't recognize "Aunt Jane." Now don't you think that very queer? Your

And Aunt Jane would like to see you all! The cozy cornerers who find their way up to the little "den" in the Temple will be very welcome.

I am a temperance boy, and am going to join the Band of Hope. Another boy said he would join it if I would. I have been distributing bills for temperance to-day. I will send ten cents to Miss Gordon for the fountain.

The Cozy Corner welcomes the temperance boy who helps others. That's what we are pledged to do, isn't it, Lee?

I am thinking the Cozy Corner is a nice thing. My brother and I have been cracking some of the Soft-shelled Nuts. We think it is fun, even if we do not eat them. My papa is a temperance man, and votes it, and so will Merle and I when we grow up.

There's good promise for the better times in that last line, little nephew.

I have enjoyed the reading in THE UNION SIGNAL very much. I am trying to do all I can in the great temperance cause. We have quite a strong prohibition sentiment in this place although some are trying to do all they can to bitterly oppose it. MILLIE MATTHEWS

"Keep sweet" and earnest, Millie, and the opposition will vanish.

I would like to join the Cozy Corner. Auntie takes THE UNION SIGNAL. I like to hear her read the stories. I am ten years old, and when I get to be a woman I am going to be a W. C. T. U., like my auntie, then I will make King Alcohol tremble. I am going to send ten cents for the children's fountain in Chicago.

I am sure that you will be a good and useful woman, little niece, and the Cozy Cornerers are all going to help to topple King Alcohol off his throne.

THE W. C. T. U. IN POLITICS.

The story of "our evolution," told in these columns in our issue of April 13, would be incomplete without some reference to the political attitude of this organization. How the W. C. T. U. "got into politics" is a question our workers are constantly called upon to elucidate.

The why of its getting in is obvious. Wherever the rum power is, there the W. C. T. U. purposes to be also. The same forces which gave our organization being and stimulated its growth and development operated also to make it a political factor.

Some are born into politics, some achieve politics, some have politics thrust upon them. Of the W. C. T. U. it may be said that each of these assertions is true. From the hour of its birth its entrance into politics was a foregone conclusion; its branching-out character led, naturally and logically, to the achievement of political influence, and then, when the proper time had come, the "grand old Republican party," more than any other agency, became instrumental in thrusting politics upon it.

Looking about them with perceptions quickened by the events of the Crusades, our women discovered that the trail of the serpent was over all the fair heritage of manhood and womanhood, and following systematically the track of the destroyer they traced it to its lair. They found the rum power entrenched in the center of government, the hub of the political wheel.

Commencing the attack at long range, the white-ribbon army approached nearer and nearer to the enemy's stronghold from every direction, until now it may be said to completely surround it, and for eight years the movements of the besiegers have caused the aforesaid wheel to move in a most eccentric orbit, with spasmodic gyrations decidedly alarming to those who still cling to old party traditions and partisan theories.

When in the course of its evolutionary (and revolutionary) career, the W. C. T. U. arrived before the bars which custom and prejudice and the rum power have put up between woman and politics, its leaders realized as never before just what the sweeping away of those barriers would mean for the home, and without hesitation they fell into line with an organization which had been storming this fort for a generation or more.

Ten years of petitioning had prepared our workers for the next inevitable step. It had evolved the idea that voting by ballot was in every sense more dignified, more effective and consumed much less time than voting by signature. So they established the department of franchise and joined with the woman suffragists in keeping up a continual knocking at the doors of state and national government.

Meanwhile, assured that sooner or later these doors would be opened unto them, they possessed their souls in patience and set to work to secure the next best thing to direct governmental power, viz, indirect power, and while this advance movement, like that for the ballot, was not accomplished without slight friction (perfectly natural when we consider the diverse sects and sections represented in our organization) the result has been a promotion of Christian temperance far beyond their anticipations.

At the Louisville convention in 1882, the W. C. T. U. first ventured to give utterance to the policy which thereafter determined its relation to political parties. It was with some trepidation yet with a profound sense of duty, that after prayerful consideration our National President and a few others who, like her, possess the "open vision," inaugurated the new departure in a resolution declaring that "we will endeavor to influence the best men in all communities to commit themselves to that party that shall give to them the best embodiment of prohibition principles and will most surely protect their homes."

We are reminded here of "Bill" Nye's droll remark concerning his own new-born ideas. He refers to them as shivering and shrinking in necessary seclusion, waiting for the time to come when he can properly clothe and present them to a cold and critical world. It is true that if a new idea be expressed in language too striking or aggressive it antagonizes those who would otherwise be its friends. As Miss Willard says, "People are more afraid of words than of ideas." We can imagine, therefore, the care and solicitude with which the framers of this first political resolution clothed the thought (which could bear seclusion no longer) in its mouse-colored garments, and sent it forth on its mission.

As no party was named the resolution excited very little antagonism, and was adopted by the convention almost unanimously.

The following year at Detroit a noticeable change was apparent in the "political" resolution. Its costume was decidedly more assertive: "Resolved, That we lend our influence to that party," etc. No longer "they" and "their" and "them," but "we" and "our" and "us." Not merely as individuals to influence the "best men" did W. C. T. U. women commit themselves, but as an organization to influence parties.

In view of the fact that the presidential nominating conventions of the four different parties in the field were to meet the following summer, this convention adopted a memorial asking for a plank in their platforms in favor of submitting the question of national prohibition to the people, and Miss Willard was appointed to present the same.

A misunderstanding concerning the form of the memorial caused an unfortunate delay, and prevented the possibility of securing the million names promised by the convention. Hence, the document was signed only by the officers of the National W. C. T. U.

Realizing the immense advantage to the cause of prohibition which would have come through the educative influence of a popular canvass in the interests of a petition of this character, and the coöperation of numbers of influential men in the old parties which it would undoubtedly have secured, our President was grievously disappointed. However, "whatever ought to happen will happen," and "there's a divinity that shapes our ends, rough hew them how we may."

The memorial was presented in turn to the Greenback, Republican, Democratic and Prohibition conventions, the Prohibition party having arranged to hold its convention last in deference to the wish of our President "to give the Republicans one more chance."

The Greenback delegates received the memorial with applause, but the "temperance plank" suffered a woeful sawing off at both ends in the committee. It reported that a constitutional amendment relative to the liquor traffic ought to be submitted, but whether that amendment should prohibit or perpetuate, was left to conjecture.

With faith and hope in the ascendant Miss Willard carried the memorial to the "party of moral ideas." Senator Blair, the prohibition standard-bearer in Republican ranks, secured for her a fifteen minutes hearing before the Committee on Resolutions to which it was referred. Next day, seated on the platform of the Exposition building in Chicago, our President listened eagerly to the reading of the resolutions by Chairman McKinley, but alas! "ours" was conspicuous by its absence. There was no allusion to the great question. The report was adopted without one dissenting voice, notwithstanding the fact that the delegates from the prohibition states of Maine, Iowa and Kansas were out in full force.

The Democratic convention responded to our appeal by following its ancient and honorable (?) custom of declaring against "sumptuary law." What better fate could be expected for the memorial at the hands of the two old parties whose convention drink bills at the Chicago hotel amounted to something enormous?

From Chicago to Pittsburgh our discouraged representative wended her way with the rejected petition. From the platform of old Lafayette hall Miss Willard looked down upon men and women delegates, whose faces, many of them, had been familiar for years in W. C. T. U. conventions. It was, as she said, a veritable "home-gathering." In a three-minute speech she personally presented the memorial, which was immediately adopted in open convention, amid ringing cheers, the waving of handkerchiefs and a general uprising.

At last the W. C. T. U. knew without a doubt to which party it was committed! At last it had found its political home. In the party where its prohibition principles had already found political recognition, where many of the Republican war-horses had already cast their lot, in whose councils women were already honored members, the W. C. T. U. found a platform constructed from end to end upon the temperance plan.

Thus was the W. C. T. U. fairly and squarely launched upon the "turbulent sea" of politics, and at the next annual convention, held in St. Louis, the political resolution came out in a brand new dress in honor of the event.

After reaffirming the position taken at the two previous conventions, the eleventh annual convention enunciated the following: "As we now know which national party gives us the desired embodiment of the principles for which our ten years' labor has been expended, we will continue to lend our influence to the national political organization which declares in its platform for National Prohibition and Home Protection."

This convention is noted for the long and brilliant debate which this resolution called forth—"An argument that packed the church and crowded the aisles hour after hour with standing listeners," and which proved that American women had come into politics and come to stay. The vote stood (on the ayes and noes) one hundred and ninety-five in favor to forty-eight against the adoption of the resolution.

Of the events that followed—the defeat of the Republican party for the first time in twenty-four years and the vials of wrath that were poured out upon the heads of Prohibitionists in general and the W. C. T. U. in particular, it is unnecessary to speak. Suffice it to say that the pendulum of public opinion has swung back, churches have reopened their doors, the platforms of our state and National conventions are crowded as of yore with eminent representatives of church and state, and political declarations scarcely cause a ripple in the great assemblies. The W. C. T. U., never weak, has waxed strong, and "increased in wisdom and in stature and in favor with God and man."

THE INDIVIDUAL MEMBER OF THE LOCAL UNION.

An article in a recent number of THE UNION SIGNAL entitled "The Local Union" was so replete with good things that we cannot refrain from making it a text for the re-emphasizing of some of its thoughts. What impressed us most forcibly was the stress laid upon the local union as a factor in the world-wide work of the W. C. T. U. It is so natural for the members of the individual unions to feel that their work counts for but little. We often hear them say so; more especially in country neighborhoods, where it is difficult for them to get together frequently and where it can but seem as if the work done consisted only in "belonging." It is to just such half discouraged hearts that we want to emphasize the thought that the "local union" is the W. C. T. U. We have no World's union per se; our World's union is made up of delegates and representatives from the various National unions. We have no National union by itself; it consists of the constituencies of the various state unions. We have no state union existing as a separate entity; our state unions are made up of the membership of the various local unions. Therefore, when we reduce the subject to its last analysis, the most important part in W. C. T. U. economy is that played by the local unions.

Suppose we were simply a vast aggregate of membership without individual branches; suppose each woman who joined became simply a member of the W. C. T. U. and had no affiliation with any particular part of the organization. We should have bulk, greater perhaps than we now have; but we should not have cohesion. We should cover a vast area, but it would be at the expense of all centralization. Moreover, when it came to any effective work, where would be the instruments of our working? As the organization is to-day constituted, we can lay our hands upon any point in all the vast territory covered by state, nation or world, simply through the medium of the local union. If there were no local unions there would soon be nothing to work upon and no tools to operate with.

Then, too, who believes that the moral force of one great society, composed of a half million of members, could be as great as that same moral force differentiated into countless individual societies, bound each to the other and each to all by a bond of union so close that it is but rarely broken? Does not the very fact that each one who joins our ranks begins first of all to "work over against her own house" explain, in a great degree, the source of our power? The Woman's Christian Temperance Union is no splendid beacon fire, blazing away, a world-wide wonder, upon the top of some vast hill. Its light is rather the concentrated radiance which arises from countless hearth-fires, each burning brightly "For God and Home and Native Land." It is good to "belong" to the whole army; it is good, if one cannot belong to an individual union, to throw in one's influence with the work through some such means as the Somerset union affords; but it is infinitely better to be the burden-bearing, hard-toiling member of some individual union, losing thought ofttimes, no doubt, of the vastness of the universal work because of the individual perplexities; only awakening at intervals of conventions or some great meeting, to the fact that she is keeping step with a world-wide army; but keeping step, nevertheless, and by just so much as she is doing her local work faithfully. For, if it be true that the local union makes the World's union possible, it is equally true that the individual member is necessary to the existence of the local union.

Did you ever think what makes the difference between a live union and one which can lay no claim to that distinctive adjective? In by far the greater number of instances the life of a union may be traced to a half dozen of its members; sometimes it may be traced to one member. Wealth, social standing, beautiful surroundings, favorable opportunities for work, education, talents—all these count for nothing in the working force of a union if they be not permeated with, and baptized by, that subtle, indefinable power which we call life. We could not find a better name though we might attempt some abstruse definition as to the nature of this life. It is the power of God himself; the sublime enthusiasm which permeates all nature; the overflowing vitality and consecration of purpose which is apparent everywhere in the world about us. It is this, working through the individual member of the individual union, which has made the W. C. T. U. a possibility.

We have in thought a member of a small union in one of the small states. She is, by the way, a very "small" member; a tiny little body, without great talents of any kind, save that rarest of all talents, the power to love with enthusiasm and constancy. She has thrown her little body and great heart absolutely into the work of the W. C. T. U. She loves it with a fidelity that is almost touching; she shows her love in countless ways, small in themselves, which, nevertheless, make up a mighty aggregate. She is never absent from a meeting when it is within the range of possibility for her to be present; her president knows that, whoever else may fail her, Miss —— may be depended upon. She has such a cheery little face and such a bright, helpful way of nodding her head when anything pleases her that the speaker is sure to fall into the habit of looking to her for encouragement. She lives near the state headquarters, and often visits them. She glides in so quietly that one hardly knows she is there, and, if she finds the workers unusually busy, she is sure to let them know that she has not come to hinder, but only to give a bright smile, to leave a flower, some fruit, or a newspaper clipping which has impressed her. She makes modest little suggestions about the work which are invariably thoughtful and helpful. In her own union she is sure to find out all the sick and the needy, and her white ribbon is never absent from her cloak or her dress, and always means eternal opposition to all forms of evil. Those who know her best feel that, though countless women will have a more brilliant record in W. C. T. U. annals, there are very few of whom one can be so absolutely certain that the Master will say of her, "She hath done what she could."

Think what our work would be like if each one of the two hundred thousand women who make up its vast aggregate were like this one; not necessarily like her in her special methods of working, for "there are diversities of gifts," but like her in singleness of purpose and consecration to our aims. Why, the Woman's Christian Temperance Union would take the world for God before the powers of evil could realize that their strongholds were assailed, if we marched forth to our glorious war with an army of such absolutely devoted, self-oblivious souls. This little woman's work, which is given to the duty which comes nearest at hand, is felt throughout the world, for the help she gives her local and state officers is felt in the work of the state; through the state president it reaches the deliberations of the nation, from the nation it goes on to the world. Verily, that there are "bands of ribbon white around the world" to-day, is only possible because there are bands of ribbon white around countless pure hearts, in busy cities, in quiet country neighborhoods; in every broad land upon which the sun shines.

Not "less telescopic and more microscopic," but more telescopic and more microscopic, should be our work. Reaching constantly out to the regions beyond, both of thought and of actual territory; but reaching out to them in a more and more assured faith, because our work is ever more broadening, deepening and taking on grander forms of expression in the hearts and lives of the individual members of the local unions.

"No other sense is equal to actual sight," reads an ancient proverb, and we believe it since visiting the Minneapolis Central W. C. T. U. Coffee House. We had heard much of the good food, excellent service and satisfactory profits of this temperance restaurant and were prejudiced in its favor, but even our high expectations were more than realized by the enjoyment of a dainty meal at a reasonable price and a tour of inspection through the large four-story building, chaperoned by the genial manager, Mrs. S. V. Avery. This coffee-house, which is by all odds the most popular eating place in Minneapolis, is under the general control of a board appointed annually by the Central union, four of the members being officers of the union. Aside from the large dining rooms where an average of two thousand daily meals are served, there is a lunch room for young women, who bring their lunch and order a hot drink or some other delicacy at nominal price to supplement it. Nearly one hundred and fifty saleswomen come from one store alone. Easy chairs, papers and piano afford rest and cheer during the noon hour and testify to the thoughtful, generous policy of the board. About one hundred are employed in the restaurant and many of the waiters being students in the state university, the service is rendered in a delightful spirit of courtesy. No meals are served to guests on Sunday, but the large family breakfast together at eight o'clock, adjourning soon after to the assembly room for devotional exercises. When any unusual service is rendered by the employés under trying circumstances, as at the time of the Christian Endeavor convention two years ago, the union shows its appreciation by a special gift. Sandwiches and coffee are served to firemen at the large conflagrations, and the pieces from the table, instead of being "warmed over" are given to poor children. The Loyal Temperance Legion, which meets in the building every Saturday afternoon, is given a lunch, also a basket of food and a ticket for food during the week. A cooking school, which has met with phenomenal success, is another adjunct of the coffee-house, and embraces classes for ladies, wage-earners, cooks, nurses and children. As a result of this success and a visit to the cooking school of several members of the school board who were served with an excellent meal prepared by the young pupils, it has been decided to introduce cooking into one of the public schools of Minneapolis as a regular course of study. The object of the coffee house is stated thus: "To carry on the restaurant business in a homelike and systematic way and provide comfortable rooms for guests, aiming thus to meet a public want and secure patronage that shall give the union an income to be used in work for God and humanity." Aside from the large benevolent work connected directly with the coffee-house, one thousand, three hundred dollars was handed over to the union last year. Space alone forbids the mention of the other excellent enterprises of this wide-awake union.

Many of our readers erroneously suppose that the World's Congresses are held in the World's Fair Grounds at Jackson Park. This is not the case, however, for these fruitful gatherings are held in the Memorial Art Palace of the Chicago Art Institute—a solid and spacious building of gray granite, on the Lake Front Park, Michigan avenue opposite Adams street. The structure contains two large audience rooms, capable of seating three thousand people each. Thirty-three halls and six committee rooms are also within the building, and are used for offices of the World's Congress Auxiliary, for special sessions and conferences. A group of congresses on kindred topics has been assigned for each week. Those for the balance of June and for July, commencing on the dates given, and lasting one week, are as follows: June 19.—Commerce and Finance: 1. Bankers and Financiers. 2. Boards of Trade. 3. General Booth, in giving out the little boxes in which he asks for a half-penny a week, said, "Help to save Lazarus; instead of having him under the table, let him be upon it or beside it along with you; put in a half-penny for him each Sunday morning." The white-ribbon army might well take up this moderate but sweeping method of adding to its sinews of war.

An invalid sister in Mexico sends this good suggestion: "Can each of us not celebrate this Exposition year by enlisting in the temperance army one who is now indifferent to the fray? Remember our forces would be doubled if each one did that. If there is no one near whom you can interest, write earnestly to some distant friend and send copies of The Union Signal; rest assured it will speak clearly and eloquently. Let us have our numbers doubled before the next Convention!"

One of the very few husbands whom we have ever heard speak thus to his wife is Canon Wilberforce. She had made one of those clever observations for which she is justly famed. It was at dinner, and looking across to her with a reflective air the brilliant Canon said: "That thought of yours ought to be carefully considered. You have put the matter in a new light." It occurred to me that if more good men would speak so to the bright women who share their earthly destiny it would be morein the interest of universal progression and good will.

This is an age that cares vastly more about deeds than about words. There has been such an avalanche of words, and people have grown weary of the facility with which "profession mocks performance." It is quite likely that the tendency towards the working out of creeds into deeds rather than into formula will constantly increase, and this is well for its "ends" weigh and reasons weigh. For instance: a house is built with special reference to the sun. This calculation enters into the entire basis of reasoning by which the house is placed and fitted out. Its windows are the most prominent feature that the house shows and they are for the explicit purpose of admitting the sun's rays. There is no need to put up a sign in the front of the house making this statement. If a man were a sun-worshipper it would be absurd to have such a sign up as a token of his loyalty, the windows themselves tell the whole story. This is equally true of a Christian life, as Whittier puts it: "The windows of my soul I throw wide open to the sun." If one does this his friends and neighbors are sure to find it out, indeed, they cannot help knowing it. It is not words nor vows, but the way one builds one's life and character that shows whether he is in earnest or not.

This exquisite bit of description is abstracted from a personal letter to On Duty, written by that delightful correspondent, Mrs. Elizabeth Wheeler Andrew:

"Dr. Bushnell and I are at the Priory, an exquisitely beautiful country place of Lady Henry Somerset's, only a few minutes walk from the 'cottage,' where she and the rest are usually as busy as bees. This is the quaintest, airiest old house, which has been in Lady Henry's family since the time of William and Mary. We sleep in the richest carved alcove, off a bed-chamber about thirty-five or forty feet square. We look out on the greenest, sweetest stretch of upland, bordered by huge trees, many of which are in full flower, while in the foreground is a garden laid out in the precise English style, with a fresh, round pool of water where gold fishes dart all day long. Lavish beds of yellow and dark red wall-flowers and blue forget-me-nots are just before me, while great trees loaded with pink rhododendrons are scattered here and there. We go to the cottage by the loveliest pathway through the woods, smelling the lilacs and hedges of white and pink 'may' as we go. The charms of this rambling, delightful old place can never be told. There is an ancient sun-dial in the grounds and a queer old clock and bell on the lobby. Inside you could lose yourself in the windings and turnings of the halls and stairways. In the great hall, there is an elegantly carved chimney-piece which must be very historic, as well as a triumph of art—the coat of arms of Lady Henry's family form the center. It is of dark ancient oak, very lofty and grand. The library is an old musty place but wildly fascinating with its rows on rows of leather-bound volumes, many of which must be very rare and valuable. I feel as if I were living in a sort of fairy-land. How good God is to us after all our hard toil and long journeyings, to bring us to such a lovely resting-place."

KENTUCKY.

GOOD NEWS.

"The Lord hath done great things, whereof we are glad." The first good news is from Owensboro. The union there had dwindled down until only nine had paid their dues for 1893, but Rev. Sam Jones went there in May to begin a series of meetings, and then King Alcohol trembled. The religious interest was never so aroused before in that city. He asked at one meeting all who were willing to pledge themselves to work against the liquor traffic in city and county to stand up, and over four thousand men and women arose. He called a meeting of the W. C. T. U. for Friday afternoon, and when the time came the house was full of earnest men and women, ready for work. He urged all to work in union, and one hundred and ninety-seven names were enrolled for the W. C. T. U. At the next meeting many more new names were added. The Owensboro Inquirer, an evening paper, has offered a column for W. C. T. U. items and general temperance work. The Rural Home Journal, a monthly paper, has also sent the women word that their columns are open to them. Services will be held every Sunday afternoon in the jail, and the union will petition the city council to issue no more licenses to saloon-keepers. The women "propose to move immediately upon the works," and preparatory to the attack, a prayer-meeting will be held in Settle Chapel. Surely every woman's heart in the W. C. T. U. ranks will beat time as it bids them "Give to the winds thy fears." Two saloons have already closed, and the business has fallen off since the meetings closed, but the whisky element is not discouraged, and say that this temperance spasm will not last. In this may they be disagreeably disappointed.

It is said to have been a most pathetic sight during one of the meetings when Sam Jones asked all whose homes and lives had been made miserable by whisky to stand up. Five or six hundred women arose, and standing there mutely, pitifully testified against this evil "which cannot be licensed without sin." Do not these blighted lives, these wretched homes rise up, not by hundreds but by thousands in our own state, swift witnesses before God who "is not dead," but "marching on"? Mrs. McGinnis, the president, tells me THE UNION SIGNAL is read and enjoyed at every meeting.

Russellville has closed her saloons and is fighting "blind tigers" now. The seventh district W. C. T. U. was held at Midway, May 3 and 4. The attendance of delegates was not large but they had a good time. Mrs. Sarah Pope, the president, was unable to be present, and Mrs. F. E. Beauchamp presided in her place. The meetings were held in the Baptist church. The Midway people turned out well, and the meetings were interesting and instructive. Mrs. Scoville, of Lexington, conducted a meeting in her department, heredity and hygiene, and brought out much timid talent, by distributing questions through the audience requesting answers. Mrs. Beauchamp spoke on the evening of the 3d, Miss Laura Clay on the 4th in the hall, the church not being large enough to hold the audiences.
